HOME AGAIN. — Many of our citizens will be H pleased to know that Dr. B. C. Pasar, the skill-ful and well-known Dermatologies, is again in this city, and can now be consulted at his old New York Office, 48 Bond St., for diseased scalps, loss of hair, massismal reduces of the nose, pimples, black worms, much particles, freckies, mokes, and wens. No charge for consultation. Bend for an interrogatory circular.

SEWING MACHINE, combining durability, or natures, and benuty. An elegant Honday Gift to a Lady. Simple and easy to operate. A Block of instruction sent with each Machine. Orders promptly filled. No extra charge for delivery. Address STAR SEWING MACHINE CO., 111 Broadway, New York. Liberal discount to Agenta.

We are now prepared to fill orders for our new less-period double-reed Grgan, "No. 52."

The case is solid walnut, paneled, modded, and carred brackets; is finished with two carpeted pedal-boards, and Kuce Swell, and is more beautiful in de-sign and dishs than any now made in the world for the price, and we guarantee that the qualities and pow-er of time will be superior to any we have seen of oth-er maters. The instrument has two full Five-Octave sets of reeds, and contains six elegs, viz.: PRINCIPAL BASE.

r makers
of a freedy, and comments of recedy, and comments principal base, Diapason base,
TREMOLO or VOX HUMANA, PRINCIPAL TREBLE, DIAPASON TREBLE, DIVIDED SWELL.
Inhed in Ohr, U

Our Patent Graduated Swell is furnished in this, the same as in our higher priced instruments. The price is fixed at the very moderate sum of $126, and there can be no deviation from those figures.

Orders will be recorded in regular automation, and filled each in its turn.

GEO. A. PRINCE & CO.

S. T. CORDON, Agent, New York. JAMES BELLAR, Agent, Philadelphia. Also the principal Music Dealers in each City and Town in the United States and British Provinces.

PATENT STEM-WINDING WATCHES.

COIN-SILVER HENTING CARRE, $51; Extra Pine, $38.

SOLID GOLD Bunting-Case Pull-Jeweled Lever Watches, $45, $48;

Ladler Size, $36; Extra, $40; Enumeled, $46. CODY-SILVER Hunriso Cases, $14; Extra Quality, $16. AMERICAN MOVEMENT

Every variety. Lavney, Lowner PRIORS. And Watches of every description, in the Gold and Silver Cases, at Importers' Rates.

Goods seat by Express, to be paid for only after they have been received, examined, and accepted. S. H. MOORE & CO., Importers, Nos. 52 & 54 John St., N. Y. Pull Descriptive Price-Lists sont free.

NEWMAN & CAPRON'S Establishment for the sale of HOUSE FURNISHING

Goods and Plated Ware, in great variety, is still lo-cated at 1172 Broadway, cor. 28th Street.

Also, Rubblers' Hardware, Locks, Electro-Brouped and Pinned Work of their own manufacture. Oil household articles requiring Replating done on short nester. They are also prepared to contract fee Bell Work and Speaking Tubes in Hotels and Private Darelline.

THE MYSTRIBOUS PUZZEE. A Great Sensation. Sent for 10 cents. WALTER HOLT, 100 Nassau St., N.Y. Box 1888.

$20 A DAY! Business new. Samples and Circu-

A.T. STEWART & CO. have made

A GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICES

POPLIN SUITS to $10; value $14. POPLIN SUITS to $16; value $20. POPLIN SUITS to $18; value $25. POPLIN SUITS to $20; value $30. POPLIN SUITS to $25; value $50.

CHILDREN'S PLAID DELAINE AND POPLIN SUITS, at equally reduced prices.

LADIES PRINTED DELAINE MORNING ROBES, $11 and upward.

POPLIN AND CASHMERE ROBES equally cheep. Also, a Great Reduction In

VELVEY, CLOTH, AND ASTRAKHAN CLOAKS, LADIES UNDERCLOTHING, and CHILDREN'S APPAREL, LADIES' CHEMISES, SHIRTS, AND DRAWEIS, $1 cach and upward.

BROADWAY, FOURTH AVE., and TEXTH ST.

A. T. STEWART & CO. have opened

Invoices of New and Destrable - NECKTIES AND SASHES, -Embescing Choice and Recherche Designs never be fore exhibited.

Also, a full assortment of all qualities of MILLINERY AND DRESS-TRIMMING RIBBONS At Popular Prices.

BROADWAY, FOURTH AVE., and TENTH ST.

The Companion is an eight-page weekly paper -- practical in its ohm atter, wideawake, and entertertaining.

It gives a great variety of reading, interest ing alike to young and old-and has for contributors such writers as

Rev. Edward E. Hale, Harriet Beecher Stowey Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, "Sophis May," Miss E. Stnart Phoips, Mrs. Helen C. Weeks, er with many other well known and popular author ription Price $1.50. Send for a spe PERRY MASON & CO.,

Publishers Youth's Co 151 Westington St., Borrow, Mass.

$10, $12, $15, $20, $25.

Watches and Immation Brazilian and Australian Diamond Jewelry. New Styles Ocolde Gold Chains, $3 to $30 each. Call or send for Price-List.

JOHN POGGAN, No. 79 Names St., N. Y.

A GENT: WANTED for our new work; sells A to all classes, without regard to politics, religion, or occupation. Now Ready:

A new Handy-Book of Fornity Medicine. By Grenau M. Brann, A.M., M.D., of the University of the City of New York. This is new work, writish up to date, Quackery, Humburgery, and Oil-Fogy Dogmas exposed. Beed for 16 page circular.

B. TREAT & Co., Publishers, 554 Broadway, N.Y., TREAT & LHLLEY, 111 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

THE WONDER OF THE AGE!

The GIANT recently meanthed near this city— Height, 10 Feet 5 inches. Is it perrited, or a work of art? Pamphiet containing full information, also pre-ture of this Wonder, mailed free for 35 cents. Agents supplied. Address MASTERS & LEE, Drawer 65, Syracuse, N. Y.

$200 to $300 PER MONTH made by any man and selling Rubber Moulding and Westber Strips for Boors and Wildows. Instructions and Print-Retay Materials (services). Rea Engineers, Boston, Mass.

Just Published.

NOVEMBER NUMBER HITCHCOCK'S NEW

MONTHLY MAGAZI

CONTRNIS CARLOTTA PATTI............Fortrail and Biography McDonald Clark Any Norm Special Contributor Musical
Danastro POSTICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.......Original

Mamon's Parter C. Beerly. C. M. Currier

Read what Moore's Jurial New-Yorker sups:

"Bureacoox's Naw Moorem's Manages.—If the excellent tasts which characterizes this first issue of a new mustcal periodical is but a prelois of what is to come, then its publisher may rest assured of success. Handsomely Mustrated, beautifully printed, and well edited, these statem pages of literature especially interesting to lovers of mastic—such as biographics of Manages and Leonanso Da Veron—and word and instrumental music, are very attractive and valuable."

This Magazine is sold by booksellers and newsdo generally, and mailed to subscribers at $8 per Year.

Specimen copies sent, postpaid, on receipt or 25 comms. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Pallaker, 24 Bookman Street, New York.

FURNITURE.

WARREN WARD & CO.,

Nos. 75 and 17 Spring St., corner Crosby. Езтаначино 1806.

Wholesale and retail manufacturers of the lainst styles of BEDECON, PARLOR, DINING, and LI-BRARY FURNITURE, MATTRESSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c., suitable for city and country resi-dences.

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.

ACE CURTAINS, Styles for 1870.—

Is Main other our own designs, and imported by no other bouse in America. Notingham Laoz Certains, over one handred different patierns, many of them now first introduced in this market.

Certain Materials and Furniture Coverings of Brocatelle, Rep. Terry, Damask, &c. Curtains and Lambergains inside to order. Manufacturers of Tassels, Cords, Gimes, Fringes, and Trimmings. Window Shades of all kinds on hand or made to order. Whelesale or retail. G. L. & J. R. KELTY & CO., No. 447 Broadway, between Boward and Grand Sta.

N. B.—FURNITURE STORE at No. 461 Broadway. N. B .- FURNITURE STORE at No. 661 Broadway.

IMPROVEL ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Bronce is a metal differing entirely from any over offered to the public. Its quadities and resemblants to Gold are such that even judges have been deceived, it has seriously occupted the attention of advertific men, and has not only called furth the enlogiouss of the press in convequence of its precise properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The proveneus are well-fin-at the Paris Expecition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are natural them as excellent time-keepers.

Prior years 15 vo 25.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be seet, postpaid, ot demand.

Goods send by Expense, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. BUGUENIN VULLAMIN,

No. 64 Nessen Street, New York.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1870.

HARRE'S HARRING, HARRE'S WEEKLY, and HARRE'S HARAS, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or say two for $7.00.

two for $1 00.

As Bairs Copy of either the Manazire, Weekly, or Balan will be emplied gratts for every that of First Scanciumes at $4 00 seed, to one resultance; or, also Copies for $20 00, without actor copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Manazires $4 conts a year, for the Warkey or Balan.

30 conts a year, payable yearly, semi-paorly, or questerly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with $6 conts additional for the Manazire, or $9 cents for the Warkey or Balan, to prepay the United States postage.

postage.

In remotting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of Hannes & Suormans is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order of Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

18" New Subscribers to either of Harper's Periodicals furnished from the present time to the close of 1800 for Four Dollars.

Tenns pon ADVERTISIOS DE HARPER'S PERIODECALS. Harper's Masurian.—Whole Page, 2000; Half Page, 2000; Gaif Page, 2000; Gai

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Mrs. Fisher's New Story.

THE

UNLOVED WIFE,

Mrs. Helen Corwin Fisher,

WILL BE COMMENCED

IN THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY,

NUMBER TWO!

READY ON Tuesday, November 9.

For Sale by Every News Agent.

Specimen Numbers Sent Free.

STREET & SMITH. 55 Fulton St., N. Y.

Shivering Season.

It is impossible to suppose that any homan being can consider an attack of Ferer and Agus a light visi-tation. And yet thousands set as if such a calamity was of no consequence; while thousands who are se-tually suffering from the distressing complaint neglect to adopt the certain means of circ. It ought to be home, in every leadily subject to this secures or known in every locality subject to this scourge, or which is infested with remittent fever, or any other epidemic produced by malaria, that taken in advance or at the commencement of the unhealthy season, will fortify the system against the at-mospheric poison which generales these distempers. This admirable invigorant—harmless, agreeable, and This admirable invigorant—harmices, agreeable, and possessing rarer medicinal virtues than any other topit at present known, will break up the paroxysms of intermittent or remittent fever in from forty-eight hours to ten days. Such is the universal testimony from districts where periodical fevers have been comhatted with this powerful vegetable Chologogue. In a thievieh neighborhood wise men her their doors and windows, yet strange to eay, if the same neighborhood happens to be perveded by avial poison, they seldom take the truchle to put their bodies in a state of defense against the subtle enemy. Shivering victims endeavoring in vain to warm your blue hands over the dre, or consuming with the fever that follows the thill. fire, or consuming with the fever that follows the chill, is an absolute, eprody, and infallible specific for your distressing malady.

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS,

HOSTETTER'S BITTERS

CATARRH.

RELIEF AT ONCE !-- A PERFECT CURE! MORION'S NEW BEHEDY FOR CATARRH AND MODE OF TREATMENT

AND MODE OF TREATMENT
Is an improvement, and a perfection never before attained. It consists of the abstracted inhalation of harmless figuids—they are patioless, cleaning, declarating, southing, and powerful consists. Belief and comfort follow from the first day's use, and a permanent care in due course of time. It penetrates through the absorbents to the very sent of the disease—breaks it up at its fountain bend—removes all the wreathed symptoms, such as pain in the temples, noises in the lead, shelraction of the air persents, offerable discharges from the nestrile, and dropping of mores late that the late of nestrile, and tropping of mores late the throat, "cold in the lead," nestrained discharges from the nestrile, and tropping of mores according to the sent of the sent of the sent sent to the lead. The nestring the sent of the throat, "cold in the lead," neverting, directores, loss of memory, dimense of vision, and restores the sense of tasts and smell. It literally extinguishes this louth-some malady in all its forms forever, and cares the most inspection of derivative NoRTON, office il Ann St., N. Y.

VINEGAR, BOW MADE PROM CIDER, 10 hours, without soling drugs. For circulars, address P. I. SAGE, Vineger Maker, Cromwell, Conn.

$1140 -How I made it in Six Morths, Secret and sample maked free, at. J. Pullan, J. J.

NASBY'S PAPER. $10.

The Toledo Blade.

A large quarto sheet, containing fifty-six columns filled with News from all parts of the World; Choice original and selected Tales, Sketches, Poccry, Wit and Hamner; a Commercial Department, a Religious Department, a Young Folks; Department, and an Agricultural Department, all prepared expressly for the Brana. It is the constant aim of the Proprietors to make the Brana a truly National Newspaper—not a paper for the East, in West, the North, or the South, but for The Whole Country.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY, P.M.

No humorous literature of the age has been more universally read and enjoyed than the letters of "PARSON NASSIN." Alming always at the correction of some evil, combining a profound philosophy and unanswerable arguments with the keenest wit and richest humor, the "Confedrit X Hoans" Preacher has become famous wherever the English language is read. These lotters are written expressify for the Brane, and will be continued regularly in its columns.

A NEW STORY.—Mr. LOCKE (Personers V. Nason), is now engaged on a new story, entitled "PAUL DENMAN; on, LOST AND SAVED," a Story of the Great Rebellion. This thrilling story will be published in the columns of the Bilanc during the coming year, and of livelf will be prenounced by every reader worth many times the subscription price of the paper.

TERMS, Single Copies, $2 per year: Clubs of five, $1 75 each: Clubs of ten and over, $1 50 each, and an extra copy to every person getting up a Club.

PAY! PAY! PAY! We pay liberally, In.

AGENTS WANTED,...We want on Agent at every Post-Office in the United States. Send for our Special Circular to Agents.

SPECIMEN COPIES sent free to any address. Send for a copy, and at the same time give us the address of a donet or so of your friends, at as many different Post-Offices, to whom we will send copies free and postope poid. Address

MILLER, LOCKE, & CO.,

Toledo, Ohio.

FRENCH CLOCKS,

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co., No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The shore goods comprise one of the largest va-rieties to be found in the city, and are offered at low Prices.

IF Sign of Gold Telegraph.

TO THE WORKING CLASS.—We see now prepared to furnish all classes with constant conjugaces of thome, the whole of the flare of for the space tensorial. Healton now, the whole of the flare of for the space tensorial. Healton now, light and received the flare of the space tensorial to the light of the product of the space of the sp

FURNETURE.—New designs and new styles: lew prices for first-class warranted goods. Original drawings furnished, with estimates for finishing dwellings with hard wood and familiars adapted to the style of house and rooms. Only seasoned and steam-dried lember used; note other will stand furnace heat. O. L. & J. B. EELTY & CO. & B. F. Cartain and Furniture - Covering Store at No. 441 Broadway, near Amily St.

KNOWS NO PARTY. BUT GIVES THE NEWS OF ALL. READ IT.

NEW YORK OBSERVER.

83 50 PER ANNUM.

SAMPLE COPIES FREE. ONEY E. MORSE, JR., 37 PARK HOW, NEW YORK.

BOOSKY'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, A Complete Catalogue now ready. Sent free, Boosey's "Mailed Ninger," the new Half-Dime Series of the Best Songs. Sold every where, or specimen number melled for Five Cents...644 Broadway, N. Y.

MAPLE LEAVES, enlarged and improved.

The best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magazine published. It will be sent from now to the end of 1870 for to cents. Send in your subscriptions without delay.

O. A. ROORBACH, 362 Nassan St., New York.

A GOOD BARGAIN T "CHEAP READING."—
Yac October, November, and December Numers, PICTORIAL PHRENOLOGICAL MAGAZINE - worth 90 cents - sent gratis to new subscribers who result $0 for the volume for 1810, during October or November. Address S. H. WELLS, 349 Broadway, N. Y.

FREE TO BOOK AGENTS.

We will send a handsome Prospectus of our New Illustrated Finish Hibb to any Book Agent, free of charge. Address NATHONAL PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

POCKET REVOLVERS, WEST'S
A neat, durable weapon; free-linch barrel. Princ $1 for A near, durable weapon; four-inch barrel. Price $15 [near] stat. August 5. 5. August 1. Blace, 20 cm.

$20. $15,

The celebrated IMITATION GOLD HUNTING WATCHES, "Collins Metal" (Improved Oroide) These justly celebrated Watches have been so thereughly tested during the hast four years, and their reputation for time and as imitations of Gold Watches is so well established, as to require no recommendations. Prices:—Horizontal Watches, $10, equal in appearance and for time to Gold Watches worth $100; Pull-Jeweled Levers, $15, equal to $100 Gold ones; Full-Jeweled Levers, strin fine and superior fluids, $200, equal to $100 Gold ones. We have just commenced making a very fine American Watch, full jeweled, Facent Lever, chronometer balance, adjusted to heat, cold, and position, 439 onness down weight, equal in appearance and for time to a Gold Watch costing $250.

We charpe only $25 for these magniferent Watches. All our watches are in hunting cases, gents' and indies' sizes. Chairs, Collins Metal, $2 to $2. Also, all kinds of Jewelry, equal to gold, at one-tenth the price. CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

S. W. GEERY.

B. W. GEERY, DIPORTER,
Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Tees, Wines, Ciyars, and CHOICE PAMILY GROCERIES,
Formerly I. & W. Geery, No. 719 Broadway,
Established in 1842. New York.
The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has been the special business of this house for years.
My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquees in
the country,
Constantly on hand, a full associatent of every thing appertaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Orders will be called for (in the city) every marning, if desired.
Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

ROOT'S SCHOOL

THE CABINET ORGAN.

Containing Progressive Lessons, Studies, and Scales-Sougs, Doets, Trics, and Quartets: Voluntaries, Inter-ludes, and Recreative pieces, for the Parier and Choir. A work of established popularity. Annual sale, By GEORGE F. ROOT.

Price $2 50. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price. OLIVER DITSON & CO., SIT Washington Street, Boston. CHARLES H. DITSON & CO., 711 Broad-way, New York.

WATERS

NEW SCALE PIANOS.

With Iron Presse, Occasions; Brass and Agrafe Bridge.

Melodeous and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured. Warranted for 6 years.

Planos, Melodeous, and Organs, -Prices greatly reduced for Cast. New I-octave Pianos, 2015 and upward. New Cabinet Organs, 545 and upward. Second-hand instruments, 546 and upward. Monthly installments received. Warraness, 481 Brondway, N.Y.

HORACE WATERS.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cass, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 53 Murray Street, New York.

$50,000 worth of Furniture Cover-lugs, purchased at recent auctions, far sale at wholesale or retail, for less than gold cost. G. L. & J. B. HELITY & CO-Broadway, near Grand St.

AGENTS! AGENTS! AGENTS!

Now I have it! Semething New I Attractive! Valuable! Just what Agests want! What every Family wants! Something for Holidays! 100 more agents wanted at once! Quick sales! Large peedts! A young lady makes $82.40 in one half day! Others can do it. I offer the largest premiums ever offered. Send for my private circular. W. J. Holland, Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, ill.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES To agents to sell the relebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Solich crike on both rides. First machine on trial. For further particulars, address.

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO. Cleveland, Obio: Boston, Muss.; or St. Louis, Mo.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR PRIEST and NUN.

Apply at once to CEPITENDEN & McKINNEY, 1998 Chestrat St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WANTED AGENTS To rell the American Knitting Machine. Price jet. The simplest, cheapest, and heat Knitting Machine ever invenied. Will knit 20,000 ethches per minute. Libertal inducements he Agents. Address AMERICAN ENITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Leuis, Mo.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored bein or beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb sent by mail for $1. For sale by Merchants & Bruggists generally. Address Black Comb Co., Springful, Moss.

A WATCH FILEE—pixer gratists every live man who Awili act as agent in a new, light, honomble business, pays $Bu alay. No gift enterprise, to hombing, no morely in advance. R.Monroe Kennedy & Co., Pittsburg, Fa.

BELLS! BELLS!! BELLS!!! POR CHURCH, ACADEMY, PACTO-RY, FARM, &c. Every farmer wheath a Bod at form $5 to $17. Large Hells within 1.7 sch of the progress Clunch de School Heatfel. W. L. & J. H. Mandall, J. P. J. Morre, of S.

The New Books of the Season

PERLIMIED PE

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

EF Sent by Mail, pustage proposit, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVEL'S, Complete. Harper's literatured Library Edition, Complete in 5 vols., 18ms, Morocco Cloth, 18 cents per volume. The set complete, in a neat case, $3 is.

ADAM BEDE.

THE NILL ON THE PLOSS.

PELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL.
SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE and SILAS MAR-

THE POLAR WORLD: a Popular Description of Man-and Nature in the Arctic and Aniarctic Regions of the Ginbs. By Dr. G. HARTERS, Author of "The Sea and its Living Wonders," "The Harmonies of Nature," and "The Tropical World." With Addi-tional Chapters and 160 Hinstrations. See, Cloth, 83 15.

WHECKED IN PORT. A Novel. By Erocum TATE, Author of "Klasing the Red," "Land at Last," "Black Sheep," &c. 8vo, Paper, 30 cents.

THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, King of Naples and of Raly. By Joses S. C. Assort, Author of "The History of Napolson Bonaparte," "The French Revolution," &c. 18mo, Cloth, $1.50, Uniform with

ABBOTTS ILLUSTRATED HISTORIES. 16mo, Cloth, $1 90 per volume.

DERIO, CLOTA, $1.90 per volume.

CHRIS THE GREAT, DABIOS THE GREAT, KREITES, ALBRANDER THE GREAT, KRONTLES, HANNIGHA, PYREITON, JOHNS CASSAC, CLEOTATHA, KREO, ALFRED THE GREAT, WILLIAM THE CONCURROR, RICHARD I, RICHARD III., MANY QUEEN OF SCOTE, QUEEN KLEITERTS, CHARLES I, CHARLES II., JOSEPHINET IV., PATES THE GREAT, GROOME ROLAN, HINEY IV., PATES THE GREAT, GROOME ROLAN, KING PRIOR, HERNARDS COSTER, MARMARET OF ARGO, JOSEPH BONAPARES.

5.

BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK; or A Cremty Pam-By. A Novel. By the Author of "One of the Fam-By," "Carlyon's Year," "Found Best," &c. svo, Paper, & cents.

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Historicus, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Somery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Henses J. Lossies, Anthor of "The Pictorial Pield-Book of the Revolution." With 882 Historialons, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Barritt, chieff from Original Sketcless by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1984 pages, large Svo. Price, in Cloth, $7.90; Sheep, $5.56; Full Boan, $9.00; Half Calf or Half Moroccu extra, $10.00.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE. A Novel. By Mrs. Out-ruser. Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," "Perpetual Curace," "Life of Edward Irving," "Bouwalows," "Agues," &c. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

UPHAM'S MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. Mental Pal-ice-ophy: embracing the Three Repartments of the Intellect, Sensibilities, and Will. By Tuccus C. Urraw, B.D., Professor of Montal and Moral Phi-losophy in Bowdon College. In Two Volumes. Vol. 1.: Intellect, Language: Vol. II.: Sensibilities, Will. 1910., Cloth, $1 To per volume.

N. SILK ATTIRE. A Novel. By WILIJAN BLACK, Author of "Love or Marriage !" 870, Paper, 80 cts.

COUNTESS GISELA. A Novel. By R. MARLITY. Translated by A. Nahmer. Svo, Paper, 85 cents.

A GREEK GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS. By WILLIAM HENRY WADDILL, Professor of Ancient Languages to the University of Georgia. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

POUND DEAD. A Novel By the Author of "Carly-on's Year," "One of the Family," &c. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

FALSE COLORS. A Novel. By Anne Thomas. 870, Paper, 50 cents. MOORE'S LETTERS AND JOURNALS OF LORD BYRON. The Letters and Journals of Lord Byron. With Notices of his Life. By Thomas Moore. I vols., Svo. Cloth, 84 09.

GUICCIOLES LORD BYRON. My Recollections of Lord Byron, and those of Eye-Winnesses of his Life. By the Converses Guecota. Translated by Reasan E. H. Jassessonam. Portrell. 18mo, Cloth, $1 Ib.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. New Edition. Svo, Paper, $1 MS. 11. META'S PAPTIL. A Novel. By the Author of "St. Olave's," &c. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS: New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Elustrations.

VANITY FAIR. 33 Illustrations. 8ro, Paper, 56 cts. PENDENNIS. 179 Blustrations. 8vo, Paper, IS cts. THE VIRGINIANS. 109 Blustrations. 8vo, Pa-THE NEWCOMES, 165 Binstrations, 8vo, Paper, Therata.

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Author and 64 libratrations. See, Paper, 50 cents.

HENRY ESMOND AND LAVEL THE WIDGWEST, 19 lituatrations. See, Paper, 50 cents.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By f. Rev. E. O. Havew, R.B., L.L.B., President of the Northwestern University. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS: HARD CASH, Blustrated, Svo, Paper, 25 cents. GRIPPITH GAUNT; or, Jenlousy, Blustraced. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND, Sto, Pa-

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. Svo, Parper, 35 cents.

FOOL, PLAY. Seo, Paper, 25 cents.

WHITE LIES. Seo, Paper, 35 cents.

PEG WOFFINGTON, CHRISTIE JOHNSTONE, and Other Stories. Seo, Paper, 80 cents.

$25 A BAV. - 25 new settles for Accepte. H. B. SHAW, Alfred. Mc. ENVEYOR Sand etsing for Circular of Pastra

"THE EMPIRE IS PEACE!"

"Panes, Tuesday, Oct. 26, 6 y.m. "The city has remained perfectly tranquil up to this bour. The threatened denoestration has not been made, and no disturbance whatever has occurred. The Emperor went out this afternoon in an open carriage, and drove through some of the principal streets."

The New Religious Weekly!

A Weekly Unsectarian, Independent Journal, de-voted to Religion, Marala, Referes, Pocelgo and Do-mestic News of the Church and the World, Litera-ture, Science, Art, Agriculture, Trade, Finance, &c., &c. And containing Household Stories, Walks with the Children, &c., &c. Embracing contributions from

WELL-KNOWN AND EMINENT WRITERS. EDITORIALS AND LECTURE-ROOM TALKS OF

HENRY WARD BEECHER. A COMPLETE FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

This Journal will have for its highest aim the pre-ESSENTIAL CHRISTIAN TRUTH, Advocating, in the spirit of love and ilberty, the PELLOWSHIP AND CO-OPERATION OF CHRIST'S PROPLE OF EVERY NAME.

ITS FORM:

SIXTHEN PAGES-Cut and Stückel, so convenient, both for use and preservation, as to be a great and special merit in its favor, apart from its superior literary attractions.

Its circulation

during the first mouth of Mr. Beecher's identification with its interests, and it is now making even were rapid strides forward. It is

THE COMING PAPER

CHRISTIAN PAMILIES of ALL DENOMINATIONS:

ITS PRICE:

ONLY $2 50 PER YEAR, Pryable in Advance; and to all who subscribe near for 1936, it will be sent for the remainder of the year FREE! Sample copies sent on receipt of a two-cent stamp for postage, by

J. B. FORD & CO., Publishers, 35 PARK ROW, N. Y.

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This one Bell, located in the sleeping-room, rings upon the opening of each window and An experience of nine years with-centhal it is perfect, reliable, and satout a failure proves that it is persect, retisore, and sat-isfactory. Thomsands who are using it testify to its merits, as will be seen by a pamphlet obtainable at the office. The public are continued against infringement, either in using or weading. The law will be applied to all such cases. E. HOLMES, ? Marray St., N. Y.

STEINWAY & SONS' GRAND, SQUARE, AND UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Recipients of the Pirst Grand Gold Medal of Honor at the Expesition Universelle, Paris, 1887; the Grand Testimonial Medal of the Paris Societe des Beanx Arts, in the same year; the Grand Honocary Gold Medal of Merit, with the Crown and Ribbon, from the King of Sweden and Norway, and the Academical Honors and Membership Royal Academies of Sciences and Arts at 1 Stockholm. And also of the First Princ Medal at the innational Exhibition in London, 1868, together with thirty-five first-class Fremlums in the United States.

Warerooms, Steinway Hall, Nos. 109 and 111 East 14th Street, New York.

C. G. Gunther's Sons,

502-504 BROADWAY,

Offer a very Elegant Assertment of Novelties in

SEAL AND ASTRAKHAN SACQUES,

TURBANS,

Boas, Ties, &c.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

C. A. STEVENS & CO., 40 East 16th Street, Union Square, New York,

are offering
A choire selection of Dismonds, Pearls, Sapphires, and other Gens, mounted in the most artistic manner.
Also, Fine Jewelry of every variety. Watches from the best American and European manufacturers. Silver and Plated Ware, a choice selection con-stantly on hand.

stantly on rane.

Particular attention given to the Resetting of Diamonds, and the metufacture of Silver Ware for Testimonials and Weddings, from original designs.

AGENTS for the SALE OF WATCHES manuscinred by the UNITED STATES WATCH CO. of MARION, New Jersey. Send for Circular.

A First-Class Sewing Machine, worth $40, GIVEN TO ANY PERSON sending us forty subscribers for BRAINARD'S MC-SICAL WORLD, at $1.00 each. A monthly magnitude. Each number contains twenty pages of benefitful new mustic and interesting reading. Elegant premiums for clubs. Specimen copies, with a large amount of choice muste, sens on receips of ten cents.

S. BRAINARD & SONS, Cleveland, O.

OD LIVER DRAGEES

SUGAR-COATED PILLS OF COD-LIVER EXTRACT.

CURES COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, &c.

NOT OBJECTIONABLE to the MOST DELICATE STOMACH.
PRICES.—Box of 60 Drugées, equal to one and a half plats of oil, 15 cents; PRICES...Box of 60 Dragées equal to one and a half plate of oil, 15 cents; box of 190 Dragées, $1 25; box of 340 Dragées, $2 00.

Physicians having cases where cod-fiver oil is indicated, will obtain better results by the use of the Dragées than with cod-fiver oil.

For full perticulars, containing medical societies' reports, physicians' certificates, a. dc., send for pamphiet to WARD, SOUTHERLAND, & CO., Wholesale Agents, 180 William Street, New York.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Piance is fully estabfished as being unsurpassed by they for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to sait any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information sent on application to HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Smirs & Nixon, Chicago, Ille; H. N. Hengstrad, Milwankoe, Wia; Louis Trure, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McClere, Nashville, Tenn.; Krischer Bros., St. Louis, Mo.; C. M. Heren, Cincinnell, Okio; J. H. Jackson, Eandrisky, Okio; Brainans & Boss, Cleveland, Chio; H. D. Musson, Zanesville, Okio; J. E. Gould, Philadophia, Pa.; C. Bring, Pittaburgh, Pa.;
E. B. Powent, Scranton, Pa.; Cultur & Boss, Albany and Trop, N. Y.; J. T. Hamssen, Rhinebeck, N. Y.;
H. S. Maccair, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Urury, Beffeld, N. Y.; Energy of Howe, Syracuse, N. Y.; Waire, Saive, & Perry, Boston, Mana.; Conty Bass, Providence, R. L.; C. M. Loons, New Haven, Conn.; Marmusa Grav, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordherman, Toronto, C. W.; E. Pirtan & Bro., St. John, N. B.

THE latest novelty in Round Hats is the Tr-rolenn Felt Hat, for ladies, misses, and chil-dren. This coquettish little hat, of a wholly unique shape, has won measumpled popularity in England, and will be as eagerly adopted by American ladies. A large invoice, in various colors, has just been received by Danker D. YOUMANS, 717 Broadway, who will be happy to show them to the readers of the Bazar and the show them to the readers of the Bazar and the trade in general. In lightness and elegance they are unsurpassed by any thing of the kind in market,—Hurper's Bazar.

I. E. WALRAVEN,

No. 751 Broadway, N. Y., No. 719 Chestnut St., Phila., Importer of UPHOLSTERY GOODS, LACE CURTAINS, and LINENS.

ANTED—AGENTS—$75 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to introduce the GENUINK IMPROVED COMMON - SENSE PAMILY SEWING MACHINE This Machine will etheh, ben, fell, tack, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and embedder in a most superior manner. Price only $13. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1900 for any matchine thick will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more clastic seam than ours. It makes the cut, and still the cloth can not be pulled apart without bearing it. We pay Agonts from $10 to $200 for month and expenses, or a commission from which twice that amount can be made. Address SECOMS & CO., Preventace, Pa., Beston, Mass., or St. Lous, Mo. CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthless cast from machines, under the same name or otherwise. Courle the only gennine and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

"PERFECTION" Coffee-Pct.

[Patented June 1, 1869.]

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the admisses of the French patents, with wonderful

SIMPLICITY, DUBABILITY,
and CHEAPNESS.
Loves of GOOD COFFEE are manimous in its

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. _#1 SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO., SOLE MANUFACTURESS,

Wallingford, Conn. Sample and Sales Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.

Waterers a senters and nearest on Tonacco. It sentents repetable and harming. If furtiles and continue the blood, invigorate the system poissons grant marishing and strengtheous more are according being and strengtheous more are according being and strengtheous more area. a blood, having-read the agrams poissoned great mourish gard investigation of gaver, if no cancellant lends and a riser, emailine the standard to dignst the heartfest from these steep refreshing and establishes rebest and detectes in substantiation of the first point of the standard of the standard of the standard to the interest and detectes in the standard transport teather on the interest point of the standard transport teather on the interest point of the standard transport of [Trademark x Copyrighted.] FISHERMEN!

TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, ser Sand for Price-List.1 Baltimore, Md.

A LL WANTING FARMS.—Good sell, wild A climate, and healthy. 3s utiles south of Philadelphia. Price $75 per Acre. The pixes is growing some exprour then most any other pixes in the U.S. Thousands are settling. Address CHARLES K. LANDES, Vineland, New Jersey.

DWARD SEARS'
ENGRAVING ESTABLISHMENT,
48 BEERMAN STREET, New York.

SENT POSTPAID ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Merino Hosiery, Kia ana Castor Gloves.

EXTREMELY LOW PRICES

UNION ADAMS & CO.

For Ladies.

For Misses.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Patent Union Dresses, Fleecy Cotton Hotiery, Fancy Cashmere Hosiery, Roman and Fancy Sashes.

No. 637 Broadway.

PAIRNIS - INVENTORS who wish to take out Letters Paient are advised to conneal with MUNN A CO., Editors of the Scientific American, who have presented claims before the Patent Office for Twenty-three Years. Their American and European Patent Agency is the most extensive in the world. Charges less than any other reliable agency.

A Panyhiet, containing full instructions to Inventors, is sent grade. Address MUNN & CO., 37 Park How, New York.

A GENTS WANTED,—AGENTS WANTED,
A 575 to 5700 per month, male and female, to sell the celebrated and original Courson-Sares Fassily Savses Maceiras, improved and perfected; it will ken, fell, silled, took, bried, braid and emberieder in a most superior manner. Frice only $15. For simplicity and durability, it has no rival. Do not buy from any parties selling machines under the same name as ours, unless having a Certificate of agency signed by m, as they are worthless Cast-from Machines.

For Circulars and Terms, apply to or address,
C. BOWERS & CO., 436 Spruce St., Palladelphis, Pa.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New YORK, have just published:

HARTWIG'S

Polar World.

THE POLAR WORLD: a Popular Description of Man and Nature in the Arctic and Antarctic Regions of the Globe. By Dr. G. Hartwin, Author of "The Sea and its Living Wonders," "The Hartmonias of Nature," and "The Tropical World." With Addi-tional Chapters and 160 Illustrations. Svo, Cloth, so 78.

to Harren & Boornens will send the above work by read, postupe prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $0.15.

CATALOGUES, by Mail, 10 cents each, MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 111 pages OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 12 pages, MAGIC LANTERES and STREEDPTICANS, 100 pp. PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 34 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 994 Chestaut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A GENTS.—OROIDE GOLD.—AGENTS.
A $20 a day made easy. Oncome Goan Par. Forwrats Pres. Is industricatible. Writes 4 pages with one dip.
Selfs et sight—looks like 16-anst Gold. Sample beg.
12 pens, for 35 cents, postpaid: also other povelties.
City Novery Co., 464 Library St., Palladelphia, Pa.

CTERBOPTICONS, MAGIC LANTERNS, and DIS-SOLVING-VIEW APPARATUS, with the im-proved Calcium Light, for Public Exhibitions, San-day-Schools, &c. Rasily and chempy managed, al-ways attractive, and pays well. Send for Catalogue. T. H. McALLISTER, Opticiae, 49 Nassan St., N. Y.

§ 10 PER BAY. — Funded—decine, enterprising $10 persons of either sex to sell an article required by every person. Userov, Avranceve, Quice Sale. Buriness According and prejudate. Address S. J. BESTOR, Haunging Agent, Hartford, Coan.

A GENTS WANTED for Willson's School and Pamily Charts.
To carvass every state in the Union. Men of ability, and well recommended, can realize hardsome profits. For particulars and terms, address HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square, N. Y. .

Vol. XIII.—No. 673.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1860, by Burper & Bruthers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Somhern District of New York.

A POLITICAL DISCUSSION.

In the subjoined illustration our artist represents a characteristic group of freedmen in the streets of Richmond, engaged in the discussion of the political situation. It is by no means an unfamiliar scene. The colored men, knowing how intimately connected their race has been with the political conflicts of the last twenty years, with the origin of the rebellion, and with the problem of "reconstruction," naturally take a great interest in politics; and in some of the Southern States they hold the balance of power.

It will be seen, by a reference to our picture, that there is a difference of opinion. The woodsawyer, on the left, is doubtless a Conservative; his opponent, the white-washer, is a Republican; while the negro seated on the right is a silent anditor, ready to acquiesce in whichever opinion gains the mastery. The correstness of the argument is shown in the countenances and in the attitude of the disputants and of their listener. The picture, considered simply as a work of art, has merits of a very high order. The action is natural, and each member of the group is given a distinct individuality. The trenfment of the subject is not less happy than its selection.

THANKSGIVING.

Again the night-season of the natural year has come round to us—the time when, her fruits having been gathered up, the earth folds up and puts aside her green garments, and lays down to her winter's rost. At this time, when ripeness passes so quickly into decay, man snatches eagerly to secure for himself so much as he can of Nature's gifts. This work having been accomplished, he has leisure for reflection. He can now look upon the process, by which the dead earth gives us back manifold what we have lent her, as the yearly wonder of God. It is fitting that this should be the season of Thanksgiving. But not only the agriculturist finds this season an occasion of thanksgiving; the merchant and the manufacturer, also, have predied by the abundant harvests of the autumn. These are positive reasons for thanksgiving; but, besides these, we have to remember with gratitude that no great pestilence, no wasting famine, no destructive natural convulsion, no financial panic have visited us.

The illustrations which we publish this week on pages 744 and 745, apropos to this national festival, need no interpretation on our part. That on page 744 is a typical representation of the season and of the occasions for thanksgiving. The engraving on page 745, "Uncle Fam's Thanksgiving," represents the larger and more cosmopolitan features of the occasion.

SEMI-DETACHED WIVES.

A MARRIED man, after a time, appears to forget how much a woman, and especially a woman who is a lady, desires small attentions to the very last. He seems to believe, at any rate, that his wife does not care for them at his hands. Women do not forget the season of courtship; and it would not be too much to say that an ideal marriage should be a constant courtship, or else the romantic theory of marriage falls to the ground altogether. But supposing a man marries a fool, and doesn't discover the fact for some time. Then it is well worth his while to try and improve the fool into a tolerable companion; for even a foolish wife can make herself excessively unpleasant to the wisest and most philosophic of husbands; and in successful cases the women will be grateful for the teaching. The man who wants to win his wife to at least sense (or nonsense) enough to love him has often all his work before him, even after he has placed the marital ring on her finger. She may then only he a semi-detached wife. We can give no definite recipe for the curative process. Circumstances would demand a constant change of ingredients. The shrew should be tamed, if possible, by soft means; but she should be tamed. The indifferent woman, with her soul occupied only with thoughts of the millinery hung upon her body, should—but we can not advise on these points, and, besides, it is more than probable that the beliance of incompatibility inclines to the side of the husband. Women should not be difficult to win when once wed, although, stronge to say, it has happened to many a woman to live and bear children to a man without a stronger feeling for him than one of duty or of gratifude, perhaps, for social consequence. For the men who like their wives semi-detached there is nothing to be said; there is no accounting for tastes, and it is possible at least to conceive a gentleman of cool disposition resenting the familiarities of a wife as a claim for privileges not contemplated by him when entering upon the married state. They ran a risk if their wives are young, as there is some to be a revolt sooner or later.

A POLITICAL DISCUSSION.

THE SPIRIT OF THE SOIL

Anany through crisping fields she comes, The Spirit of the Soit, To bring to labur's peaceful homes The fruits of trust and toll.

A mystery of earth and air, Cool morns and socoday heat, With sunlight in her golden hair, And dust upon her feet.

She stands beside the threshold stone: His brow the father lifts; He knows her by his faith alone, The children, by her gifts.

"I bring the roots," she says, "whose length Of downward thrust was stayed By no cold clay's unbroken strength Below the reach of spads.

"They hold my life in every pore, My health in ring and grain, A ferror from earth's central core, A coolness from the rain.

"I bring the vineyard's purple gift From lightesed trellis bars, The orchard's, whose bowed branches lift Their free hands to the stars.

"My blood has passed to clustered lobe In drops of living wine; The perfuse of each dusky globe The orchard bears is mine.

"I called the healing sun to lean Above the mildew's death; The wind that drew their flavors keen Was wakened by my breath.

"I bring the yellow core unspeared, The bean with purple eye, The barley with its mighty beard, The amber wheat and ryc.

Were routed from the land:

I heard the plowman's nuffed. The sower's whispering hand.

"My strength, born of primeral rock, Is given to ear and leaf: I am the fullness of the shock, The ripeness of the sheaf.

"I bring the not whose guarded oil is sweet in crooked cell; There comes a night-time of the soil se day-time it shall tell. "I bring the rest of field and lea!

That watch and wait no more;
The caim of heaven's ethereal sea.

"I bring the glory of the woods, The softness of the sun, The tender smethyst that foods A world whose work is done—

"A sense that now the earth and air Withdraw the asking palm— The sweet faidilment of a prayer, The answer of a pealm."

She dropped her treasures on the floor, Her peace within his breast, And from the thankful toiler's door Passed to her winter rest.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1869.

THE MEANING OF DEMOCRATIC SUCCESS.

THE result of the late election in New York anggests the question, what does Demoerntic success in this State mean?

It means, in the first place, an arbitrary discrimination against the equal political rights of the cirizens of the Staze. The question was sub-mitted whether the property qualification should be removed from a class of voters which, as a class, is in no way inferior in industry, intelligence, and good conduct to any other, and by Democratic votes the property qualification was continued. No one, however, was surprised that those votes were cast against equal rights; for as the Democratic policy ten years ago was the most stolid submission to the dictation of the slavery interest, so now it is a stupid effort to retain as much as possible of the taint which test system has left upon our national character and professions. Every great measure looking to the extension of freedom and fair play in this ountry has been stabbornly resisted by the Democratic party. Every encroachment made upon the equal rights of innocent citizens has been the work of the Democratic party. In our history it will be known as the party of slavery: the party to which the ignorant and the prejudiced were sympathetically drawn, and which, under the name of Democracy, endeavored to obstruct liberty.

The Democratic success in this State means, in the second place, the maintenance of the power of a ring, of which the Governor, by his proclomation upon the frauds and his signing the Erie Directors bill, is shown to be the instrument, and which places upon the bench of the Superior Court Mr. Jons H. M'Coss. judicial bench is the last resort under the laws in a free government. What the character of American courts, what the fame of American judges would be, if the party which selects Mr. McCexx for one of the chief honors and responsibilities of the judiciary could place Mr. Jons H. M'Crass upon all the benches of all contemplating the official career of that magistrate. If the judiciary of the city of New York is an honor to the State and a glory to the country-if it is not a by-word and a derision-if it is not understood that the bench is a market, that rich men may have what judgments they will, and the worst miscreants escape by the connivance of the judges-if its ermine spotted even with suspicion, and its decisions every where profoundly respected, it is because of the men whom the Tammany Ring place upon the bench. Every vote cast for the Democratic party was cast for the power which has made the present renown of the New York city

The Democratic success in this State means, in the third place, if it should be complete, and the Legislature in both branches should be of that party, the overthrow of the best parts of the present municipal government. The Metropolitan Police system is bitterly opposed by the Democrats. All the Commissions have been rigorously denounced by them, and they have sought power to restore the city, as they claim, to its own control. That is to say, the party following its policy and pledges will place in the hands of the Tammany Hing the control of all the great interests of the city—its po-lice, its health, its Fire Department, its Croton Board, its Central Park. It may be presumed that a power which makes such judges as we see will make a corresponding police.

Whether the order, the health, the personal safety, the security of property will be better cared for by the Tammany authorities, the ex-perience and reflection of sober men will declare. How long an election in the city will be possible which will not be morally invalid by the knowledge of a vast system of frand, so long as those authorities have unchecked control, may be inferred from what the most unscrupulous Democratic paper in the country says of certain Tammany leaders: "He saw," says the editor, speaking of himself, "by what shameless and cunning frauds such corruption-ists of the Ring as William M. Twend and OAKET HALL out down below its level the rightful vote of the electors of HORATIO SET-MOUR." A Democratic success means the ascendency of such persons in the political con-trol of the State. Those who desire it, there-fore, did wisely in co-operating with them at

The Democratic success means, in the fourth place, a change in the Registry law, or the total abolition of a registry, in order that frauds at the polls may be facilitated and the State securely held, with the hope of deciding the next Presidential election in the city of New York. No honest voter can object to a registry, be-cause he is vitally interested in the inviolability of the ballot-box. The more severely scrutinized the list of lawful voters, the more secure is the country. The Democratic party, always hostile to all methods for maintaining the purity of the ballot, will break down every barrier, and those who helped them at the polls may congratulate themselves upon the result,

These are some of the consequences of the continued Democratic success in the State of New York, and, although not new, they may be profitably studied by the country,

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

THERE is one subject which should be very carefully considered by the Board of Education in this city, and that is compulsory edu-cation. Since the report of the Rev. JAMES FRANKE, who was sent out by the British Government to examine our school system, the schools of this city have so high a reputation among those in both countries who are interested in the extension of education that the word of the Board which controls the schools will be very influential. If the compulsory system is necessary any where in the country, it is here in the city of New York; and, therefore, if action is to be taken any where, it will noturally begin here. The subject was considered in the late Constitutional Convention, and was understood to have been quite fully discussed in the Committee upon Education. But it seemed to be the general sentiment that the time had not then arrived for action, and although Mr. OFFICE, who made many very valuable propositions, and who introduced the admirable article upon bribery, which was incorporated in the new Constitution, moved the subject in the Convention, he had little support. The argument for compulsory education is perhaps no-where more carefully considered than in a report of M. Dunuy, the French minister of public instruction, in 1863, which contains an admirable survey of the European school sys-tems. Mr. Rick, the late Superintendent in this State, embodied many of the facts collected by M. Dunur in the report to which we allude elsewhere. As a matter of fact it is found that in countries where school attendance is compulsory, as especially in Prussia, the compulsion is in name only; nor would the repeal of the law now seriously affect the schools, so deeply rooted has the law made the habit of universal attendance. So elsewhere, as in Baden, although attendance is con-ulsory, fines are very infrequent. In Würteming every child must the courts in the land, may be rendily seen by attend school until the | c of fourteen. The first and second time a boy plays truent be is punished himself; the third time his parents pay the penalty. Every army recruit is exam-ined, and the percent d, and the parents are responsible if their son can not write. The consequence is, that in Würtemberg there is not a peasant, or a kitchen-maid, or a bar-maid who can not read, write, and cipher well. In the United States, to-day, there is probably a seventh of the whole population who can do neither.

The argument for compulsory education in this country is that of the police. The tax for public schools is justified by the necessity of general intelligence to the general order of so-ciety. We are taxed lightly for schools that we may not be heavily taxed for prisons; and as the tax is laid for the welfare of the community, and not of the individual, the community may properly take care that the tax be made effective for its purpose. As to the expediency of enforcing an undoubted right of this kind, it would seem to be tolerably clear that, if it be expedient to provide schools at all, it is equally expedient to take care that they are not pro-vided in vain. But it is the universal testimony of those who are best informed upon the et that the advantages of our free public school system are by no means what they ought to be, nor what they can readily be made to be.

At the late Educational Conference in Birmingham, in England, the expression of opinion was unanimous upon two points: first, that a system should be established to secure the education of every child in the kingdom; and, second, that every child shall be compelled to be educated. The word education was used to denote what we know as common school instruction. The Conference, therefore, agreed upon what may be called the common-sense view of the subject; and we trust that the New York Board will seriously enter upon the question whether it is not its duty to take active and sufficient measures to secure the great purpose for which the people pay the school-tax.

SARMIENTO AND LOPEZ.

GENERAL M'MARON, our late Minister to Paragnay, is understood to have given a very rosy view of the Dictator Lorez and of his "Republic;" and as the General was alleged to have stated that the atrocities of the allied army were incomparably greater than those of Lorkz, the Secretary of the Argentine Legation in Washington has protested against the "gratuitous calumny, covered, as it is, by anony-mous publication." But the witness whose testimony concerning Lorez and Paragray is as pointed as his knowledge is ample and his judgment accurate, is Mr. SARMIENTO, now the President of the Argentine Republic. We recently spoke of this gentleman as the most prominent and hopeful figure in South America. His long residence in this country, his vital sympathy with popular government, and his careful and extensive study of its working in the United States, entitle him to speak upon this subject with an authority which, of course, General M'Marion would not claim for him-

In June, 1868, while the war in Paraguay was still dragging along, and when Mr. SAR-MIRINTO was the Argentine Minister to the United States, he wrote of Paraguay and Lo-PEZ; and what he said is confirmed by the most intelligent of the foreign residents upon the Plate River with whom we have conversed. Mr. SARMIENTO SAYS that Paraguay is neither a republic, nor a monarchy, nor a tyranny, in the sense of power asurped from another. The present Lorez received the government of the country from his father by a will; his father had taken possession of it after the death of FRANCIA, who had himself usurped it when the Jusuits were expelled.
"Paraguay," says Mr. Sarmiesto, "is a plantation with a million of Indians instead of negroes, who consider themselves the property of the Loruz family, and fight for them be cause these chiefs fight against the white men whom they hate, and of whose character and civilized practices they know only what this LOPEZ family has allowed to enter the pre-So absolute is this authority that Captain Page mentions that even when the country was at peace the inhabitants of Assumption shut themselves in their houses at eleven o'clock in the day, at the command of Lorez, that the North Americans might not be able to speak with any native. The Englishmen who were in the service of Lorez at Humaita were brought by him to defend the fortress in case of ill luck in the war of conquest which he was about to undertake, he having already seized the province of Matogrosso from Beazil and that of Corrientes from the Argentine Republic. The British Government sent a Commission to free the Englishmen whom he held, and Lorez refused to deliver them. One of them, who has served a long time in the country, has just published in London a history of the war, in which the character of Lorez is drawn in a very different manner from that which is attributed to Gen-

The Argentine Republic is allied with Brazil and Uruguay to defend itself against the con- | of the city, and Democratic candidate for Govquest of Lorez. For having abolished slavery fifty years before we did, and being the seat of the most promising political and industrial activity in South America, that republic naturally recoils from subjection by a tyranny compared with which the most brutal known among the European races would be a blessing. "The triumph of Lorez," says Mr. SARMIESTO, nearly two years ago, "means the extension to Uruguay and the Argentine Republic of the Guariui Indian despotism, under a master who is dictator, pope, supreme judge, and lord of life and property." That these words truly describe Loruz no one who has investigated the subject doubts. Yet there are many lib-eral papers in the United States which really seem to think that there is no choice between the parties in the Paraguayan war, and that an empire is trying to crush a republic. Samuare the good and evil genius of the La Plata region; and there can be no question to which of them the hopes and sympathics of the United States naturally belong.

THE GREAT PERIL.

WHEN the honest voters any where are satisfied that the ballots deposited in the box and the subsequent count do not correspond with the honest vote, the system of popular elections and the public peace are in peril. There is no practical difference between a few men at Tammany Hall imposing their will upon the public by fraud and a man at the Tuileries imposing his will by force. Nor is there any intelligent and reflecting Democratic voter in the State of New York who does not know that his party leaders are responsible for the bulk of the notorious electoral frauds, and that every time he votes at their bidding he is supporting a policy which must end in the total corruption of the government or in revolution.

That there are dishonest men in the Repub lican party, that there is cheating upon the Republican side, we do not doubt. But that is no reason for honest men of the other party to deny against all knowledge and testimony that the great frauds are practiced by Democratic the great frauds are practiced by Democratic leaders for the advantage of the Democratic party. Nor can any intelligent man excuse his indifference to the subject by saying that both parties are equally guilty. For the man who does not know that the policy and pleas of the Democratic party commend themselves to the most ignorant and worthless part of the recognition is not aware of one of the most characteristics. population, is not aware of one of the most obvious and significant facts in our polities. He may go into any part of the country upon an election day and he will be sure to find that nine-tenths of the drunken and most degraded part of the population vote the Democratic ticket, and that the more thrifty and intelligent the neighborhood the more positive is the Republican majority.

This is not chance. It has the deepest reaon. Every district and ward in Maryland gives a Democratic majority. The same is probably true of Kentucky. They are the two especially Democratic States. Of course in e war their bearts were with the rebellion. Are they in any chief point of civilized and progressive political communities superior to the great States of the Northwest? parties in this country are not equally worthless. Will any body pretend to designate a spot in which the Republicans have the same unqualified control that the Democrats have in the city of New York, where they are or can be justly accused of frands so enormous as those which are matters of universal notoricity upon the part of the Democratic leaders in this

During the twelve years, from 1856 to 1867 inclusive, the average annual number of naturalizations here was 9207. The yearly average of immigration from and including 1847 to 1860-a period of thirteen years-was 197,435; while for the four years, from 1800 to 1863 inclusive, the yearly average had fallen off nearly one-half. None who arrived later could be naturalised in 1868. But in that year three courts in the city-the Common Pleas, the Supreme, and the Superior - admitted a naturalization of 33,318-nearly four times the average of former years. And if to this be added the missing blanks, which, as every man practically familiar with the details of last year's election knows, were used wherever they could be, the total naturalization for the city of New York for 1868 was 60,386. Of the admitted certificates issued more than eightytwo per cent, were issued by two courts, the Superior and the Supreme. In the Supreme Court Judge George G. Bannann was the only magistrate who naturalized. In the Superior Court a gentleman who examined 18,000 of the certificates testified that about eight-ninths were signed by Joses H. M'Cuss.

These were the facts. They were known at the time; but their extent was subsequently proved. The fraudulent papers were every where. They were sent by mail to those who-had not applied, although the law requires the personal appearance of the applicant. And it was in the mide: of this universal knowledge that John T. Rossman, the Democratic Marrier ernor, on the day before the election, issued a Proclamation bitterly denouncing the charges of fraud as gross and unfounded, and asserting that they were made to cover the fraudulent schemes of the Republicans. There was not an intelligent man in the city or its neighborhood who did not know that Mr. HOFFMAN'S statement was untrue. The frauds were known, and it was known that they had been perpe-trated by Democratic agents. If proof were wanting after that collected by the Congressional Committee of Investigation, it is sup-plied by the volunteer evidence of the editor of the chief Democratic paper in the city, who has since described by name the present Mayor of the city, Mr. Hall, and one of the State Senators from the city, Mr. Twamp, as "cor-ruptionists," and denounced their "shameless and cunning frauds."

It is already beginning to be understood that appeal to the opinion of the people. It is sim-ply registering the edicts of a few Democratic leaders, who stuff the ballet have an election in the State of New York is not an sders, who stuff the ballot-boxes. Is it not, then, nearly time for those who support the Democratic party because they do not like cer-tain Republican men and measures, to ask themselves whether a party under whose auspices an honest, expression of the popular will becomes impossible is not necessarily and swiftly subverting the government?

EFFECT OF SELLING GOLD AND BUYING BONDS.

Ir appears that the public debt had been reduced from March 1, 1869, to November 1 about $64,332,070 65. This sum is mainly made up of purchases of bonds and their accrued interest. Notice has been given by the Treasury that $11,000,000 of gold shall be sold, and $10,000,000 of bonds purchased for November, The interesting financial question of the day is, What effect is produced upon the industry of the United States by selling gold and purchasing bonds?

Ever since the breaking down of the attempted gold corner, the power of the Treasury, in the absence of any European demand for balances, has become omnipotent. Owing to those large Treasury purchases of bonds the credit of the United States has been so raised that bonds are still purchased in foreign markets, and, owing to frequent sales of Treasury gold since the corner was broken, gold has steadily fallen. Speculators fear to become Bulls in gold, insemuch as the movement on the longto-be-remembered Friday against their machinations was sudden and effectual, and they fear a repetition of Treasury sales made on the instant, and without previous notice. With $116,994,711 69 of gold in the Treasury—this was the amount on the 1st of Novembercombination could be formed in now crippled Wall Street to meet the vast power of the De-partment. Every sale of bonds in Europe side directly in putting down gold, inasmnch as the German brokers here, who make most of the sales—using the telegraph cable for the purpose -become instantaneous sellers of gold in our market to an equal extent. The great houses which do this business watch the respective markets for our bonds, which are ordinarily kept within 1, and frequently within 1/2 per cent, of each other, and when there is a chance of profit sell or buy bonds according to circumes. To facilitate transactions the foreign branch or agency is kept constantly supplied with bonds, which can instantly be delivered to the foreign purchaser. The payment for them abroad, or by the cable transfer of funds here, permits an immediate sale of such gold in our market. On the 4th of November gold was sold at 1264 on one of these transactions by a German house here, and profit ensued. These combined causes, the sale by the Treasury and by such bankers, tended to depress gold on the 4th of November, although it had been an-nounced in Wall Street that the Bank of Eugland on that day had raised its rate of interest from 2₉ to 3 per cent.—a circumstance that would cedinarily affect our market by raising the gold rate.

The price of the great staples which country exports, as well as that of imported produce held here for sale, is affected gener-ally in the proportion in which gold falls in our market. So far as concerns breadstuffs and cotton purchased here by foreign agents for ex-port, they are paid for in gold. The object of the seller is to obtain as much currency for his gold or for the exchange, which the transaction ermits him to draw, as possible ; and the lower the rate of gold, the smaller the return in currency. Our breadstuffs are now depressed, inch as the fall in gold, say from 185 or 140 to 1264, reduces the quantity of currency received in the same proportion.

If the fall in gold were due to an equivalent improvement in the currency of the United States, no complaint could justly be made, as it would in that case be permanent; but it is apparent, as the currency remains undiminished in its volume of about seven hundred millions of dollars, that the sole foundation for the fall is due to the combined influences referred to;

hat the will have to be to timately be ruled in great part by the amount of paper in circulation, there is no difficulty in deciding that the Treasury Department, which is now effectually controlling the market in that direction, must witness a reaction as soon as its influence is withdrawn, or in spite of that influence whenever the condition of finances abroad calls for balances held in this country. The industrial interests of the United States are suffering severely from the fall in gold. These great interests need permanency in its price, which, measured by our paper circulation, must be considerably above the present market rate. The present condition of affairs in this respect is wholly favorable to the foreign purchaser of our great staples, and of correspond-ing disadvantage to the producing interest of the United States. It is undoubtedly true that many persons in the United States are benefited by low prices of our commodities—such, for instance, as laboring men and those who live on salaries; but the producers of wheat are not receiving remonerative prices, and hence it is held back in the States which most largely engage in this industry.

The price of wheat is not remonerative, because the expenses of its production are paid in depreciated currency, bearing the relation to gold of, say, 140 to 100, and it is now sold on a basis of 127 to 100, in a currency which opporearly has appreciated according to the propor-tionate difference. Wheat at Dubuque, the cutlet of a fine region, is now quoted at from 63 to 36 cents per bushel, according to quality. The product this year will not exceed 15 bush-els per acre. After deducting the seed sown, the cost of plowing, sowing, reaping, living, hauling to market, risk of collection, and, be-yond all, the loss from the rapid exhaustion of wheat-producing qualities in the soil, and the price is not sufficient.

The interests of the producers of the coun are best promoted by a permanent rate for gold. The fact that the paper currency is a fixed quan-tity, and that the amount of gold in the Tress-ury and in circulation varies but little, are favorable to a nearly uniform price; and were it not for the shamelessness of a few gamblers in Wall Street, who hold in equal contempt publie sentiment and public interests, and the efforts of the Treasury Department, neither the excessive rise which deprayed gamblers occasioned, nor the almost equally excessive fall which the Treasury occasioned, would have hap-pened. A mean somewhere between these exsees will ultimately be reached and maintained until the gamblers renew their machinery of mischief and plunder.

It must be evident that the condition of our industries, subjected as they are to the control of the gambiers who can unite the largest num-ber of bank officers and public officials in their schemes, is wholly unsafe; and that true policy requires the most effective measures for placing our affairs on more solid ground.

Although the reduction of the public debt from an amount a fraction over twenty-five hundred and twenty-five millions to an amount a fraction under twenty-four hundred and sixty-two millions is regarded with favor as indicating both the power and integrity of the people, yet it can not escape attention that the duties received from excessive imports—the latter occasioned by the sale of our bonds in Europe—constitute a large part of the means for this payment, a resource which imprudence The opportunity to use this exceptional contribution to the Treasury to withdraw from circulation a part of our war currency— continued on a war basis in peace—was denied to Mr. Bourwell by means of an act of Congrees, passed in the interests of those who de-mand a vitiated and deprayed financial system.

But our object was not so much to show that Mr. BOUTWELL has deemed himself driven to the adoption of a system which postpones a return to specie payments, as to present the effect of reducing the price of gold below the level that it justly bears to our paper issues. The policy subjects the productions we export to the control of the foreigner at low prices, while at the same time the producer in this country is exposed to high prices in their crea-tion. The policy, now that gold is reduced to money in a corresponding proportion. This alone will prevent those violent vicinstitudes which, to business men, produce constant confusion and distraction.

KING PRIM.

THE Republican movement in Spain is supessed, and the leaders are either executed or in exile. General Para declares himself a monarchist. He might also, and probably as truly, have declared himself a monarch, for such he seems really to be. The army is devoted to him, and although SERRANO is regent, the reality of power is with Pers. This result makes him the most conspicuous of all recent revolutionary chiefs. A success so sudden and so vast as the peaceable overthrow of a great government and the supreme exaltation of a soldier has not been lately seen. The Cortes, purged of the Republican element, has resumed its sessions, and the caucuses are vigorously balloting for a king.

The paralysis which fell upon the movement months since arose in great part undoubtedly from the uncertainty of the extent and force of the Republican sentiment. The brav-est, the most powerful, and the most eloquent speaches in the Cortes had been those of Cas-TRALAR. They were essentially Republican, and it was difficult to measure the enthusiasm which they excited. On the other hand, the monarchical party could not agree upon a king, even had they wished to; and there was evidently a chaos of intrigue. Nobody seemed to command the situation. Parm had apparently failed. Had there been one man to speak with a power which could be recognized by all, the later troubles would have been avoided. no man had proved that power. The hot weather and the general doubt and inaction led the Cortes to adjourn. It was inevitable that the Republicans, who are always the hold and aggressive party, would attempt to obtain control of affairs; and in putting them down, and in announcing distinctly his political faith. PRIM, in whom the Cortes now sees the chief of the army, has become the recognized master of affairs, and the deliberations of the Cortes will now undoubtedly have some definite result. It is fair to presume that a king will be elected, and remor now loudly declares who he will be, It is plain enough who he ought to be. Let Parm be king. He is identified with the revolution : he has proved his power; he understands Spain and the Spaniards; he is as good a man for the purpose as has been proposed; and inasmuch as no one can be made king whom he does not approve, he will be the power behind the throne. d might, therefore, as well be upon it. The glamour of royalty is gone. For a dozen years past the ablest monarch in Europe has been the nephew of the Corsican lieutenant of artillery. Pare's blood is as blue as Narotnow Bona-PARTE'S; and now that royalty is every where in danger from the general impotence of its representatives, why should not its original principle be summoned to justify the throne— and the regal crown be conceded to him who can wield the regal power? When the Cortes declares for a monarchy, it means a permanent executive. If it summons the Duke of Montpensier, or an Italian prince, or any wandering Don in Europe to the throne, it must know that it can not summon with him the royal tra-dition, the royal prestige, the royal sentiment, and can no more feel loyal to him than England could have been loyal to Prince ALERRY. It may respect him and trust him and fear him, but it may equally respect and trust a chief who is not of royal descent. What it wants is a king without royalty; and to satisfy that want a royal scion is not essential. Parm apparently being king, why not call him so, if you are anxious to call somebody by that title?

Nothing certainly is gained by the present situation. The only excuse for a regent was that the preference of the nation for a king should be consulted, or possibly that the strength of the republican sentiment should be proved. But the manifestation of republican sentiment having been peremptorily suppressed and the monarchy assured, there should be no delay in selecting the monarch. But all the royal candidates have been long known, and none are satisfactory. None of them has excited the least enthusiasm in Spain, or has had more than an interested party. If Spain must have a monarchy, let her make a king to correspond. Viva King Paum!

NOTES.

Mn. Cunraw, who has been speaking in Russia and Bohemia, in the languages of those countries, is not ex-Governor Currys, the present United States Minister to Russia, but Mr. Januariah Currys, of Michigan, a graduate of Harvard, and late Secretary of Legation in Russia with Mr. Cassus M. Cear. Mr. Currys's knowledge of languages is very remarkable. When the Russian fleet was at New York, during the war, he made the acquaintance of the officers, and talked with them fluently in their own tongue, although he had never been out of this country. We believe it was at the instance of those officers that Mr. Currir went to Rus-sia, where his skill and facility as a linguist, with his more all hilling and seed absented as the state. his general ability and good character, promoted him to his responsible post—a precedent which we should be heartily glad to see constantly fol-

THE death of Mr. GROGGE PEARODY has oc-casioned every where the most friendly remarks upon his wise disposition of riches. He had the good sense to be his own executor, and his good deeds will be always memorable. The universal seclamation with which his gifts were received showed perhaps an immense surprise that a rich man should be willing to part with his money; but it also shows the general feeling that to part with money in such ways is to put it to its no-blest use. Mr. Pranont chose wisely for him-self and happily for his fellow-men, and his name will be always kindly renoembered.

GOVERNOR HOFFMAN goyly informs the people of the State that knowledge suddenly acquired is seldom profitable, but he is willing to tell us one thing, and that is that the success of Mr. Swen-ray, Mr. Tween, Mr. Haas, and their associates secures the utmost purity in our politics. The Legislature of these sentlemen, the Governor says, will contain no Democrats who can be bought, and the same kind guardians are going to take care of the interests of the many and not of the few. This is truly delightful. The whole to take care of the interests of the many and not of the few. This is truly delightful. The whole Democratic line advances, and the Governor gives the inspiring cry, "Tweam and purity! Hall and principle! Sweamer and self sacrifica!" The gay Governor is enables of the excellent Wackfurd Squeers. "Here, boys:" cried that chief executive of Dotheboys Hall, smo king his lips over the bluest of watered milk, "Here's richness!"

WE are not surprised to learn that the Rev. W. H. MILBURN has mot with the most gratify-W. R. MILBURN has mot with the most grantying success in his recent lectures at Steinway Hall, in this city. The subjects of his lectures on the evenings of the 2d and 5th instants were,
"A Blind Man's Experience in Search of his Sight," and "What a Blind Man saw in Peris."
At the first of these lectures Governor Hoppman presided. We understand that Mr. MILBURN is prepared to repeat these lectures through the country during the present season.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Resources were held on the 2d in New York, New Jersey, Massachnects, Maryland, Illinois, Wisconsin, and filmoscota. The Democratic majority in New York city was reduced by about 18,000 from hast year's vote. Greekey, in this city, ran ahead of Sigel by 1899 votes. John R. Bedy was elected Judge of Supreme Court, and John H. R'Cham, John J. Freedman, and James C. Spenow for Judges of Superior Court. Martin Kaibbetsch was elected Mayor of Brocklyn. Netson's majority for Secretary of State to about 17,000. The Senate contains 17 Democrats and 18 Republicans; the Assembly 66 Democrats and 18 Republicans, Governor Claffic was re-elected in Massachnect's. Chamberlain, the Labor Reform candidate, pulled nearly 18,000 votes.

Governor Fairchild's majority (Republican) in Wisconian is about 10,000. The Senate will custain 20 Republicans and 18 Democrata, and the Republican majority in the Assembly will be about 10. Governor Austin's majority (Republican) in Minnessons is about 2000.

In New Jersey the Senate stands 18 Democrate to 9 Republicans, and the House 18 Democrate to 97 Republicans.

Illinois carries the Constitutional Convention for the Republicans.

In Maryland there was a light vote, and the Democrate carried aware thin.

In Maryland there was a light vote, and the Demo-trate carried every thing.

General Belkmap took the bath of office preparatory to extering upon his duties as Secretary of War, No-yeonor 1.

to entering upon his duties as Secretary of War, November 1.

The diminution of the public debt during October was $1,863,800.

The Licking County Indirmary, as insane saylum in Ohio, was destroyed by fire October it, and ten of the inmases were iteraced to death, the same ten of the inmases were iteraced to death, the same ten of the inmases were iteraced to death, the same ten of the inmases were iteraced to death, the same ten of the inmases were iteraced to death, the same ten of the inmases were iteraced to death, the same ten of the inmases with great-enthusiasen.

The Rev. Fallip Schaff, D. N., was sent out by the Evangelical Alliance of the United States, last epring, to the several Branches of the Affance in Europe, to consult with them respecting a General Conference of all the Branches to be held in this country. He has recently returned; and at a public meeting, held on the 6th in the Reference Church corner of Twenty-simb Street and Frish Avence in this city, he made a report, which indicates that he was received with cothesiasm in Britain, France, Holland, Germany, and Switzerland; and that large deputations of the most emisent divines and Christias philanthropias will come in the autumn of Britt to the Conference in Key York.

The Rechester Thesire was destroyed by the one

York.

The Rochester Theatre was destroyed by fire on the morning of November 4.

Bear-Admiral Charles Stewart, of the "Ironaides" Constitution figure fame, died at Bordentown, New Jersey, on the 6th, aged 16 years.

Hon. Bewardy Johnson and wife will celebrate their guiden wedding at their residence in Bahimore on Tuesday, the 16th inst.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Tax Hallan Government, following the example of the Spanish, has declared that if will recover the right to reject declares of the Cicumental Council reported to the laws of the country and the spirit of the age.

Quite heavy carthqueite chocks were experienced on the svening of November 1 throughout Germany, and particularly in Dermandit, Wisehaden, Mayenes, and Frankfort.

The Streets Carthy has been in next recommended.

on the svening of November 1 throughout Germany, and particularly in Darmstadt, Wisebaden, Mayence, and Frankfort.

The Spanish Cabinet has been in part reconstructed. Marios has been appointed Foreign Becretary, and Fyguerola Minister of Financa. The Spanish Cories have again adjourned without choosing a king. The division in this matter has affected the cabuset. Admiral Toputs has resigned. It is thought that the government will endeavor to fill the vacant seals in the Cories with deputies favorable to the elevation of the Buke of Genos to the throne.

The correspondent of the London Fost writes as follows from Rome concerning the especied action of the Council: "The dogmatic definition of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary will encounter no obstacle. The Pope correction into a dogma of the necessity of the temporal power is not considered possible by its most ardest champions. The foundation of this fogma. The erection into a dogma of the necessity of the temporal power is not considered possible by its most ardest champions. The foundation and the preservation of that power do not affect the elements of a dogma, and belief in its necessity is not seen processes, John to coly of high importance."

The Emperor of Austria arrived in Athens November 4, on a visit to the King of Greece.

As we got to press thicking of the death of King Vioter Emanuel of Italy are bourly expected.

The Archbishop of Paris has leased a pastoral letter on the Geomenical Council. It melestains that the French Concordat is opposed to any decision of the specialtion of the infallibility of the Pope without discussion.

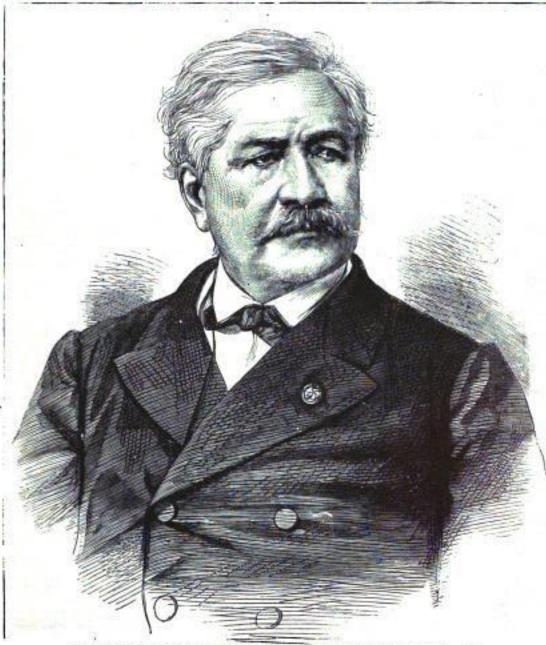

Georal Jordan, Adjutant-General of the Cuban army, writes to a frieed in this country, October 19:

the question of the infallibility of the Pope without discussion.

General Jordan, Adjutant-General of the Cuban army, writes to a friend in this country, October 19:

"While we have no absolute need of foreign soldiers of any kind to carry this straggle to succeeded fruition, we do need supplies. As near as I am able to calculate we have $6,000 and who have arms, and I state in perfect sincerity that we could use immediately 15,000 stand of arms, and with that comber in our hands could end this war in ninety days. We have not wasted our armice nor materials in stacking large cities—sea-ports I mean; because, even though we took them, it would be at a secrifice of his of our trained soldiers, with a perfect knowledge that we could not hold them, for the reason that we have no retiliery to defend them against the Spanish navy. Protein Frincips and all interfect towns we have so clavely besteged that they are really of no avail to cur enemy entry the usame of bolding them. We occasionally are benefited by it, for in their stiempts to send them supplies we often capture their trains."

Prom St. Petersburg we learn that on the Tist of August, at eight minutes past three in the afternoon, a very alarming shock of carthquake was felt in and around Schemacha, in the Cancasta, which destroyed not only the greater part of the houses in the town, but also those of the village of Sundi.

M. PERDINAND DE LESSEPS, CHIEF PROMOTER OF THE SUEZ CANAL.-(SEE PAGE 148.)

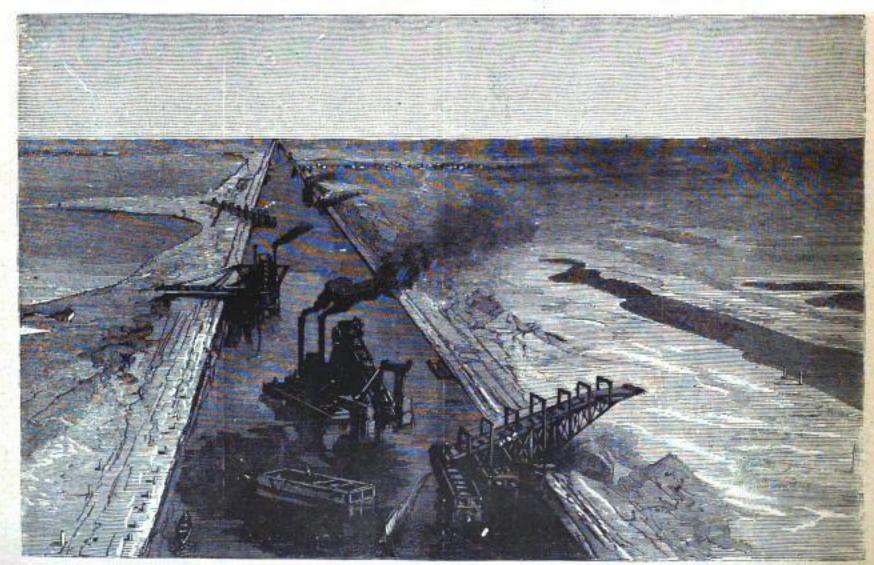

HON. FREDERICK F. LOW.

PRESEDENT GRANT, on the 28th of September, appointed FREDERICK F. Low, ex-Governor of said that the President, after deciding that the new minister ought to be appointed from California, showed to General sheeted from these the General selected Mr. Low as the best candidate for the position. It was cartainly a wise selection.

MAP OF THE SUEZ CANAL - (See Page 748.)

Mr. Low was in 1863 elected Governor of California by a majority of over 20,000 against ex-Governor Jours G. Downer, the Democratic candidate. He has always been identified with

THE ISTHMUS OF SUEZ MARITIME CANAL, NEAR KANTARA .- [See Page 748.]

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1860, by Hanners & Buornegas, is the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.]

MAN AND WIFE.

By WILKIE COLLINS,

Author of "The Woman is White," "No Name," "The Moonstone," etc., etc.

WITH ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

PROLOGUE.-THE IRESE MARRIAGE.

Part the Birst.

THE VILLA AT HAMPSTEAD

L

Os a summer's morning, between thirty and forty years ago, two girls were crying bitterly in the cabin of an East Indian passenger ship, bound outward, from Gravesend to Bombay.

They were both of the same age-eighteen. They had both, from childhood spward, been close and dear friends at the same school. They were now parting for the first time—and parting, it might be, for life.

it might be, for life.

The name of one was Blanche. The name of the other was Anne.

Both were the children of poor parents; both had been pupil-teachers at the school; and both were destined to earn their own broad. Personally speaking, and socially speaking, these were the only points of resemblance between them.

Blanche was passably attractive and passably intelligent, and no more. Anne was rarely bean.

intelligent, and no more. Anne was rurely beau-tiful and rarely endowed. Blanche's parents was to secure, at any sacrifice, the future wellbeing of their child. Anne's purents were heart-less and depraved. Their one idea, in connection with their daughter, was to speculate on her beauty, and to turn her abilities to profitable ac-

The girls were starting in life under widely different conditions. Blanche was going to In-dia, to be governess in the household of a Judge, under care of the Judge's wife. Anne was to wait at home until the first opportunity offered of sending her cheaply to Milan. There, among strangers, she was to be perfected in the actress's and the singer's art; then to return to England, and make the fortune of her family on the lyric

Such were the prospects of the two, as they sat together in the cabin of the Indiaman, locked first in each other's arms, and crying bitterly. The whispered firewell talk exchanged between them—exaggerated and impulsive as girls' talk is apt to be—came honestly, in each case, straight

"Blanche! you may be married in India. Make your husband bring you back to England."

"Anne! you may take a dislike to the stage. Come out to India if you do." "In England or out of England, married or not married, we will meet, darling—if it's years hence—with all the old love between us; friends who help each other, sisters who trust each other, for life! Vow it, Blanche!"

"I vow it, Anne!"

"With all your heart and soul!"

"With all my beart and soul!"

The sails were spread to the wind; and the ship began to move in the water. It was necessary to appeal to the captain's authority before the girls-could be parted. The captain inter-fered gently and firmly. "Come, my dear," he said, putting his arm round Anne; "you won't mind set? I have got a daughter of my own." Anne's head fell on the sailor's shoulder. He author, with his own hands iron the shore best put her, with his own hands, into the shore-boat alongside. In five minutes more the ship had gathered way; the bost was at the landing stage —and the girls had seen the last of each other for many a long year to come.

This was in the summer of eighteen hundred and thirty-one.

Twenty-four years later—in the summer of eighteen hundred and fifty-five—there was a villa eighteen hundred and fifty-five—there was a villa at Hampstead to be let furnished.

The house was still occupied by the persons who desired to let it. On the evening on which this scene opens a lady and two gentlemen were seased at the dimner-table. The lady had reached the mature age of forty-two. She was still a mrely beautiful woman. Her husband, some years younger than herself, faced her at the table, sitting silent and constrained, and never, even by accident, looking at his wife. The third person was a guest. The husband's name was Vanborough. The guest's name was Kendrew.

It was the end of the dinner, The fruit and wine were on the table. Mr. Vanborough pushed the bottles in silence to Mr. Kendrew. The lady of the house looked round at the serv-int who was waiting, and said, "Tell the children to come in."

The door opened, and a girl twelve years old entered, leading by the hand a younger girl of five. They were both prestilly dressed in white, with sushes of the same shade of light blue. But there was no family resemblance between them. The older girl was frail and delicate, with a pale, sensitive face. The younger was light and florid, with round red cheeks and bright, sancy eyes—a charming little picture of happiness and health.

Mr. Kendrew looked inquiringly at the youngest of the two girls. "Here is a young lady," he said, "who is a

"Here is a young lady," he said, "who is a total stranger to me."
"If you had not been a total stranger yourself for a whole year pass," answered Mrs. Vanborough, "you would sever have made that confession. This is little Blanche—the only child of the dearest friend I have. When Blanche's mother and I last saw each other we were two poor school-girls beginning the world. My friend ent to India, and married there late in life. You may have heard of her husband—the famour Indian officer, Sir Thomas Lundie? Yes: 'the rich Sir Thomas, as you call him. Lady Lundie is now on her way back to England, for the first time since she left it-I am afraid to say how many years since. I expected her yesterday; I expect her to-day—she may come at any mo-ment. We exchanged promises to meet, in the ship that took her to India—'rows' we called them in the dear old times. Imagine how changed we shall find each other when we do meet again at last!"

"In the mean time," said Mr. Kendrew, "your friend appears to have sent you her little daugh-ter to represent her? It's a long journey for se young a traveler."

"A journey ordered by the doctors in India a year since," rejoined Mrs. Vanborough. "They said Blanche's health required English air. Sir Thomas was ill at the time, and his wife couldn't leave him. She had to send the child to Ea-gland, and who should she send her to but me? Look at her now, and say if the English nir hasn't agreed with her! We two mothers, Mr. Kendrew, seem literally to live again in our children.

I have an only child. My friend has an only child. My daughter is little Anne—as I was, My friend's daughter is little Blanche—as alows. And, to crown it all, those two girls have taken the same fancy to each other which se took to each other in the by-gone days at school. One has often heard of hereditary hatred. Is there such a thing as hereditary love as well?"

Before the guest could answer, his attention was claimed by the master of the house. "Kendrew," said Mr. Vanborough, "when you have had enough of domestic sentiment, suppose you take a glass of wine?"

The words were spoken with mulisquised cor tempt of tone and manner. Mrs. Vanborough's color rose. She waited, and controlled the mo-mestary irrination. When she spoke to her hus-band it was evidently with a wish to soothe and conciliate him.
"I am afraid, my dear, you are not well this evening?"

"I shall be bester when those children have done clattering with their knives and forks."

The girls were peeling fruit. The younger one went on. The elder stopped, and looked at her mother. Mrs. Vanborough beckened to Blanche to come to her, and pointed toward the French window, opening to the floor.

"Would you like to eat your fruit in the garden, Blanche?

"Yes," said Blanche, "if Anne will go with me."

Anne rose at once, and the two girls went away together into the garden, hard in hand. On their departure Mr. Kendrew wisely started a new subject. He referred to the letting of the

"The loss of the garden will be a sad loss to those two young ladies," he said. "It really seems to be a pity that you should be giving up this pretty place."

"Leaving the house is not the worst of the sacrifice," answered Mrs. Vanborough. "If John finds Hampstead too far for him from London, of course we must move. The only hardship that I comelain of is the herdship that I hardship that I complain of is the hardship of having the house to let."

Mr. Vanborough looked across the table, as ungraciously as possible, at his wife.

"What have you to do with it?" he asked.

Mrs. Vanborough tried to clear the conjugul horizon by a smile.

Mrs. Vanborough tried to clear the conjugal horizon by a smile.

"My dear John," she said, gently, "you forget that, while you are at business, I am here all day. I can't help seeing the people who come to look at the house. Such people!" she continued, turning to Mr. Kendrew. "They distrust every thing, from the scraper at the door to the chimneys on the roof. They force their way in at all hours. They ask all sorts of impudent questions—and they show you plainly that they don't mean to believe your answers, before you have time to make them. Some that they don't mean to believe your answers, before you have time to make them. Some wretch of a woman says, 'Do you think the drains are right?'—and suiffs suspiciously, before I can say Yes. Some brute of a man saks, 'Are you quite sure this house is solidly built, ma'am?'—and jumps on the floor, at the full stretch of his legs, without waiting for me to reply. Nobody believes in our gravel soil and our bouth astreet. Nebody wasts any of care impouth astreet. ply. Nobody believes in our gravel soil and our south aspect. Nobody wants any of our im-provements. The moment they hear of John's Artesian well, they look as if they never drank water. And, if they happen to pass my poultry-yard, they instantly lose all appreciation of the merits of a fresh egg!"

My Kendrew laughed. "I have been through

Mr. Kendrew laughed. "I have been through it all in my time," he said. "The people who want to take a bosse are the born enemics of the people who want to let a house. Odd—isn't it, Vanhorough?"

Mr. Vanborough's sullen humor resisted his friend as obstinately as it had resisted his wife,
"I dare say," he answered, "I wasn't listening."

This time the tone was almost bound. Mrs. Vanborough looked at her husband with unconcealed sarprise and distress.

"John!" she said. "What can be the matter with you? Are you in pain?"

"A man may be anxious and worried, I suppose, without being actually in pain."

"I am sorry to bear you are worried. Is it business?"
"Yes-business."

"Consult Mr. Kendrew.

"I am waiting to consult him." Mrs. Vanborough rose immediately. "Bing, dear," she said, "when you want coffee." As she passed her hushand she stopped and hild her hand tenderly on his forehead, "I wish I could smooth out that frown!" she whispered. Mr. Vanborough impatiently shook his head. Mrs. Vanhorough sighed as she turned to the door. Her husband called to her, before she could leave

"IS THAT LADY YOUR WIFE?"

Her huseament the room.

*Mind we are not interrupted!"

*I will do my best, John." She looked at Mr. Kendrew, holding the door open for her; and resumed, with an effort, her former lightness of tone. "Bet don't forget our 'born enemants of tone." ness of tone. "But don't surges our "corn ene-mies!" Somebody may come, even at this bour of the evening, who wants to see the house."

The two gentlemen were left alone over their

There was a strong personal contrast be-hem. Mr. Vanborough was tall and dark -a dashing, handsome man; with an energy in his face which all the world saw; with an inbred falseness under it which only a special observer could detect. Mr. Kendrew was short and light —slow and awkward in manner, except when semething happened to rouse him. Looking in Air face, the world saw an ugly and undemonstrative little man. The special observer, penetrating under the surface, found a fine nature beneath, resting on a steady foundation of booor and truth.

Mr. Vanishment content the contents.

Mr. Vanhorough opened the conversation.
"If you ever marry," he said, "don't be such a fool, Kendrow, as I have been. Don't take a

"If I could get such a wife as yours," replied the other, "I would take her from the stage tomorrow. A beautiful woman, a clever woman, a woman of unblemished character, and a wo man who truly loves you. Man alive! what do you want more?"

"I want a great deal more. I want a woman

"I want a great deal more. I want a woman highly connected and highly bred—a woman who can receive the best society in England, and open her husband's way to a position in the world."

"A position in the world!" cried Mr. Kendrew, "Here is a man whose father has left him half a million of money—with the one condition annexed to it of taking his father's place at the head of one of the greatest mercantile houses in England. And he talks about a position, as if he was a junior clerk in his one affice! What on earth does your ambigue. own uffice! What on earth does your ambi-ready got?"

Mr. Vanborough finished his glass of wine, and looked his friend steadily in the face.

"My ambition," be said, "sees a l'arliamentary career, with a l'earage at the end of it—and with no obstacle in the way but my estimable

Mr. Kendrew lifted his hand warningly. Mr. Kesserew into his hand wild. "If you're talk in that way," he said. "If you're joking—it's a joke I don't see. If you're in cornest—you force a suspicion on me which I would rather not feel. Let us change the sub-

"No! Let us have it out at once. What do you suspect?'

"I suspect you are getting tired of your wife."
"Nhe is forty-two, and I am thirty-five; and I have been married to her for thirteen years.
You know all that—and you only suspect I am tired of her. Bless your innocence! Have you any thing more to say?"

"If you force me to it, I take the freedom of an old friend—and I say you are not treating her fairly. It's nearly two years since you broke up your establishment abroad, and came to England on your father's death. With the exception of myself, and one or two other friends of former days, you have presented your wife to nobody. Your new position has smoothed the way for you into the best society. You rever take your wife with you. You go out as if you were a single man. I have reason to know that you are actubelieved to be a single man, among these new acquaintancer of yours, in more than one quarter. Forgive me for speaking my mind beauty—I say what I think. It's unworthy of you to keep your wife buried here, as if you were ashamed of her."

I am ashamed of her."

" Vanborough!" "Wait a little! you are not to have it all your ewn way, my good fellow. What are the facts? Thirteen years ago I fell in love with a handsome public singer, and married her. My father was angry with me; and I had to go and live with her abroad. It didn't matter, abroad. My father forgave me on his death-bod, and I had to bring her home again. It does matter, at home. I find myself, with a great career opening before me, tied to a woman whose relations are (as you well know) the lowest of the low. A without the slightest distinction of mannor, or the slightest aspiration beyond her nors ery and her kitchen, her piano and her books. Is that a wife who can help me to make my place in society?—who can smooth my way, through social obstacles and political obstacle through social obstactes and pointent obstactes, to the House of Lords? By Jupiter! if ever there was a woman to be 'buried' (as you call it), that woman is my wife. And, what's more, if you want the truth, it's because I can't bury her here that I'm going to leave this house. She has got a cursed knack of making acquaintances. She'll have a circle of friends. wherever she goes. She'll have a circle of friends about her if I leave her in this neighborhood much longer. Friends who remember her as the famous opera-singer. Friends who will see her swindling scoundrel of a father (when my back is turned) coming drunk to the door to bor-row money of her! I tell you, my marriage has wrecked my prospects. It's no use talking to me of my wife's virtues. She is a millstone round my neck, with all her virtues If I had not been a horn idint I should have walted, and married a woman who would have been of some use to me: a women with high connections—

Mr. Kendrew touched his host's arm, and sud-dealy interrupted him.

"To come to the point," he said-"a woman like Lady Jane Parnell."

Mr. Vanborough started. His eyes fell, for the first time, before the eyes of his friend. "What do you know about Lady Jane?" he

"Nothing. I don't move in Lady Jane's world—but I do go sometimes to the opera. I saw you with her last night in her box; and I heard what was said in the stalls near me. You were openly spoken of as the favored man who was singled out from the rest by Lady Jane. Imagine what would happen if your wife heard that! You are wrong, Vanborough—you are in every way wrong. You alarm, you distress, you disappoint me. I never sought this explanation—bus now it has come, I won't shrink from it. Reconsider your conduct; reconsider what you have said to me—or you count me no longer among your friends. No! I want no further talk about it now. We are both getting hos—we may end in saying what had better have been held would be the have been the reconsider that the best had better have been the said. we may end in saying what had better have been left unsaid. Once more, let us change the subject. You wrote me word that you wanted me here to-day, because you needed my advice on a matter of some importance. What is it?"

Silence followed that question. Mr. Vanborcogh's face betrayed signs of embarrasament. He poured himself out another glass of wine, and drank it at a draught before he replied.

"It's not so easy to tell you what I want," he aid, "after the tone you have taken with me about my wife."

about my wife."

Mr. Kendrew looked surprised.
"Is Mrs. Vanborough concerned in the matter?" he asked.

"Does she know about it?"

"Have you kept the thing a secret out of re-

"Have I any right to advise on it?"

"You have the right of an old friend."
"Then, why not tell me frankly what it is?" There was another moment of emberra-on Mr. Vanborough's part.

"It will come better," he answered, "from a third person, whom I expect here every minute. He is in possession of all the facts—and he is better able to state them than I am."

"Who is the person?"
"My friend, Delamayn."

"Yes—the jurior partner in the firm of Dela-nayn, Hawke, and Delamayn. Do you know

"I am acquainted with him. His wife's fam-ily were friends of mine before he married. I

"You're rather hard to please to-day! Delamayn is a rising man, is ever there was one yet. A man with a career before him, and with cour-age chough to pursue it. He is going to leave the Firm, and try his lock at the Bar. Every body says he will do great things. What's your objection to him?"

"I have no objection whatever. We m wan people occasionally whom we dislike with-out knowing why. Without knowing why, I dislike Mr. Delamayn."

"Whatever you do, you must put up with him this evening. He will be here directly." He was there at that moment. The servant opened the door, and announced..." Mr. Dela-

Externally speaking, the rising solicitor, who was going to try his luck at the Bar, looked like a man who was going to succeed. His hard, heirless face, his watchful gray eyes, his thin, resolute lips, asid plainly, in so many words, "I mean to get on in the world; and, if you are in my way, I mean to get on at your expense." Mr. Delamayn was habitually polite to every body—but he had never been known to say one unnecessary word to his dearest friend. every body—but he had never been known to say one unnecessary word to his dearest friend. A man of rare ability; a man of unblemished honor (as the code of the world goes); but not a man to be taken familiarly by the hand. You would never have borrowed money of him—but you would have trusted him with untold gold. Involved in private and personal troubles, you would have besitated at asking him to help you. Involved in public and producible troubles, you would have said. Here is thy man. Sure to push would have said, Here is my man. Sure to push his way—nobody could leok at him and doubt it—sure to push his way.

"Kendrew is an old friend of mine," said Mr. Vanborough, addressing himself to the lawyer.

"Whatever you have to say to me you may say before him. Will you have some wine?"

"No-thank you."
"Have you brought any news?
"Yes."

"Have you got the written opinions of the two barristers?" "No."
"Why not?"

"Because nothing of the sort is necessary. If the facts of the case are correctly stated there is not the slightest doubt about the law."

With that reply Mr. Dolamayn took a writ-ten paper from his pocket, and spread it out on the table before him.

"What is that?" asked Mr. Vanborough.

"The case relating to your marriage."
Mr. Kendrew started, and showed the first tokens of interest in the proceedings which had escaped him yet. Mr. Delamayn looked at him for a moment—and went on. "The case," he resumed, "as originally stated by you, and taken down in writing by our head-clerk."

Mr. Vanborough's temper began to show it-

"What have we got to do with that now?" he asked. "You have made your inquiries to prove the correctness of my statement-haven't

"Yes."

"And you have found out that I am right?" have found out that you are right-if "I have found out that you are right—if the case is right. I wish to be sure that no mistake has occurred between you and the clerk. This is a very important matter. I am going to take the responsibility of giving an opinion which may be followed by serious consequences; and I mean to assure myself that the coinion is given on a sound basis, first. I have some questions to ask you. Don't be impatient, if you please.

They won't take lone."

They won't take long."
He referred to the manuscript, and put the first question.

"You were married at Inchmallock, in Irend, Mr. Vanborough, thirteen years since "
"Yes."

"Your wife—then Miss Anne Silvester-Roman Catholic?"

"Her father and mother were Roman Catho

"They were."

"Your father and mother were Protestants? and you were haptised and brought up in the Church of England?"

"Miss Anne Silvester felt, and expressed strong repugnance to marrying you, because you and she belonged to different religious commo-

"She did." "You got over her objection by consenting to become a Roman Catholic, like herself?" "It was the shortest way with her—and it

You were formally received into the Roman Catholic Church?

"I went through the whole ceremony."
"Abroad or at home?"
"Abroad."

"How long was it before the date of your marriage ?"

"Six weeks before I was married." Referring perpenally to the paper in his hand, Mr. Delamayn was especially careful in compar-ing that last answer with the answer given to

"Quite right," he said, and went on with his

"The priest who married you was one Ambrose Redman—a young man recently appointed to his cierical duties?"

"Did be ask if you were both Roman Catholies?

"Did he ask any thing more?"

"Are you sure he never inquired whether you had both been Catholics for more than one year before you came to him to be married?"

I am certain of it."

"He must have forgotten that part of his duty—or, being only a beginner, he may wall have been ignorant of it altogether. Did neither you nor the lady think of informing him on the point?"

"Neither I nor the lady knew there was any ecosity for informing him." Mr. Delamayn folded up the manuscript, and put it beck in his pocket.

"Right," he said, "in every particular."

Mr. Vanborough's swarthy complexion slowly turned pale. He cast one furtive glance at Mr.

Kendrew, and turned away again.
"Well," he said to the lawyer, "now for your opinion! What is the law?"

opinion! What is the law?"
"The law," answered Mr. Delamayi, "is beyond all doubt or dispute. Your marriage with Miss Anne Silvester is no marriage at all."
Mr. Kendrew started to his feet.
"What do you mean?" he asked, sternly.

The rising solicator lifted his eyebrows in po-lite surprise. If Mr. Kendrew wanted informa-tion, why should Mr. Kendrew ask for it in that way? "Do you wish me to go into the law of the case?" he inquired.

Mr. Delamayn stated the law, as that law still stands—to the disgrace of the English Legisla-ture, and the English Nation.

"By the Irish Statute of George the Second," be said, "every marriage, colebrated by a Popotestants, or a Papist and any person who has been a Processant within twelve months before the marriage, is declared null and void. And by two other Acts of the same reign such a celebra riage is made a felony on the part of the priest. The clergy in Ireland of other religious denominations have been relieved from this law. But it still remains in force so far as the Roman Catholic priesthood is concerned.

"Is such a state of things possible in the age we live in!" exclaimed Mr. Kendrew. Mr. Delamayn smiled. He had outgrown the customary illusions as to the age we live in.

"There are other instances in which the Irish marriage-law presents some curious snomalies of its own," he went en. "It is felony, as I have just told you, for a Roman Catholic priest to celebrate a marriage which may be lawfully eciebrated by a parochial clergyman, a Presbyterian minister, and a Non-conformist minister. It is also felony (by another law) on the part of a parochial clergyman to celebrate a marriage that may be lawfully celebrated by a Roman Catholic priest. And it is again felony (by yet another law) for a Presbyterian minister and a Non-conformist minister to celebrate a marriage which may be lawfully celebrated by a clergy-man of the Established Church. An odd state of things. Foreigners might possibly think it a scandalous state of things. In this eventry, we don't appear to mind it. Returning the present case, the results stand thus: M. Vanborough is a single man; Mrs. Vanborough is a single man; Mrs. Vanborough is a single woman; their child is illegitime e, and the priest, Ambrose Redman, is liable to be tried, and punished, as a felon, for marrying them." Non-conformist minister to celebrate a marriage

"An infamous law!" said Mr. Kendrew.
"It is the law," returned Mr. Delamaya, as sufficient answer to him.

Thus far not a word had escaped the master of the house. He sat with his lips fast closed and his eyes riveted on the table, thinking. Mr. Kandrew turned to him, and broke the

"Am I to understand," he asked, "that the advice you wanted from me related to this?"

"You mean to tell me that, foreseeing the present inserview and the result to which it might present inserview and use resear to wants a migra-lead, you felt any doubt as to the course you were bound to take? Am I really to understand that you hesitate to set this dreadful mistake right, and to make the woman who is your wife in the sight of Heaven, your wife in the sight of

"If you choose to put it in that light," said Mr. Vanborough; "if you won't consider—"
"I want a plain answer to my question—'yes,

"Let me speak, will you! A man has a right to explain himself, I suppose?" Mr. Kendrew stopped him by a gesture of dis-

"I won't trouble you to explain yourself," he id. "I prefer to leave the house. You have said. "I prefer to leave the house. You have given me a leason, Sir, which I shall not forget. I find that one man may have known another from the days when they were both boys, and may have seen nothing but the false surface of him in all that time. I am ashamed of having ever been your friend. You are a stranger to me from this moment."

With those words he had a

With those words he left the room.

"That is a curiously hot-beaded man," re-marked Mr. Delamayn. "If you will all, me, I think I'll change my mind. I'll have a glass of wine."

Mr. Vanborough rose to his feet without replying, and took a turn in the room impatiently. Scoundrel as he was—in intention, if not yes in act—the loss of the oldest friend he had in the orld staggered him-for the moment.

"This is an awkward business, Delamayn," he said. "What would you advise me to do?" Mr. Delamayn shook his head, and sipped his

Mr. Declaracy of the claret.

"I decline to advise you," be answered. "I take no responsibility, beyond the responsibility of stating the law as it stands, in your case."

Mr. Ventorough ast down again at the table, to consider the alternative of asserting or not asserting his freedom from the marriage tie. He had not had much time thus far for turning the matter over in his mind. But for his residence on the Continent the question of the flaw in his marriage might no doubt have been raised long since. As things were, the question had only taken its rise in a chance conversation with Mr.

Delamayn in the summer of that year.

For some minutes the lawyer sat silen For some minutes the lawyer sat silent, slipping his wine, and the husband sat silent, thinking his own thoughts. The first change that came over the scene was produced by the appearance of a servant in the dining-room. Mr. Vanborough looked up at the man with a den outbreak of anger.

What do you want here?"

"What do you want here?"
The man was a well-bred English servant. In to man was a west-over English severals. In other words, a human machine, doing its duty impenetrably when it was once wound up. He had his words to speak—and he spoke them. "There is a lady at the door, Sir, who wishes to see the house."

"The house is not to be seen at this time of the evening."

The machine had a message to deliver-

"The lady desired me to present her spologies, Sir. I was to tell you she was much pressed for time. This was the last house on the house finding his way in strange places."

"Hold your tongue—and tell the lady to go to the devil!"

Mr. Delamayn interfered—partly in the inter-ests of his client, partly in the interests of propriety.

"You attach some importance, I think, to leting this house as soon as possible?" he said. Of course I do!"

"Is it wise—on account of a momentary an-noyance—to lose an opportunity of laying your Wise or not, it's an infernal nuisance to be disturbed by a stranger."

"Just as you please. I don't wish to interfere. I only wish to say-in case you are thinking of my convenience as your guest—that it will be no nuisance to see."

The servant impenetrably waited. Mr. Vanborough impatiently gave way.

"Very well. Let ber in. Mind, if she comes here, she's only to look into the room, and go eut again. If she wants to ask questions, she must go to the agent."

Mr. Delsmayn interfered once more, in the interests, this time, of the lady of the house.
"Might it not be desirable," he suggested,
"to consult Mrs. Vanborough before you quite Where's your mistress?"

"In the garden, or the paddock, Sir-I am not sure which." "We can't send all over the grounds in search of her. Tell the house-maid—and show the lady

The servant withdrew. Mr. Delamayn helped nself to a second glass of wine. "Excellent claret," he said. "Do you get it direct from Bordeaux?" There was no answer. Mr. Vanberough had returned to the contemplation of the alternative between freeing himself or not freeing himself from the marriage tie. One of his elbows was on the table; he bit fiercely at his finger-nails. He muttered between his teeth, "What am I to

A sound of rostling silk made itself gently audible in the passage outside. The door opened, and the lady who had come to see the house appeared in the dining-room.

She was tall and elegant; beautifully dressed, in the happiest combination of simplicity and splendor. A light summer veil hung over her face. She lifted it, and made her apologies for disturbing the gentlemen over their wine, with the unaffected case and grace of a highly-bred "Pray accept my excuses for this intrusion.

I am ashamed to disturb you. One look at the room will be quite enough."

Thus far she had addressed Mr. Delamayn, who happened to be nearest to her. Looking round the room her eye fell on Mr. Vanborough. She started, with a loud exclamation of aston-ishment. "You!" she said. "Good Heavens!

who would have thought of meeting you here?"
Mr. Vanborough, on his side, stood petrified.
"Lady Jane!" he exclaimed. "Is it possi-

He barely looked at her while she spoke. His eyes wandered guildily toward the window which led into the garden. The situation was a terri-ble one—equally terrible if his wife discovered Lady Jane, or if Lady Jane discovered his wife. For the moment nobody was visible on the lawn There was time, if the chance only offeredthere was time for him to get the visitor out of the house. The visitor, innocent of all knowledge of the truth, gayly offered him her hand.

"I believe in measurerism for the first time, she said. "This is an instance of magneti she said. "This is an instance of magnetic sympathy, Mr. Vanborough. An invalid friend of mine wants a furnished house at Hampstead. I undertake to find one for her, and the day I select to make the discovery is the day you select for dining with a friend. A last house at Hampstead is left on my list—and in that house I meet you. Astonishing!" She turned to Mr. Delamaya. "I presume I am addressing the owner of the house?" Before a word could be said by either of the greatlemen she noticed the garden. of the house?" Before a word could be said by either of the gentlemen she noticed the garden. "What pretty grounds! Do I see a lady in the garden? I hope I have not driven her away." She looked round, and appealed to Mr. Vanborcogh. "Your friend's wife?" she asked, and, on this occasion, waited for a reply.

In Mr. Vanborough's situation what reply was possible?

Mrs. Vanborough was not only visible—but -in the garden; giving her orders to one of the out-of-door servants with the tone and manner which proclaimed the mistress of the house. Suppose he said, "She is not my friend's wife?" Female curiosity would inevitably put the next question, "Who is she?" Suppose he in-vented as explanation? The explanation would take time, and time would give his wife an op-portunity of discovering Lady Jane. Seeing all these considerations in one breathless moment, Mr. Vanberough took the shortest and the bold-est way out of the difficulty. He answered silen-ly by an affirmative inclination of the head, which dextrously turned Mrs Vanborough into Mrs. Delamayn, without allowing Mr. Delamayn the opportunity of hearing it. But the lawyer's eye was habitually watchful, and the lawyer saw him.

Mastering in a moment his first natural aston-ishment at the liberty taken with him, Mr. Delamayn drew the inevitable conclusion that there was something wrong, and that there was an attempt (not to be permitted for a moment) to mix him up in it. He advanced, resolute to contradict his client, to his client's own face. ct his client, to his client's own face. The voluble Lady Jane interrupted him before he could open his lips.

Might I ask one question? Is the aspect h? Of course it is! I ought to see by the that the aspect is south. These, and the sun that the aspect is south. other two are, I suppose, the only rooms on the ground-floor? And is it quiet? Of course it's quiet! A charming house. Far more likely to suit my friend than any I have seen yet. Will you give me the refusal of it till to-morrow?' There she stopped for breath, and gave Mr. Delamayn his first opportunity of speaking to her. "I beg your ladyship's pardon," he began.

Mr. Vanborough—passing close behind him, and whispering as he passed-stopped the lawyer before he could say a word more.

"For God's sake, don't contradict me! My wife is coming this way!" At the same moment (still s: Delamayn was the master of the house) Lady Jame returned to the charge.

"You appear to feel some hesitation," she said.

"Do you want a reference?" She smiled satirioally, and summoned her friend to her aid. "Mr. Vanborough!"

Vanborough:

Mr. Vanborough, stealing step by step nearer to the window—intent, come what might of it, on keeping his wife out of the room—neither heeded nor heard her. Lady Jane followed him, and tapped him briskly on the shoulder with her parasol.

At that moment Mrs. Vanborough appeared on the garden side of the window.

"Am I in the way?" she asked, addressing her husband, after one steady look at Lady Jane.

"This lady appears to be an old friend of yours."
There was a tone of sarcasm in that allission to the parasol, which might develop into a tone of ssy at a moment's notice. Jane was not in the least disconcerted. She had her double privilege of familiarity with the men whom she liked—her privilege as a wo-man of high rank, and her privilege as a young widow. She bowed to Mrs. Vanborough, with all the highly-finished politeness of the order to which she belonged.

"The lady of the house, I presume?" she said, with a gracious smile.

Mrs. Vanborough returned the bow coldly-entered the room first—and then answered, Lady Jane turned to Mr. Vanborough. "Present me!" she said, submitting resigned-ly to the formalities of the middle classes. Mr. Vanborough obeyed, without looking at his wife, and without mentioning his wife's name.

"Lady Jane Parnell," he said, passing over "Lady Jane Parnes, he said, passing over the introduction as rapidly as possible. "Let me see you to your carriage," he added, offering his arm. "I will take care that you have the refusal of the house. You may trust it all to

No! Lady Jane was accustomed to leave a favorable impression behind her wherever she went. It was a habit with her to be charming (in widely different ways) to both sexes. The social experience of the upper classes is, in England, an experience of universal welcome. Lady Jane declined to leave until she had thawed the ing reception of the lady of the house.

"I must repeat my apologies," she said to Mrs. Vanborough, "for coming at this inconvenient time. My intrusion appears to have sadly disturbed the two gentlemen. Mr. Vanborough looks as if he wished me a hundred miles away. And as for your husband—" She stopped and alternated the two of the looks and the looks as if he wished me a hundred miles away. rlanced toward Mr. Delamayn. "Pardon me for speaking in that familiar way. I have not the pleasure of knowing your bushand's name."

of knowing your husband's nam In speechless amazement Mrs. Vanborough's eyes followed the direction of Lady Jane's eyes and rested on the lawyer, personally a total

Mr. Delamayn, resolutely waiting his opporunity to speak, seized it once more-and

"I beg your pardon," he said. "There is some misunderstanding here, for which I am in no way responsible. I am not that lady's hus-

It was Lady Jane's turn to be astonished. She looked at the lawyer. Useless! Mr. Delamayn had set himself right—Mr. Delamayn declined to interfere further. He silently took a chair at the other end of the room. Lady Jane addressed

Mr. Vanberough,
"Whatever the mistake may be," she said,
"was are responsible for it. You certainly told "you are responsible for it. You certainly told me this lady was your friend's wife." "What!!!" cried Mrs. Vanborough—loudly, sternly, incredulously.

The inbred pride of the great lady began to appear behind the thin outer veil of poliseness at covered it.

"I will speak louder if you wish it," she said. "Mr. Vanborough told me you were that gentle-

Mr. Vamborough whispered flercely to his wife through his clenched touth. "The whole thing is a mistake. Go into the garden again!"

Mrs. Vanborough's indignation was suspended for the moment in dread, as she saw the passion and the terror struggling in her husband's face. "How you look at me!" she said. "How you speak to me!"

speak to me!"

He only repeated, "Go into the garden!"

Lady Jane began to perceive, what the lawyer had discovered some minutes perviously—that there was something wrong in the villa at Hampstead. The lady of the house was a lady in an anomalous position of some kind. And as the house, to all appearance, belonged to Mr. Vantoreach's friend Mr. Vanhoreach's friend Mr. Vanhoreach's friend Mr. Vanhoreach's friend Mr. Vanhoreach's friend many contracts. borough's friend, Mr. Vanborough's friend must (in spite of his recent disclaimer) be in some way responsible for it. Arriving, naturally enough, at this erroneous conclusion, Lady Jane's eyes rested for an instant on Mrs. Vanborough with a rested for an instant on Mrs. Vanoorough which finely contemptuous expression of inquiry which would have roused the spirit of the tamest wo-man in existence. The implied insult stung the wife's sensitive nature to the quick. She turned once more to her husband—this time without flinehing.

"Who is that woman?" she asked.

Lady Jane was equal to the emergency. The manner in which she wrapped herself up in her own virtue, without the slightest pretension on the one hand, and without the slightest compro-

the one hand, and window the angular mise on the other, was a sight to see.

"Mr. Vanborough," she said, "you offered to take me to my carriage just now. I begin to understand that I had better have accepted the offer at once. Give me your arm."

"Stop!" said Mrs. Vanborough, "your ladyship's looks are looks of contempt; your lady-ship's words can bear but one interpretation. I ship's words can bear but one interpretation. am innocently involved in some vile dece which I don't understand. But this I do know —I won't submit to be insulted in my own house. After what you have just said I forbid my husband to give you his arm. Her husband!

Lady Jane looked at Mr. Vanborough-at Mr. Vanhorough, whom she loved; whom she had honestly believed to be a single man; whom she had suspected, up to that moment, of nothing worse than of trying to screen the frailties of his friend. She dropped her highly-bred tone; she lost her highly-hed manners. The sense of her injury (if this was true), the pang of her jeakousy (if that woman near his wife), stripped the human nature in her bare of all disguises, raised the annual color in her hark and street his sense of the name of the sense of the sens gry color in her cheeks, and struck the angry fire out of her eyes.

"If you can tell the truth, Sir," she said, haughtily, "be so good as to tell it now. Have you been falsely presenting yourself to the world—falsely presenting yourself to me—in the character and with the aspirations of a single man?

Is that lady your wife?"

"Do you hear her? do you see her?" cried Mrs. Vanborough, appealing to her hushand, in her turn. She suddenly drew back from him, shuddering from head to foot. "He hesitates!"

she said to herself, faintly. "Good God! he hes- f

Lady Jane sternly repeated her question.

" Is that lady your wife?"
He roused his scoundrel-courage, and said the fatal word:

Mrs. Vanborough staggered back. She caught at the white curtains of the window to save herself from falling, and tore them. She looked at her husband, with the torn curtain elenched fast in her hand. She asked herself, "Am I mad? or is he?"

Lady Jane drew a deep breath of relief. He was not married! He was only a profligate single man. A profligate single man is shocking—but reclaimable. It is possible to blame him severely, and to insist on his reformation in the uncompromising terms. It is also possible to forgive him, and marry him. Lady Jane took the necessary position under the circumstances with more than the circumstances. with perfect tact. She inflicted reproof in the

"I have made a very painful discovery," she said, gravely, to Mr. Vanborough. "It rests with you to persuade me to forget it! Good-evening!" She accompanied the last words by a farewell look which aroused Mrs. Vanborough to frenzy. She sprang forward and prevented Lady Ja from leaving the room.

"No!" she said. "You don't go yet!" Mr. Vanborough came forward to interfere. His wife eyed him with a terrible look, and turned from him with a terrible look, and turned from him with a terrible contempt. "That man has lied!" she said. "In justice to myself I insist on proving it!" She struck a beil on a table pear her. The servant came in. "Fetch my writing-desk out of the next room." She waited—with her back turned on her hus-hand with her was a servant came in. band, with her eyes fixed on Lady Jane. s and alone she stood on the wreck of her married life, superior to the husband's treachery, the lawyer's indifference, and her rival's contempt. At that dreadful moment her beauty shows out again with a gleam of its old glory. The grand woman who in the old stage days had held thousands breathless over the mimic woes of the country stage. held thousands breathless over the mimic woes of the scene, stood there grander than ever, in her own woe, and held the three people who looked at her breathless till she spoke again.
The servant came in with the desk. She took out a paper and handed at to Lady Jane,
"I was a single woman. The sknder to which I was a single woman. The sknder to which such women are exposed doubted my marriage."
I contided moralf with the paper in your hand.

I provided myself with the paper in your hand. It speaks for itself. Even the highest society, deceiving me?" she asked.

Mr. Vanborough looked back into the far corner of the room, in which the lawyer sat, impenetrably waiting for events. "Oblige me by coming here for a moment," he said.

Mr. Delamaya rose and complied with the re-quest. Mr. Vanhorough addressed himself to Lady Jane.

"I beg to refer you to my man of business. He is not interested in deceiving you."

"Am I required simply to speak to the fact?" asked Mr. Delamayn. "I decline to do more." "You are not wanted to do more Listening intently to that interchange of question and answer, Mrs. Vanborough advanced a step in silence. The high courage that had sused her against outrage clared itself shrank under the sense of something coming which she had not foreseen. A nameless dread throbbed at her heart and crept among the roots of her hair.

Lady Jane handed the certificate to the lawyer. "In two words, Sir," she said, impatiently, what is this?"

"In two words, madam," answered Mr. Delamayn. "Waste paper."

"He is not married?"

44 He is not married.

After a moment's besitation Lady Jane looked round at Mrs. Vanborough, standing silent at her side—looked, and started back in terror. "Take me away !" she cried, shrinking from the gheatly face that confronted her with the fixed stare of agony in the great, glittering eyes. " away! That woman will murder me!"

Mr. Vanborough gave her his arm and led her to the door. There was dead silence in the room as he did it. Step by step the wife's eyes fol-lowed them with the same dreadful stare, till the door closed and shut them out. The lawyer, left alone with the discovered and deserted woman put the useless certificate silently on the table. She looked from him to the paper—and dropped, without a cry to warn him, without an effort to save herself, senseless at his feet. He lifted her from the floor and placed her on the sofa-and waited to see if Mr. Vanborough would come lack. Looking at the beautiful face -still beautiful, even in the swoon-he owned it was hard on her. Yes! in his own impenetrable way, the rising lawyer owned it was hard on her.

But the law justified it. There was no doubt in this case. The law justified it.

in this case. The law justified it.

The trampling of horses and the grating of wheels sounded outside. Lady Jane's carriage was driving away. Would the husband come back? (See what a thing habit is! Even Mr. Delamayn still mechanically thought of him as the husband—in the face of the law! in the face of the facts!)

No. The minutes passed. And no sign of the husband coming back.

It was not wise to make a scandal in the house. It was not desirable (on his own sole responsibil-ity) to let the servents see what had happened. Still, there she lay senseless. The cool evening air came in through the open window and lifted the light ribbons in her lace cap, lifted the little lock of hair that had broken loose and drooped over her neck. Still, there she lay—the wife who had loved him, the mother of his child—there

He stretched out his hand to ring the bell and summon help.

At the same moment the quiet of the summer evening was once mor, disturbed. He held his hand suspended over the bell. The noise outside came nearer. It was again the trampling of horses and the grating of wheels. Advancing— rapidly advancing—stopping at the house. Was Lady Jane coming back?

Was the asband coming back?

There was a loud ring at the bell-a quick There was a loud ring at the bell—a quick opening of the house-door—a rustling of a woman's dress in the passage. The door of the room opened, and the woman appeared—alone. Not Lady Jane. A stranger—older, years older, than Lady Jane. A plain woman, perhaps, at other times. A woman almost beautiful, now, with the eager happiness that beamed in her face.

She saw the figure on the sofa. She ran to it with a cry-a cry of recognition and a cry of terror in one. She dropped on her knees—and terror in one. She dropped on her knees—and laid that helpless head on her bosom, and kissed, with a sister's kisses, that cold, white cheek. "Oh, my darling!" she said. "Is it thus we

Yes! After all the years that had peaced since the parting in the cabin of the ship, it was thus the two school-friends met again.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

"P'rors, don't?" as the thief said to the constable bon he was about to arrest him.

Lovers' Parvince.—It is the privilege of the lover to be at one and the same time in two situations. When beside his sweet-heart he is also beside him-

A Farey.—A little girl wanted to say that she had a fan, but had forgotion the name; so she described it as "a thing to brush the warm off you with."

LOWRAL TRANSLATION.—A French author has translated a passage from one of Cooper's nevels as follows: "He descended from his horse 'z front of the chitest, and tied him to a large grassh 'ppor." The original reads, "a large locust" (tree).

For Versex.—As a goodols is so frequently the scene of love-making, it may be called a "court-ship!"

THE WHEST STATEMES-Dirrypated once.

Why is a convent like an empty house?—Because it is a nuninhabited place.

Why is a rook with a cold like a preparation of al-rate of allows !-- Because his caws wich.

(K)meer or ran Barn-Seturday night.

Most Lazar. -- If a mermald wore a veil, we sup-oced it would be a " water-' fall f."

A "Propose Cos"-Mohammed's Coffee!

To Marrical, Boyanters.—Do leaves in automo suf-er from "fulling sickness?"

Hz m .- A man with an "open countenance" is al-

Norton.—"But if I put my money in the savings-bank," inquired one son of Erin of another, "when can I draw it out again?" "Och," replied his friend, "sure an' if you put it in to-day you can draw it out again to-morrow, by giving a formight's notice."

Norserse is not Conserve,—A story is told of two Scotemen who traveled together three days in a stage-coach without a word ever passing between them. On the fourth day one of them at length ventured to remark that it was a fine morning. "And who said it wasn't?" was the reply.

A Hrus-Mest.—"What shall I help you to?" in-quired the daughter of a landlady of a modest youth at the dinner-table. "A wife," was the meek reply. The young lady blushed, perhaps indignantly, and it is said that the kindly offices of a neighboring clergy-man were requisite to reconcile the parties.

Too Ban,—Why is a witty remark like a piece of pork !—Became it's the sort of thing which makes a jeu d'asprit (Jow desperate). (Piease excuse thaipeomortation.)

The place for good pork is said to be "on the

What a difference it makes whether you put Dr. be-fore or after a man's name!

A wars Receiv.—There is nothing like arming one's self against contingencies. Robert Henley, an able barrister, raised to the wool-aark in the early part of the reign of George III., had been in his youth a hard drinker. Shuffling into his place in the Boune of Lords, tortured by the gout, one day he was heard to motter, "Oh dear I if I had known that these legs were one day to carry a Lord Chanceller, I'd have taken better care of them when I was young."

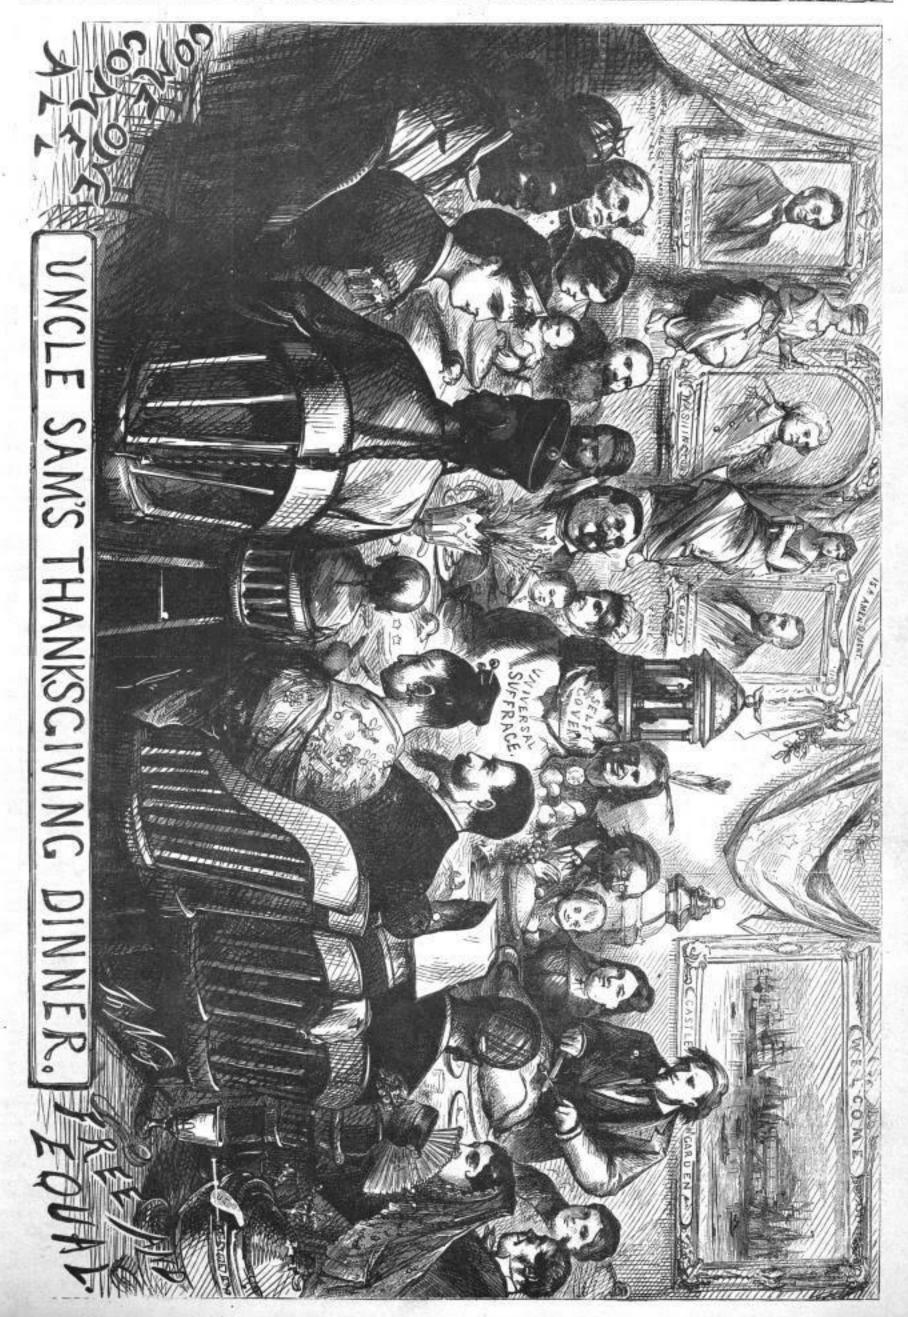

Narouson's Prinow.—"What's that?" asked Mrs. Partington, looking up at the column of the Place Vendéme, during her late visit to Paris. "The pillar of Napoleco." she was answered. "Well, I never did!" she exclaimed; "and that's his pillow—he was a great man to not that! But it's more like a bolster. And it's made of iron, I do believe. Ah, Isaac, see what it is to be great! How hard his head must have rested on his ironical pillow!"

Mayres Chartes (who has been rending the history of the late war), "Oh, what noble men they were who fought so bravely for the Union in the great rebellion! Why, grandfather, you must have been a young man then. Did you take any part in the war!"

Gamera wash. "Yees—that is—well, no—sot eracily. I didn't dight in any of the battles, but I sang in the great Peace Jubilee."

THANKSGIVING, 1869.—[See First Page.]

IN THE TROPICS.

The blue waves best upon the coral recf,
The palm-trees how their rectuals of green,
Kiesed by the soft southwest wind. Myrinds
Of gold and purple plumaged cricies,
Of scarlet-created, snowy-winged birds,
Dash, dassling meteors of living fire,
Across the forest track.
The time shares

The tiger alceps, The tiger aleeps, Crafty and cruel-beooding, in his late,
Waiting the veil of night, as Bei labe,
Shanning the bright rays of the glorious sun,
And battening on darkness. Crimeon flowers
Hang from the creepers, where the boa lurks, Colling her deadly folds, with venomed eye
Fixed on the path beneath. The leopards crouch, Half wakeful in the jungle: scene so fair,
At every covered flootien thereignes. Death! At every onward footstep threatens—Death? Low the red sun declines; within the brake The stealthy jaguar begins to stir, The stealily jaguar begins to stir,
The jackal sounds the prelude of attack,
To warn our lingering footsteps. Safety now
No longer waits upon the traveler;
But discord, raplue, and a thousand foes,
Ganni-cycl, and crimson-robed, and ravenous Rise into being 'neath the mask of Night.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

In gibe Books.-Book HE.

CHAPTER VI.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THERE letters from abroad had come to the vicarage. Mr. Levincourt burned them all, and one of them to any one.

One evening, when Mr. Plew returned from a round of professional visits, his mother put into his hand a large letter covered with foreign post-

"Of course, Nathaniel," said the poor old wo-man, tremblingly watching his face, "I guess who it's from. But you would have nothing to say to her now, my deary, would you?" "Mother!" gasped the little surgeon, clutch-ing at the letter.

ing at the letter.

ing at the letter.

"There, there, Nathaniel, don't be angry with me, love. I have never said a wry word about the girl at home nor abroad; nor I don't want to. But—of course I know you are a grown man" (Mr. Plew was three-and-forty), "and can act for yourself; but you know, Nathaniel, love, I'm the mother that hore you, and in some ways you'll always be a child to me—ay, if you were a hundred! And it goes to my heart to see you hadly treated by them that sin't worthy to—There, my deary, I've done." There, my deary, I've done.

Mr. Plew shut himself up in his little bedroom.

and opened his letter. His face, eager, anxious, all aglow with excito-ment, fell, and the light faded out of it. The bulky packet contained a sealed letter addressed to "Miss Maud Desmond." Within the outer to "Miss Mand Desmono.

envelope were written these words:

"I rely on you to convey the inclosed into Mand's hands. I think you will not fail me.

Mr. Plew opened his shabby little writing-

Mr. Fraw opened ass snappy into wrange-desk, took out a sheet of paper, wrapped the letter in it, sealed it, and directed it to Miss Desmond, No. 387 Gower Street, London. Then he pressed the outer envelope to his lips, flushing a hot, painful crimson as he did so, and, finally, he sat down beside the bed, hid his face the pillow, and cried. The next day Mand received her letter. It ran as follows:

"I will begin with a warning. I warn you not to waste compassion and wailings and lam-entations upon me. I desire, and need, no pity. entations upon me. I desire, and need, no pity. I have chosen my fare, and the day may come, will come, when you will all acknowledge that I have chosen wisely. I have written to you once before, and twice to pape. Having received no answer, the idea occurred to me that pape had suppressed mine to you. I know the kind of twaddle—contamination, will communications—must hold no parley with—I will not write the trash. It can not apply to we. Believe that.

"It may be, on the other hand, that you have received my letter, and have chosen to make no received my letter, and have chosen to make no sign. If it be so, so be it. But I give you this chance, by directing the present letter to the care of Mr. Pless. I believe him to be a faithful creature, and I hope that Sir John and myself may one day have it in our power to show him that we think so."

The words "Sir John and myself" made Mand recoil, when she read them, as though she had received a physical blow. The letter

You will, of course, be taught to think all eril of me. I know the pairry, envious malire of a place like Shipley. How I leaths the name of it! And it is, no doubt, true that I caused pape some temporary anxiety. I trust it was brief. I left the letter on my tollet-table, and I conjectured that it could not long remain unseen. The letter, when once read much resident. letter, when once read, ought to have reas-Sir John gave me weighty reasons for not wishing to make our marriage public at once. I was bound to respect his secret. From the fact of papa having preserved an obstinate silence I am led to guess that he is nourishing resentment against me. I shall be sorry if this be so, but can stoop to no more entreaties.

"The knowledge of the position I shall one day hold in the eyes of all the world sustains me against the idea of passing misconstruction.

"Ser John is all kindness and consideration to me. I am surrounded by all the elegant luxuries that wealth can purchase or watchful affection suggest. I am traveling through exquisite scenery, and drawing near to my mother's native sunny land. I hate affectation of sentimentality, but, in truth, my heart beats faster as I look at the snowy peaks, and think 'beyond there lies Italy!' Direct to me, Poste Restante, Arona, Lago Maggiore. Within a fortnight we shall be there. Your letter must be addressed to Lody

"Your affectionate (if you will lot it be so)

"Mandie, Mandie, tell me how papa is, how you are. Love me, Mandie. V."

The last few words were apparently added hurriedly. They were blurred and almost illegible. But Mand dwelt on them rather than on the rost of the letter. They showed that Veronica's heart was not dead, although her langity spirit disdained sympathy or compassion.

Twice, three, four times did Mand read the letter through her blinding tears before she laid it down on her lap, and fairly thought over its contents.

One conviction stood out clear in her mindeither Veronics was deceived or deceiving.

That she could have no right to the title of "Lady Gale" they in England knew but too well. But was it equally certain that Veronica knew it? Was it not much more probable that Sir John was continuing to deceive her? Might he not even have gone through a false ceremony of marriage? Such things had been!

Mand pondered and pondered. Suddenly she took a resolution. Come what might, she would answer Veronica's letter. It could not be right to leave her in ignorance of the real facts of the case. She would write to Veronica, and would then inclose Veronica's letter to Mr. Levincourt, and tell him what she had done. He might be angry at first, but in his heart he would thank her. He could not really desire to ahandon his only child to shame and misery. If Veronica could only know the truth, she would leave that wicked man. She must!

Mand peeped into the drawing-room before

Mand peeped into the drawing-room before sitting down to her little desk in her own room. Lady Tallis was asleep on the sofa. She al-ways slept regularly after her early dinner, and with equal regularity was always very much sur-prised when she awoke to find that she had "dropped off," as she phrased it. Without allowing herself time to hesitate, Mand wrote a letter companyly and effectionals.

Mand wrote a letter, earnestly and affectionately conjuring the unfortunate girl to return to them, telling ber, with simple directness, that Sir John Tallis Gale had a wife living, and who that wife was; imploring her to disbelieve any specious tale he might tell her, and to wrench herself away from him at any cost. "If you will only believe in the true love of your friends, dear Veronica," she wrote, "and come back to us, you shall never repent it."

Who the friends were whose love Veronica was conjured to believe in was not so clear. Mand secretly feared that Mr. Levincourt would be obdurate for a time. But he could not harden his heart against a repentant child forever. Then she thought of the Sheardowns, and be-lieved that they would be kind and charitable. They might assist Mr. Levincourt to leave Ship-They might assist Mr. Levincourt to leave Ship-ley, and to go elsewhere—to some place in which his daughter's story was not known. Fifty plans passed through Maud's brain, as her pen ran swiftly, eagerly over the paper. She wrote with all the eloquence she could. Would Veronica be willing to return even when she knew the truth? Did she assuredly not know it already? On these questions Mand would not dwell, although they kept presenting themselves importunately to her mind. Her themselves importunately to ber mind. Her one plain, obvious duty was to tell Vercules the truth. How might not the lost girl one day re-preach them all if they left her in ignorance—if they did not stretch out a hand to re

"I do love you, Veronica," she wrote at the end of her letter. "And so does Uncle Charles. You would not think him hard if you had seen him as I saw him on that dreadful day when we lost you. Oh, come back, come back to us! If you want means, or help, or protection, you shall! Acre then, I swear that you shall! Write to me here. I am with my Aunt Illida. She to me here. I am with my dunt thum, come knows nothing of this letter, nor of yours to me. Do not let false shame or false pride keep you spart from us. Be strong. Oh, look forward a little, dearest Veronica! Is not any thing better than— But I know your heart is good; you will not let your father die without the conyou have given up that you are safe, and that you have given up that wicked tempter so soon as you knew his real character. There is no disgrace in being deceived, and I know, I am sere, he has deceived you. Write to me, ronica, soon, soon!"

The letter was sealed, directed (not without a ing of conscience at the written lie) to "Lady ale," and dispatched to the post-office, at the same time with a few lines to Mr. Levincourt, inclosing Veronica's letter, begging him to read is, and telling him what she (Mand) had done.

To this latter epistle came an answer within a

"I can not be angry with you, my sweet child," wrote the vicar, "but I am griered that you should have followed this impulse without consulting me. It is my duty, Mand, to guard you from contact with such as that wretched girl has made berself. The hardened audacity git has made berself. The hardened andacity of her letter astounds me. If such things could be, I should believe that that fiend had cast a spell upon her. May God Ahnighty forgive her! I struggle with myself, but I am a broken man. I can not hold up my head here. Blessed are the peace-makers, Maudie. You plead for her with sweet charity. But she has not injured you—she has injured no one as she has injured me. Still, I will not shut my mind against any ray of hope. It way be, as you say, that she ray of hope. It may be, as you say, that she has been deceived. If this be so, and she re-turns humbled and repentant—repentant for all the evil her treachery and deceit have heaped on see, we must crawl into some obscure corner and hide our shame together. At the best, she is branded and disgraced for life. But, my purehearted Maud, I warn you not to be sanguine. Do not make sure that she will abandon her wicked luxuries, and pomps, and wealth, to live in decent, dull poverty with me. I can send no message to your sunt. My name must be loath-some in her cars. It were better for her and on to forget us altogether."

The tone of this letter was softer than Maud had dared to hope. Here, at least, he showed no stubborn wrath. It now remained to see what answer her letter to Arona would bring forth.

She waited eagerly, anxiously, fearfully, de-spondingly; but no answer ever came. Her poor letter had been forwarded from Arona to Milan in accordance with the written instructions of Sir John Gale (he having changed his plans, and gone on to Milan sconer than had been arranged), had been opened by him, read by him, and burned by him in the flame of a taper in his bedroom, until it was browner and

CHAPTER VII.

A FEW PRIENDS.

BEFORE the receipt of the letter from Italy Mand had promised to go to Mrs. Lovegrore's

She wished, after she had got the letter, to withdraw her promise. She was anxious, agi-tased, ill at ease. She dreaded meeting stran-gers. And although the women of Mr. Love-grove's family had been kind and civil to her, they were not people whose society was at all supported to her.

congenial to her. She had hitherto had no experience of town valgarity. The poor peasants at Shipley were rough and ignorant. But that was different from the Cockney gentility which some of the Lovegroves assumed. The young man, Augus-tus, was peculiarly distasteful to her, from an intus, was peculiarly distasteful to her, from an in-stinctive knowledge she had that he admired herself, and would upon the slightest encourage-ment, or, she much feared, without any encour-agement at all, avow as much in plain terms. She had yielded to her sunt's urgings, and had consented to go to Mrs. Lovegrove's party, how-ever. But now she much desired to avoid doing "My darling pet!" cried Lady Tallie, when Maud hinted this to her. "Now how can ye think of disappointing the poor woman? "Twould be unkind, dear. And I have had that poplin turned, it looks beantiful by candle-light—but sure I wouldn't think of going without you, Mand dear."

"Oh was Anne Hilde! Why not?"

"Oh yes, Aunt Hilda! Why not?"
"Not at all, child. I wouldn't dream of it. If you are not feeling well, or any thing, we'll just stay at home the two of us. And I'll send a little note to Dr. Talbot."

Dear aunt, I am quite well. I do not need

"Dear annt, I am quite went. I uo not noes any doctors."

"Then why in the world, now, wouldn't ye go to Mrs. Lovegrove's? I don't "he to see you moping, a young creature like you. You want rousing a bit. And if you stick at home like an old woman I shall be quite unhappy."

After this Mand could no longer resist. She could not make her sunt understand that the party at Mrs. Lovegrove's could not by any pos-sitility conduce to the raising of her spirits. "But if I am not feeling gay myself," thought Mand, "I will not be so selfish as to cast a damp on poor Aunt Hilda when she is inclined to be cheerful. It would be cruel to stand in the way of any of her few enjoyments."

So the turned poplin was put on; and Lady Tallis yielded with some reluctance to the modest suggestion of Mrs. Lockwood, who was invit-ed to superintend her ladyship's toilet, that a bow of tartan ribbon at the throat scarcely harmonized with the pink ribbons in the cap.

"That soft rose-color goes admirably with the gray poplin, Lady Tallis," said Zillah, quietly.

"But, do you know, I am afraid the tartan bow will be a little—a little too conspicuous?"

"He you think so?" said my lady, taking it off with much docility, but with evident disap-pointment. "Well, to be sure, you have excel-lent taste. But when I was a girl I always used to be told that tartan went with any thing. I remember dancing in a Caledonian quadrille at Delaney once, the time poor James came of age, and we had—myself and three other girls—white silk dres ses, trimmed with the Hoys tan, and every body said they looked lovely."

It took some time to get Lady Tallis dressed; It took some time to get Lady Tallis dressed; for the ill fortune that attended her outer attire pursued all her garments. Buttons and strings dropped from her clothing like ripe apples from the tree. She would have riddled her clothes with pins had not Mrs. Lockwood, neat and dextrous, stood by with a needle and thread ready to repair any damage.

"I think a few stitches are better than pins," observed Zillah. "Don't you, my lady?"

"Oh, indeed I do! Much better. But, my dear sout, I am shocked to give ye this trouble. When I think that I had, and ought to have at this moment, attendants of my own to wait on this moment, attendants of my own to wait on me properly, and that I am now obliged to tres-pass on the kindness of my friends, I assure you I am ready to shed tears. But I won't give way, and spoil my dear Mand's pleasure. Don't ye think I am right in making her go out and en-joy herself?" joy berself?"

Despite the truth of Mand's assertions that she was ill at ease in spirit, and disinclined to go into the society of strangers, her curiosity and at-tention were aroused by the novelty of all she saw and heard at Mrs. Lovegrove's. This was not like a Shipley tea-drinking with old Mrs. Plew, or a dinter-party at Mrs. Shear-down's or Lady Alicia Banwick's.

She desired and wished to sit still and unnoticed in a corner, and watch the company. But to her dismay, she found it to be Mrs. Lovegrove's intention to draw her into notice.

That lady, clad in a stiff metallic gray silk gown, drew Maud's arm through her own, and walked with her about the drawing-room, into the small room behind it, and even into the third room, a tiny closet above Mr. Frost's private of-

from, a tray closest above Mr. Frost's private of-fice, where three old gentlemen and one old lady were playing whist at a green table, and glared at the intruders fiercely.

"I wish to make you known to the Dobbees, dearest Miss Desmond," and Mrs. Lovegrove.

"Those are the Misses Dobbe in apple-green. I am so grieved that the General and Lady Dobbe can not be here to-night. They are charming people. I know you would be delighted with them!"

Mand felt inwardly thankful that the charming Dobbses were not present. She had no de-sire to form new acquaintances, and after a time she complained of feeling rather tired, and saked to be allowed to go and sit beside her aunt.

But when she reached Lady Tallis she found Mr. Augustus Lovegrove, Junior, seated close to her ladyship, and talking to her with much vi-

Mr. Angustus Lovegrove was very tall, and was awkward in his guit; and carried his head hanging backward, so that when he wore a hat the hinder part of the brim rested on the collar of his coat; and sometimes sang comic songs to of his coat; and sometimes sang comic songs to his own accompaniment on the piano-forte; and his friends considered him little inferior to Mr. John Parry. They allowed, indeed, that he had not "quite Parry's touch on the piano. But that was only a knack, you know." His mother called him an excellent son, and the Puseyite clergyman of the church be attended pronounced him a model to all young men. His little bedroom at the top of the house was stuck over with paltry colored lithographs of saints and illuminated texts in Latin. It was rumored among paltry colored lithographs of saints and illuminated texts in Latin. It was rumored among his sisters that he possessed a resery which had been blessed by the Pope. He was being brought up to his father's calling, and Mr. Lovegrova, who knew what he was talking about, pronounced that Gusey had a very fair head for business; and that he understood that two and two make four quite as well as most people.

"Here she is!" exclaimed Mr. Augustus, as Mand approached. "We were just talking about you, Miss Desmond—my lady and I."

The intimation was not altogether pleasing to Mand. She bowed with rather stiff politicness and sat down next to her aunt.

and sat down next to her sunt.

and sat down next to her aunt.

"I was just saying to my lady," proceeded the gallant Augustus, "that their painted hair has no chance beside yours. They can't get the shine, you know." And he slightly nodeed his head in the direction of the Misses Dobbe's apple-green shirts, which were disappearing mu the second drawing-room.

Mand felt disgusted, and made no reply.

Lady Tallis, however, raised her eyebrows and inquired with much interest, "Do you, now do you think that those young ladies dye their hair?"

"Not the least doubt of it, ma'am. I've known Polly Dobbs ever since I was a small boy. And when she was fifteen her hair was as the Continent last year with orange colored locks. Their mother says it's climate that did it. It's the kind of 'climate' they sell in the Burlington Arcade at seven-and-six per bottle!"

"Baslly! You don't say so!" cried Lady Tallis, not more than half understanding him. Tallis, not more than half understanding him.
"Well, I know that you can get the waters—almost any foreign spa-waters—in stone bottles, imported. But of course when you talk of climate in bottles you're joking."

At this moment, greatly to Maud's relief, for she began to find young Lovegrove intolerable, a duet for harp and piano was commenced; and there was enferced silence among the company.
The players work Miss Lovegrove and Miss Lacy Lovegrove. Miss Phobe Lovegrove turned over the music for her sister at the harp; and over the music for her sister at the harp; and Miss Dora Lovegrove did the same thing for the planist. The piece was very long and not par-ticularly well executed. But Maud was sorry when it came to a close, for while it continued she could remain quiet and look about her un

Her eyes were attracted in spite of herself to a magnificently beautiful woman sitting in a nonchalantly graceful posture on a sofa on the op-posite side of the room. She looked so different from all the other persons present, and seem-ed to regard them with such calm contempt, that Mand found herself wondering who she could be; how she came there; and above all, why, having come, she should be uncivil enough to allow her face to express boredom so undisguisedly.

No sooner had the duet come to a close than this beautiful lady rose, took the arm of a gen-tleman, and came across the drawing-room to where Lady Tailis and Mand were sitting.

The lady and gentleman were Mrs. and Mr.
Frost. The latter bowed profoundly to Lady Tailis, and begged permission to present his wife to her.

"Most happy !--delighted!" said Lady Tal-lis, holding out her hand. She had seen Mr. Frost in Gower Street very often.

There was no difficulty in making my lady's acquaintance. She began to chat directly with as much familiarity as though the Frosts had been known to her all her life.

Mrs. Frost appraised her ladyship's attire with giance, of whose meaning Lady Tallis was happily unconscious.

Mr. Frost furtively watched Mand, and at . length, during one of the rare pauses in Lady Tallis's flow of talk, said, hesitatingly, "Your niece, is it not?"

"Indeed and in truth she is my niece, Mr.

"Indeed and in truth she is my nice, Mr. Frost, and a great blessing and comfort it is to have her with me! Mand, my darling, this is Mrs. Frost. Mr. Frost, Miss Desmond."

Mr. Frost and down beside the young lady and began to talk to her. He perceived at once that she was very different in every respect from her aunt. It was quite impossible to jump into terms of familiarity with Mand Desmond.

"You have here ill. I was accure to harm."

"You have been ill, I was sorry to learn," said Mr. Prost.

"I was a little ill: very slightly. I am quite well now, thank you."

"Perhaps London does not altogether agree with you. You have been used to a country life, have you not?".
"I have lived nearly always in the country;

but I am very well in London now."
"You are living in the house of a very old friend of mine, Mrs. Lockwood."

'The change in Maud's face from apathy to in-terest when be uttered the name was not lost upon Mr. Frost,

upon Mr. Frost,

"You are an old friend of Mrs. Lockwood's?"
repeated Maud, smiling,

"A very old friend. I knew her husband before he was married. I have known Hugh ever since he was born. He is a right good fel-

"Ob yes." "But his mother is a little disturbed about him at present. He has taken an obstinate fit into his head, and wants to set up as an archi-tect on his own account, instead of remaining longer in Digby and West's offices. Perhaps you have heard?"

you have heard?"
"Yes, I heard something of it from Mrs.
Lockwood; and from my friends, Captain and Mrs. Sheardown."

"Ab, exactly."
"Captain Sheardown seemed to think that Mr. Lockwood was justified in his plan."

"I have no doubt that Captain Sheardown is an excellent gentleman.

"He is very good and very sensible."
"No doubt. Still, on this point his opinion is scarcely the most valuable that could be had. I am going to Italy myself in a very short ti You are looking pale. Is the Leat of the room

* No, thank you. Yes—I am rather oppressed by it. You were saying—"
"That I am going to Italy on business which, if carried out successfully, would enable me to throw an excellent thing in Hugh Lockwood's way. It might keep him abroad for a year or two, but that would be no disadvantage; on the contrary, if we can only personale Hugh not to be in a herry to assume responsibilities on his own account—" own account-

"The curriage west be here by this time, Sidney," said Mrs. Frost, rising and touching her husband's shoulder. "Do inquire!" "Not going yet, surely!" exclaimed Mrs. Lovegrove, with stern distinctness. "Not going before partaking of our humble refresh-

"Oh, thank you very much," returned Mrs. rost, "but I really couldn't eat any thing. We Frost, "but I really couldn't eat any summer rushed away from dinner in order to get here Vone hours are so virtu-

It was perhaps strange that Mrs. Lovegrove should feel offended at being told that she kept virtuously early bours. But the fact was that she did so feel.

"I saw," said the hosters, "that you had scraped acquaintance with my friend Lady Tal-lis Gale. I would have presented you to her, but the fact is, she does not particularly care for making acquaintance out of her own set."

"Oh, that talkative olderly lady in the turned gown? Yes; Sidney presented me to her. What an odd person!"

"In her peculiar and painful position," pur-sued Mrs. Lovegrove, loftily, "Mr. Lovegrove does not feel justified in intrading strangers on her acquaintance."

"What's the matter with her? Is she not quite right in her head?" asked Mrs. Frost, slightly touching her own forehead as she spoke. This was too much for Mrs. Lovegrove. She had felt that she was getting the worst of it throughout; for she was piqued, and Mrs. Frost was genuinely cool and unconcerned.

"I don't understand you, Mrs. Freet," said

Mrs. Lovegrove, "nor can I conjecture why you should wish to—to—insult my friends."

"Oh dear me, I assure you I hadn't the least idea of insulting the poor woman, "rejoined Mrs. Frost, imperturbably. "It would be her mis-fortune, not her fault, you know, after all! But you said something yourself about her peculiar and painful position

Mrs. Lovegrove faced round solemaly. "I did so, Mrs. Frost," she said. "And poor dear Lady Tallis's position is indeed a sad one. husband—a man of enormous wealth, but of so profligate a character that I shudder to breathe his name in the same atmosphere where my daughters are—her husband," continued Mra. Lovegrove, reaching a climax of impressiveness, and lowering her voice almost to a whisper, "has gone off and deserted her?"

"Heally? Very shocking! But," added Mrs. Frost, "do you know, I think not, on the whole, very surprising!"

That night, in the seclusion of their chamber. bushend-a man of enormous wealth, but of so

That night, in the seclusion of their chamber, Mrs. Lovegrove informed her husband that, come what might, she would never, on any con-sideration, invite "that woman"—so she designated Mrs. Frost-inside her doors again.
"Pools, Sarah!" said Mr. Lovegrove, "why not?"

"Why not, Augustus? I wonder that you can ask! Her insolence and airs are beyond bearing. And did you see her gown?"

"A black gown, wasn't it? It looked very neat. I though "Very neat! If three guiness a yard paid for that lace it was trimmed with I will under-take to est it. That is all, Augustus!"

But yet that proved to be not quite all. And Mr. Lovegrove had to listen to a long cata-logue of Mrs. Frost's misdameanors until he fell asieen.

Mrs. Freet, on her side, declared that she had been bored to death; that she had never seen been torest to death; that she had never seen any thing like the collection of creatures Mrs. Lovegrove had gathered together; that they had stared at her (Mrs. Frost) as though she were a savage; and, finally, she asked her husband what good had been done by her going there at all, seeing that that abourd woman, Mrs. Lovegrove, had chosen to take offense, and walk away from her in a huff! ber in a huff!

"No good at all, Georgina, certainly, unless you had chosen to behave with civility, when you knew how I had begged you to do so."

"Really, I was perfectly civil. But Mrs.
Lovegrove tried to quarrel with me because I was not overwhelmed by the honor and glory of being introduced to that ridiculous old Irish-

"Lady Tallie's niece is, at all events, a very charming creature."

"The golden-haired girl in white? Welly-yes, perhaps; I did not speak to her. Cer-tainly she did look different from the rest of the menagerie. Those apple-green creatures! Ugh! They set one's teeth on edge!" "You must call on Lady Tallis, Georgina. I want you to invite the girl, and take her into society a little."

"I? Thanks! I really can not undertake to chaperon all your clients' daughters and nieces and cousins, and Heaven knows who be-

"Lady Tallis Gale is no client of mine."
"Why do you trouble yourself about her,

"Georgy, listen: this is a case in which your woman's tact might belp me, if you would em-ploy it on my behalf. There is some foolish love-making going on between Hugh Lockwood and this Miss Desmond. The girl is different from what I expected. She is very attractive. Now, it is very undesirable that young Lockwood should entangle himself in an engagement just "Very undesirable for whom?" asked Mrs. Frost, yawning behind her fan. "For—for his mother."

"Really? Well, I should suppose that very trenchant little person with the prominent jaw was able to manage her own business. I am was able to manage her own business. I am sorry I can not get up any vital uncerest in the case. But you know Mrs. Lockwood is not a dear old friend of wire?"

Mrs. Frost had for a brief time been really a little jealous of Zillah. And alse still affected to be so whenever it suited her, although she felt tolerably certain that whatever were the atrong its of intimacy between her husband and Mrs. Lockwood, there was no echo in it of an old Lockwood, there was no echo in it of an old Lockwoon, seed love story, seed Mr. "Suppose I tell you, Georgina," said Mr. Frost, suppressing the hot words of anger which rose to his lips, "that it would be undesirable for me that Hugh Lockwood should engage him-

"What in the world can it matter to you, Sidney?"

"There are business complications in the affair " said Mr. Frost, slowly. "But so long as "There are business complications in the af-fair," said Mr. Frost, slowly. "But so long as these young folks are living in the same house and meeting daily, and so long as the young lady is mewed up there without any other so-ciety, it is in the course of nature that she should be disposed to fancy herself in love with Hugh. As to him, I am not surprised. The girl is full of sense and sweetness, and is a thorough gentle-month. But Hugh, such to marry some of woman. But Hugh ought to marry so with a few thousands of her own. Mi mend is very poor. Now, if you would give her some pleasant society, and let her see something e world, there would be less fear of Hugh and her making fools of themselves.

"Why don't you tell all that to Lady What's-her-name?" asked Mrs. Frost, loaning back in the carriage with closed eyes. "She is the proper person to look after her niece."

"I tell it to you because I choose that you shall obey me!" thundered Mr. Frost, furiously. "It is not enough that you drive me half wild by your extravagance; that you have neither common gratitude nor common consideration for your husband; but you thwart me at every turn. You deliberately put yourself in opposi-tion to every plan or wish of mine. You dis-gust by your arrogance the people whom it is my special interest to be on good terms with; and you seek the company of fashionable fools who teach you to squander my money and de-spise my friends. Take care, Georgina! I warn you to take care! There are limits to even my indulgence.

Mr. Frost had uttered the last words in his heat, after the carriage had drawn up at his own door. And the words had been heard by the servant who opened it.

Mrs. Frost was mortified. She even shed a few tears. But her husband's wrath was flam-ing too high to be extinguished by a few tears

'That is all I get," said Mrs. Frost to herself, as her maid was brushing out her hair, "for consenting to go near that odious Bedford Square set at all! I was a fool to consent. I don't believe a word about its being important to Sidney whether Hugh Lockwood marries a princess or a panper. It is merely to carry out some scheme of that artful little creature Mrs. Lockwood. But she shall find that whatever her influence over my husband may be, she can not make us an accomplice in her plots."

HENRY COOPER.

U. S. SENATOR FROM TENNESSER.

Mn. Haway Cooran, elected to the United States Senate by the Tennessee Legislature, Oc-tober 22, is one of a trio of brothers of acknowledged ability, and eminent in the legal profession. Judge Coopen himself is represented to be a man of irrepreachable character, and to have an unblemished reputation as a politician. He was a Union man during the war, if one may be so designated who held a strictly neutral po-sition. His old political affiliation was with the Whig party. He has never been a personal ap-plicant for office, and has never been defeated in any canvass before the people. When the late Senatorial conflict in the Tennessee Legislature reached the point where it was evident that Evasames could not be elected, the latter proposed a concentration upon Judge Coorse. The Nashville Republican Banner regards his election as "the triumph of a truly conservative, pe-cific, national, and progressive public sentiment."

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Convenentees have received a warning that their evil deeds, though long concealed, will sarely be brought to light while we have been detectives in the Secret fervice Corps. Counterfeit revenue stamps appeared in the market about two mouths ago, since which time Colonel Whitely, of the Tressury Depart-ment, and his assistants have been questly but effect-nally at work. A week or two are an engager, who ually at work. A week or two ago an engraver, who has hitherto borne an unblemished reputation, and has hitherto borns an unblemished reputation, and has worked for the best firms in the country, was ar-This led to the arrest of others on suspicion : and last week numerous implements for the mann facture of counterfelt stamps and coin were discov ered and seized in a remote house on Staten Island. Buried in the garden the officers discovered a large tin box, which was found to contain 10,500 counterfelt revence stamps, in large sheets, the plates for print-ing, dies, rollers, and every denomination of stamps, from one cent to eighty dollars. In the box was also a die for making three-cent aliver pieces, steel dies for etamping coins, and thes for arithmetical figures; and etamping coins, and does an artificiation figures; and in the lower room of the house was frund a perforating press for punching the boles between the stamps on the printed sheets. The engraving was of exceed-ingly fine workmanship; and it is believed that a large quantity of bogus stamps have been put in cir

Thanksgiving-day way have lost some of the pecul-iar significance which was attached to its observance in olden times, as certain Massachusetts clergymen say; but never let it be abolished, say we. The day is full of tender memories of home and country, and may it be ever must gratefully observed i

A new work, which will probably attract o able attention, is now being prepared by Mr. Darwin. The main conclusions which are drawn in regard to lower animals to his "Origin of Species" will be applied to man in this new book.

plied to man in this new book.

Amberst College has now 850 students. A best crew has been organised by each of the three lower classes.—At Dartmouth there are 418 students, including all departments. This college has now threty-eight one thousand dollar scholarships.—The Hail stand Observatory at Princeton is nearly completed. Ex-President Mileson is writing a history of the college.—The Hamboldt scholarship at Harvard College will realize $300 from the recent centennial celebration and subscriptions.—The Judd Scientific Hall for Wasseyas University, Middletown, is commenced and will probably be finished within the next year. This will be a memorial edition to a young son of fix.—A who died a few months ago, at the ago of reveive Young as he was be had traveled crimatively, we a fine musician, and convergent with the Greek, Latin. seician, and conversant with the Greek, Latin somewhat in advance of the Sophomore clars, and was looking forward with bright anticipations to co-lege lik.—The term of Barilington has ruled thirty thousand dollars for the University of Vermont; and, in consequence of this liberality, fifty thousand more have been relatived. ave been pledged.

A novel breach of promise case is before the Baden courts, originating in the revenge a rejected lover de-sired to obtain. A lady received a proposition of sired to obtain. A lady received a proposition of marriage by letter from a fashionable physician or Heldelberg, who wished secrecy for the time, as his father opposed the union. A correspondence was carried on, the lady bought her trouseess, and the presumed lover sent presents. At last it was announced that the family opposition was removed, and the betworked went to Heldelberg for introduction and marriage. Then it appeared that the whole thing was a hoar, the letters forged, and the physician cutirely ignorant of the affair.

The reunion of the Old and New School Presbyterians is a great and important event in the history of one of our largest religious denominations. It will be accomplished by a nearly unanimous vote, and the tion will be taken this present week at the meeting at Pittsburg, Pennsylvan

The organ which has just been completed for the new building of the Young Men's Christian Associa-tion has already been privately exhibited to a select few, and highly approved by them. We understand the Association will soon give a grand concert, when the public will have opportunity to indge of the mer-tes of this new instrument. It was built at a cost of t ber thousand dollars, and combines many pe cultar features.

Baron James de Rothschild, who died about a year ago, left behind him a history of the monetary specu-lations and loans he was engaged in during his long residence in Paris, which is now being printed in the Rev. Dr. Breckinridge never could endure the habit which some students passess of answering questions by asking one themselves. "Where," inquired the by asking one themselves. "Where," inquired the Doctor once of a dull follow, who always managed to gain some time by raising a query of some kind— "where was Solomon's Temple?" "Hem: do you refer to its location, file?" "Yes," growled the Doc-tor in his deepest tones, "I refer to its location, or to any thing class about it that may be embraced under the word "where."

Two hundred and fifty-five specimens of American and foreign art are on exhibition at the National Academy of Design, which was opened to the public last week. The collection is much smaller that it has been in provious years: but it contains enough of insany visits from the lover of art- as well as from the critic.

Pather Hyacinthe is said to have a purpose of ca-tablishing a newspaper in Paris called Le Christim, which shall be both political and religious in its char-seter. Such a paper, well conducted, would be a bless-ing to Paris—provided it is not conficuted:

Fanny Fern gives her views about women harbers thus: "There is no man who would not rather be shaved by a woman than to have a great lumbering man pawing about his jugular vein, and poking him to the the to get up when another man's turn came. I don't say how his wife might like it, but I am very sure he would; and as to his wife why—she could have now other man couldn't she?" shave some other man, couldn't she?"

The Board of Health is indefitigable in efforts to ferret out the fithy localities which contain the s of epidemic diseases. It is estimated that there are now no less than 100,000,000 galloos of stagmant wa-ter in lots between Sixty-fifth Street and the Park, which the sewers can not dealn on account of inferior construction and limited capacity.

An English druggist makes an excellent suggestion. in regard to the sale of poisonous substances. He pro-poses that, in addition to the word "poison," the la-bels should have printed on their margins the appropriate antidotes for each class of poisons. A bottle containing a mineral acid, for instance, would have on its label:

If sales by sections, give (related with water) challs, very, or whiting, or calling exceptings.

If similar labels accompanied all deadly drugs that were dispensed, not a few lives would be save

Among queer associations of recent date, the Fat Man's Association is one of the fungrest. Yet the Man's Association is one of the furnment. Yet the thirteen articles of its Constitution are very sensible. Only two hundred pounders, and those more weighty yet, are allowed the privilege of membership. But if any are so unfortunate as to decrease in weight after admission, the fault is pardoned, and they are not expelled. No drunkards nor incane persons are admitted, nor any who have publicly exhibited then selves for money.

A lady of Rochester, Iowa, while drinking tea five years ago, was incited to laugh by a remark made by her father. She choked so as to cause a stricture of the throst, which has gradually grown worse until for the past three mouths she has been altogether unable to swallow, and was sustained only by finite injected into her stomach. Her death at last was from starva

A most extraordinary story appears in a Ficeroce newspaper, and horrible as it is, and incredible as it seems, it presence a account interest which induces us to give a brief statement of it. In April, 1865, two not named Avidou and Carlines were executed pri-vately, in the prison of Villavica, in Brazil. Dr. Lo-renso y Carmo of Rio Janeiro, well-known by savata for his remarkable works on electricity appuned to physiology, and for his surgical shift, obtained per-mission to profit by this event. In order to experiment, on the power of executacity, his design being, if passel-bia, to unite the head to the neck after decapitation. The heads of the two criminals fell within a few min-utes of each other into the same basket. Immediate-ly a compression was effected on the caretid arteries by a compression was effected on the caretid arteries of one of the heads, so as to stor the hemorrhage. The body and head were then placed in natural post tion upon a bed, and the cells of a powerful electric pile ago, set to the neck. Respiratory movements were soon perceptible, and encode regularly. The head was then fastened to the nody by stitches and special apparatus. At the end of two hours a feeble police was manifest, and in sixty-two hours it was evident, in the astimblyment of every one, that a process poice was manifest, and in sixty-two nours is was a lident, to the azimutchment of every one, that a process of cicarrisation had commenced on the lips of the section. A little later other signs of life manifected themselves, when the director of the prison came for the first time into the experiment room, as then discovered that the head of Carines had then discovered that can be an or Carries har been take.

The that of Aveire, by some mistake, and applied to the body of the latter! Nevertheless, the experiment continued, and when respiratory movements reproduced themselves electricity was suspended. The Doctor and his assistants were frightened at a result so mempeciad, but the learned surgices employed all his skill to continue the work which science had so singularly commenced. By means of an esophagian probe liquid nourishment was introduced into the stomach. At the end of about three months the cicstriction was complete, and motion, though still difficult, became more and more extended. At length, at the end of seven months and a haif. Avelro-Carines was able to rise and walk, feeling only a slight stiff-ness it, the neck, and a feebleness in the limbs! Thus ends this overstrange tale, and the scientific world will look for the sequel.

There is some truth in the ideas of Mrs. Barclay, who is or has been lecturing to ladies in Chautanqua County. Mever she preaches, give up it, sickness, as fever can be cared by a smart run of a mile or so, or a joiling ride in a lumber-wagon. She recommends stirring about vigorously when approaching disease brings on a feeling of languor. Moreover, she holds brings on a feeling of languor. Moreover, she holds to the doctrine that physicians should be paid only while their patients continue healthy; and she speaks with admiration of a certain country where doctors are heavily fixed when they let a man die on their

A boy at Norwich, England, is accused of being his own grandfather! The charge is proved in this wise; There was a widow (Anne) and her danghter-in-law (Jane), and a man (George) and his son (Henry). The widow married the son, and the daughter married the father. The widow was, therefore, mother (in-law) to her husband's father, and, consequently, grandmother to her own husband (Henry). By this husband she had a son (David), to whom she was great-grand-mother. Now, as the son of a great-grandmother must be either a grandfather or a great-mole, this hoy (David) was one or the other. He is his own

One of the most annoying things a pusy letter-writer can experience is to find that his postage stamps will not "stick" and, after value ' boring to make them adhere, to be obliged to gum them on, just as if there was no other intention originally than that every one should use his own brish od bettle. There is certainly considerable chance, nowadays, that in the pro-cess of transportation letters will become minus stamps and go to the Dead-Letter Office, through no fault of

DANIEL DEFOES TOMB.

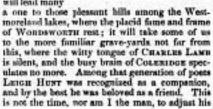

THE LEIGH HUNT MEMORIAL.

WE give on this page a representation of the bust placed upon the monument recently (October 19) erected to the memory of Letter Hunt, the celebrated English poet and essayist, in Ken-sal-Green Cemetery. In the ten years that have passed since the death of Lemm Hunz, which happened about the end of August, 1850, at the age of seventy-five, the affectionate esteem for his character, most warmly felt by those best acquainted with the spirit of his life and writir s, has been cherished as a personal and social faith. The monument cressed over his tomb is a permanent expression of their regard for his virtues as a man and for his merits as one of the most graceful and genial of English authors. There were present on the occasion of the dedi-ention of this monoment the relatives and friends of LEIGH HUNT, and also many well-known literary men. Letters of apology for absence were received from Robert Bhownish, Alfred Tennyson, Charles Dickers, John Bhight, Lord Lyrrow, Earl Russett, and others, who were contributors to the memorial fund. Lord Hougirros presided at the dedication, and de-livered the address. Some years ago be performed a similar office for the monument in the same cemetery over the grave of Tuomas Hoon. The imminble jester, who had so much tender-ness and poetry in his heart, and whose success as a humorist has almost resulted in an injustice to his serious writings, had fewer claims on the general public for posthumous honor thus the varied writer whose lest resting-place has been commemorated by the scalpeure of Mr. JOSETH DURBAN and the elequence of Lord HOUGHTON. Hoop was neither a politicism nor a critic; Littue Henr was both, besides being an original creator in poetry, fiction, and general literature. No doubt the strongest inclination of the latter No doubt the strongest inclination of the latter was not toward politics. He was not a master of the scionific parts of government and national economy, and, if he had had an opportunity, would probably have made as indifferent a minister of state as Anoisov did. But he understood exceedingly well that scutiment of natural justice, of fair consideration, and of abstract reason which lies at the mot of all worthy politics, and which at particular periods requires the emphasis of high principle and the illumination of lambent wit ever more than the dectrines of political science. The early years of the founder of the Examiner were possed in just such an epoch. Both in England and abroad it was a time during which the commonest principles of freedom were denied and outraged. The old military despotisms of continental Europe were military despections of continental Europe were engaged in mortal struggle with a newer military power just as despecte as themselves in act, however revolutionary may have been the fundamental basis on which it rested. In England Toryism was at the very height of its reactionary fervor, and the condition of England was more like that of Austria previous to her recent reforms than that of the old home of temperate liberty. It was an age, therefore, in which the mere demand for freedom, for enlarged powers of popular self-government, for relig-ious toleration, and for pu-rity in the conduct of affairs in the administration of the law, was of greater im-portance than the discussion of elaborate details of politics. In the enforcement of these general principles, now by indignant protest against their violation, now by a quick Voltarian wit (for those who are only acquaint-ed with the writer's later, style have no idea how much pangency there was in his vouthful pen), and at one time by readiness to suffer personally for his champion-ship of the right, Laron Hunt, in association with his brother Joan — whose honest and intelligent, though less brilliant, services demand a passing recognition—helped for-ward the better time which a later generation has inherited; and when the semetime editor of the Ereminer finally quitted polities, and settled down to the uninterrupted cultivation of literature pure and simple, he did so in the midst of a comparative calm which was all the healthier or the previous storm of battle.

In the course of his address Lord Hougaron true Mr. HUNT represents the post generaerature, and that I think is all the more reason why we should honor him to-day.— The tomb The which we are about to visit will not stand alone in the association of men of letters. It will becken muny an observer to the marshy shores Greece, where the tomultnous spir-it of Lord Bynox passed away-to the beautiful Roman cemetery where the antumnul flowers are at this moment growing over the young form of KEATS and the stormcast heart of Suggest ; it will lead many place in that illustrious company, but I will say here and every where that he was a true English poet. Not mere-ly the faculty of imagination, not merely the presence of wit, not merely the great and sedulous accomplishments in our literature-not these alone made him a p these alone made him a poet; be was born one and he died one. There is one sphere of literature in which I think I interactive in which I touth a may say he was absolutely eminent—I mean that of po-etical criticism. In that field I place him before any other man of letters in this coun-

BUST OF LEIGH HUNT ON THE MONUMENT IN KENSAL-

Being regarded as a rabid Republican, Lazon Hust was sentenced to two years' imprisonment; and after he left prison be was fc'lowed for many years by a persist-ent obloquy and injustice which in these times seem absolutely incredible.

After the address, which, owing to the inclemency of the weather, was delivered in a neighboring chapel, the company proceeded to the tomb. The monument was uncovered, Lord HOUGHTON saying: "In the name of the ers to this monument, and of the friends of Mr. LEIGH HUNT, who remember him and are careful of his fame, I present this monument to his family, to the country, and to posterity."

Ture ancient city burial-place in London known as Bunbill-fields Cometery has been recently con-> public walk, laid out ornamentally, and planted with trees and flowers. From time immemorial this spot has been used as a cemetery. of the fen beyoud the city wall a tumulus or mound marked traditionally the site of Saxon burial. In the year1549more than a thou-sand cartsand cart-loads of hu-man remains rere removed from the charnel-house of St. Paul's Cathedral and deposited in that spot. In the days of the first STUART, and during the period of the Commonwealth, burial in this ground was frequently sought after by families who could claim no right songht after by families who could claim no right of interment in the city clurches; and this fact led the Corporation of London, in 1665, to inclose this spot for the use mainly of the Non-conformists. From 1665 to 1882, when the ground was closed, 125,000 bodies were registered as buried there; of these only 5000 tombs are discoverable; but there are vaults lying buried as abundance of the same values by the same control of the same control sed at depths varying from six to twelve feet be-neath the surface. The place boasts no gided

MRS. SUSANNAH WESLEL'S TOTAL

shrines or splendid mansoleums; and yet in this country as well as in England an interest is felt in this humble spot of earth scarcely second to that with which Westminster Abbey itself is regarded. Men lie here whose names are house-hold words in every clime; for we may claim that JOHN BUNYAN, DANIEL DEFOR, and ISAAC Warrs are the property not of any nation, but

Our illustrations of a few of the many interesting monuments in Bunhill-fields ground will speak for themselves with the eloquence of faspeak for themselves with the eloquence of fa-miliar names. They are those of John Bun-yan, author of "The Pilgrim's Progress;" Daniel Defor. author of "Robinson Crusoe," and many other popular works; Dr. Isaac Warrs, author of the favorite hymns and psalms of Evangelical Christians; and Mrs. Surannam Wesley, the aged mother of John and Charles

THE SUEZ CANAL.

On page 740 we give a map of the course of the great ship canal between the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, formally opened to travel and commerce on the 17th of this month, with the imposing ceremonies suited to so important an event. While awaiting the full and accurate illustrations which we shall in due time receive, we, in the mean time, lay before our readers a brief description of the canal and the principal places along its route.

Starting from Port Said (pronounced Say-id), on the Mediterranean, the canal runs southward through Lake Menzaleh, a shallow, marshy body of water, closely resembling our own Dismal Swamp, to the intermediate port of Ismallia, distant from Port Said about seventy-five miles, distant from Port Said about seventy-five miles, thence along the eastern shore of Lake Timsch (the lake of Crocodiles) to the deep cuttings at Toussoum and Serapeum, and thence through the Bitter Lakes into the last deep cutting at Cheloup, debouching about twelve miles further south into the Red Sea at a point about one mile southeast of Suez. The actual distance traversed by the canal is a little over a hondred miles, about sixty miles of which run through miles, about sixty miles of which run through the beds of the lakes Menzalch, Ballah, Timsah, and the Bitter Lakes. Embankments are required on Menzeleh and Ballah, but not upon the others. The average width of the whole canal on the top is three hundred and twenty-eight feet, on a low level, and narrower where deep cuttings have had to be mode. The average width at the bottom is from two hundred to age width at the bottom is from two hundred to two hundred and forty-six feet. There is to be an average elepth of water of twenty-six feet throughout the canal.

The most difficult part of the whole undertaking was the formation of a port on the Mediterranean. Ten years ago the site of Fort Said was nothing but a low, narrow sand-bank, the resting-place of flamingoes and other water-fowl resting-place of flamingoes and other water-fowl that frequented the surrounding marshes. On this impromising spot, in 1859, M. Lassaurs squatted with an army of Arab workmen and commenced active operations. The first hats enected for the engineers were built on piles. A few months wrought a wonderful change in the appearance of the place. Solid hand was formed by dredging out the harbor and channel, and substantial buildings are restricted the radio channels, and substantial buildings are restricted the made channels. stantial buildings superseded the rude shanties. At the present time over one thousand acres have been redomed from the marshy waters; and Port Said is now a flourishing sea-port—a regular place of call for four lines of steamers, with a commodious harbor, immense work-shops, great stores of material, and a motley population of twelve thousand souls, made up of workmen and adventurers of all nationalities. It has a handsome square named after M. Lassers, comfortable dwelling-houses, and wellampplied stores. The great feature of the place is, of course, the harbor. In order to protect the mouth of the canal from the most constantly deposited in great quantities by the current of the Nile, as well as to defend the shipping from storms, two innueuse piers or becakwaters have been built out into the sea, separated by an in-terval of seven hundred and tifty yards. The western pier is twenty-seven hundred yards in length, the eastern one two thousand yards, and between them lies the harbor. The material used in the construction of those piers is a kind of artificial stone, made on the spot from a com-bination of sand and lime. The lime of which these blocks are made was quarried on the line of the canal, a few miles south of the port, there ground, and then transported to the works It was there mixed with the sand, and subjected to hydraulic pressure in huge wooden moulds. The models were then removed, and the blocks left to harden in the sun. This process required two or three months. When ready for use they weighed about twenty tons space, and were placed in position by means of ingeniously-contrived machines.

DR. ISAAC WATTS'S TOMB.

JOHN BUNYAN'S TOMB.

The canal leaves Lake Menzaleh at a place called Kantara, on the Desert, and passes over two miles of sand-hills to Lake Ballah, through which it again cuts in the same way for eight miles. Then comes the first deep land-cutting, from Ferdane to Lake Timsah, the deepest of which is near El Guisr, and from sixty to seventy feet. Twenty thousand Fellahs were employed for two years in cutting a channel to the Mediterranean, to float the steam dredges and fill the shallow basin of Timsah, formerly fed by the Nile inundation only. This lake is the central point of the work, and on its shore stands the new town of Ismailia, named after the Viceroy. It is the "inland" port of the canal, councering by fresh-water canal with Zaguzig, fifty miles distant in the interior, and opening a transit for the rich agricultural products of that region. The journey from Port Said to Ismailia occupies about sleven hours; from Ismailia to Suez about sixteen.

about sixteen.

Between Lake Ballah and Suez there are two points (the only ones along the route subject to danger from this source) where extensive precautions have been taken to prevent the drifting sand from filling the bed of the canal, viz., at El Guisr and Serspeum. At the latter point it is preposed to irrigate the banks and plant them with trees, as the most effectual means of protection.

At Sucz, the southern terminus of the canal, the sea-wall is on a smaller scale than that required at Port Said. Before the company commenced operations the town contained a population of about three thousand, chiefly Araba. It now numbers over twenty-five thousand inhabitants, and is a place of much enterprise and constantly increasing importance. Of the present population more than four thousand are Europeans. The situation of Suez is one of mingled dreariness and beauty. In front of the town lies the sea, its waters of a deeper blue than those of the Mediterranean. On one side tower the lofty mountains of Attaka, on the other rises the majestic head of Mount Sinai: while behind the town stretches the wide expanse of the great desert, without tree, shrub, or blade of grass to break its sad monotony. But what gives Suez its principal value in the eyes of M. Lessurs is its magnificent harbor, in which more than five hundred vessels can find ample accommodation. Should the canal be successful, Suez will undoubtedly become a flourishing and important town.

THE LATE GEORGE PEABODY.

GEORGE PEABODY.

GEORGE PEABODY, the great philanthropist, whose name has been associated with gifts of more than princely munificence for the benefit of the laboring classes and of educational institutions, died at his residence in Eaton Square, London, at half past eleven o'clock on the night of November 4. His benefications have endeared him to the peoples of the two great Anglo-Saxon nations—England and America.

GEORGE PEABODY was born in Danvers, Mas-

George Pearody was born in Danvers, Massachusetts, February 18, 1795. He had no edneational advantages. At the age of eleven he was a clerk in a grocery-store in his native town. Here he remained three years, when he went to Thesford, Vermoet, to live with his grandfather. At the age of sixteen he went to Newburyport, Massachusetts, where he was employed as a clerk by his brother David. Soon after, his brother's store having been destroy d by fire, George was solicited to go to Georgetown, District of Columbia, by his uncle, Jones Peanoere. The latter, being heavily involved in debt, carried on his business under his nephere's name for two years. In the mean time the war of 1812 had broken out, and now Geonge Peanoere, though still a had exempt from millitary duty, volunteered his services. Among Geonge Peanoon's friends in Georgetown was Elema Reads, who, when the war was over, proposed to enter into partnership with the young man in the drapery business, furnishing the capital limself. The enterprise was a success, and in 1815 the firm removed to Baltimore; some years later branch establishments were opened in New York and Philadelphia. In 1826 Mr. Peanoov, then thirty-one years of age, became the head of the firm.

During the ten years which followed Mr. Paanoby frequently visited England to purchase goods. In 1837 he became a permanent resident of London. In 1843 he retired from his American business, and established a commission agency and banking-house in London. He was already a man of hige wealth, and had performed notoworthy service for the public. His influence had secured a loss to the State of Maryland, and in other ways he had done much to sustain the credit of his native country in England. His business in London became extensive, and he added to the fortune which he owned at the time of his permanent residence in London the sum of from twenty to thirty millions of dollars.

Throughout his life Mr. Phanody was noted for his liberality. In 1831 he assumed the entire expense of aronging and garnishing the American Department in the Crystal Palace. A year later be contributed $10,000 to pay the expenses of a second voyage by Dr. Kane to the aretic seas in search of hir John Franklin.

The one hundredth anniversary of the corporate existence of Danvers, Massachusetts, oc-

The one hundredth anniversary of the corponate existence of Danvers, Marsachusetts, occurred on the 16th of June, 1852, and that day was relebrated in a manner befitting the occasion. Among the invitations to attend the festivities was one to George Pearody, who replied, expressing regret that he could not be present to join in the celebration of this the centennial of his native town. He, however, sent the committee a sentiment inclosed in an envelope, "which was not to be opened until his name should be called in due course at the dinner-table." After the dinner had been eatem, and several speeches made, Mr. Pearody's name was called, the envelope opened, and this sentiment read: "Education—A debt due from the present to future generations." In continnation he wrose: "In acknowledgment of the psyment of that debt by the generation which preceded me in my native town of Danvers, and to aid in its prompt future discharge, I give to the inhabitants of that town the sum of $20,000 for the promotion of knowledge and morality among them." To this sum be afterward added largely, the donations altogether exceeding $200,000.

In 1857 Mr. Peanony peid a visit to the United States, and one of his first acts was the contribution of $200,000 for the establishment of an edecational institution in Baltimore. To this he afterward added $200,000, and in 1866 the donation was increased by $500,000, and on the 22d of September last he gave $100,000 more, making a total contribution of $1,400,000.

making a total contribution of $1,400,000.

In 1858 Mr. Phancov returned to England, and set about putting into penvical effect a scheme of benevolence which had occupied his mind for several years previous. This was, "under a sense of gratitude" for his success in England, "to make a donation for the benefit of the poor of London." To this end be consulted his friends C. M. SAMTSON, Sir JAMES EVERSON TENNEST, his partner, J. S. Morcan, and the Right Rev. Bishop M'ILVAINE, of Onio. In a letter dated "London, March 12, 1862," and addressed to Charles Francis. 12, 1862," and addressed to Charles Francis Adams, the United States Minister to England, Lord Stanisty, M.P. (now Eart of Derby), and others, whom he appointed trustees, he wrote, after explaining the motives which actuated him: "My object being to ameliorate the condition of the poor and needy of this great metropolis, and to promote their comfort and happiness, I take pleasure in apprising you that I have determined to transfer to you the sum of £150,000, which now stands available for this purpose on the books of Messrs. George Prancour & Co., as you will see by the accompanynoor & Co., as you will see by the accompany-ing correspondence." This munificent gift was afterward swelled to the sum of £350,000, or nearly $2,000,000.

HENRY COOPER, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.
Photographed by C. C. Giers, Naseville, Tere.—(See Page 147.)

EX-GOVERNOR PREDERICK P. LOW, UNITED STATES MINISTER TO CHINA. PROTOGRAPHED BY BRADY, WASHINGTON, D. C.—(SEE PAGE 201.)

In acknowledgment of this gift Queen Vic-TORPA Wrose a most graceful letter to Mr. Psa-nony, adding to it a portrait of herself. The letter and portrait are both deposited in the Peabody Institute at Danvers.

body Institute at Danvers.

Mr. 'xanouv again visited this country in 1866.
During his stay here he donated $1,500,000 for a Southern educational fisad, to which, on the occasion of his last visit, he added another million. To Phillips Academy in Andover he gave $25,600; to the Newburyport Library, $15,000; to hailding a new church in Georgetown, Massachusetta, $100,000; to the Essex Institute at Salem, $140,000; to the library at Theiford, Vermont, $15000; to the Massachusetts Historical Society $5000; to the Massachusetts Historical Society $5000; to the Massachusetts Historical Society in Boston, $20,000; to the Peabody Institute of Archeology at Cambridge, $150,000; to found a geological branch at Yale Cellege, $150,000; to the Peabody Institute at Baltimore the additional gift, alinded to above, of $500,000; to the Maryland Historical Society, $20,000; to Kenyon College, Ohio, $25,000; for a library in Georgetown, District of Columbia, $15,000; making altogether considerably over $3,500,000, besides an additional gift to the Peabody Institute at Danvers. tute at Danvers.

His relatives were also remembered in this lavish distribution of his wealth, he presenting them with various sums, amounting in the aggregate to $1,500,000.

On the 30th of September, 1869, Mr. Pra-nony took his departure from this country for London. It was his last voyage; in a few weeks after his arrival in England his carthly career was closed. Mr. Pranont was never married. lways genial and inviting.

THE GRIZZLY. A CALIFORNIA TALE.

Serreso in the luxurious apartments of my noble mansion on Fifth Avenue, I often recall a scene in my life the very thought of which fills me still with terror.

I was not born to riches. I was well educated and extremely poor when I commenced life. At and extremely poor when I commenced life. At that time, just when I was seriously debating whether I should teach school or open a retail grocery store out West, the startling tidings came of the great gold discoveries in California, which set on fire the brain of a world. I yielded to the potent influence of the gold-fever at once, and was one of the very first who went out to the new "El Dorado." I sailed out in a ressel ane new "El Dorado." I sailed out in a vessel which, from the hold to the croilles, was listerally trammed with human beings, and landed on the streets of the embryo city of San Francisco with scarrely a rag on my back.

I hurried off at once to a place just then dis-I hurried off at once to a place just then dis-covered, and whither a large crowd of human beings—the representatives of nearly every na-tion under heaven—had already assembled. Desperane characters they were, to be sure! Convicts recently escaped from prison and bro-ken-down lawyers; ticket-of-leave men from Botany Bay and Norfolk Island, with impover-table discovered, restingly covered over with ished elergymen; retired organ-grinders, with graduates of European universities—all were there. I marvel now at the coolness with which I ventured into the midst of such a crowd of desperadors. But I myself was a desperado.

I chose, after a long search, a place in a remote canon as the scene of my labors. Here I made my rode but and proceeded to dig. There were neighbors around me. In fact it was diffi-cult to avoid neighbors, oven if it had been desirable. No matter where a man might go, some one would be sure to track him. So I made the best of it, and put up with the presence of others.

Take them all in all my neighbors were about as villainous-looking a set of men as I had ever seen out of jail. One was a negro of enormous proportions, black as a coal, with the expression of an untamable savage in his brutal features. Another was a long, thin, cunning, treacherons miscreant, who (as I afterward learned) had been confined for twelve years in the Sing Sing prison for an atrocious crime. Another was a short, thick-set man, with a heavy beard which almost concealed his features, but added to his ferocious expression. Among all the wild ad-venturers whom I had encountered, none were altogether so repulsive as these. They went re-spectively by the names of "Nigger," "Sing bing," and "Firste."

I tried to get away from the neighborhood of those men, but a fatality seemed to attend my efforts. On three different occasions I removed to new places, and actually, each time, I en-countered these men, who had moved on before me. It looked as though I was actually following them. So I tried to get rid of my aversion, and turned myself to work.

At the last place to which we came there was a very remarkable man who had been living there for some time. He was a Spaniard, was tall and well formed, with a wonderful expression of resolution and daring in his face. sion of resolution and daring in his face. His face was pale, his eyes dark, and his general ap-pearance commanded involuntary respect. He lived in a hut above a cavern on the side of a neighboring hill. This place he had selected for a residence some time previously. He was never seen digging any where in particular, and it was generally surmised that he had some mys-terious diggings in the immediate neighborhood of his every

I dug on patiently for some months, and gained barely enough to supply myself with the neces-saries of life. I began to be very greatly dis-couraged. One evening I sat moodily near the place where I had been working. I had lost all hope. For three days I had gained absolutely hope, nothing, "Buenos dies, Señor," Looking up I saw the Spanlard. I bowed and "You have a very deep hole there," he said.

"I should think so," I replied.
"Are you encouraged, Senor? Pardon me, but you look disheartened, I think."

"I have reason to be. I have gained nothing. I must leave this place." The Spaniard's eye lightened up. "No, Sefor,

"Do not?-why should I waste my time lon-

"One must be patient, Sefor."
"Yes, but patience has its limits."
The Spaniard gave me a look of the deepest easing. "Sefior," he said, "if you are wise you will wait and work yet longer.

I looked inquiringly at him, but he turned away, and before I could speak had gone. As I looked up I saw close beside me the trio before-mentioned. They had eridently overheard our short conversation. They were exchanging glances. I turned away and began to whistle. In a few moments I was at my work again and they had gone.

I had a arrely given more than a dozen blows with my pick before I heard a load cry. I rec-ognized the Spaniard's voice. It was in the di-rection of his hut. To seize my two revolvers, and to bound forward in the direction in which I heard the voice, was but the work of a moment.

There stood the Spaniard with the three men around him. He held a keen knife in his hand and stood at bay. They were all armed with "Help, Settor 1" shouted the Spaniard.

"Back, you infernal fool!" cried "Sing Sing," waving me off.

waving me off.

"You murderous villains!" I exclaimed, leveling both revolvers. "If you don't make tracks double quick you'll never leave this place alive!"

The men fell back cowed completely by my terrible revolvers. The Spaniard smiled sarcastically, bowed to me, turned away, and disappeared among the trees. The men walked off secowling and muttering. I, too, turned away.

scowling and muttering. I, too, turned away.

A week passed. I worked on. At last the hour came. Great Heavens! can I ever forget hour came.

hour came. Great Heavens! can I ever forget that time—the moment when the hopes of years, the longings of a lifetime lay fulfilled before me! It was sunset. The clouds were all affame. The river rolled gloriously by. The trees tossed up their branches in the evening wind as though bidding the day farewell; from the forest came a burst of melody.

There I stood, a rough, ragged miner, in the bottom of a deep, wet, muddy hole. There I stood with thrills of rapture shooting through me. All my soul entranced, all my gaze riveted on one glittering mass at my feet.

I was master of wealth untold!

After the first burst of joy a revulsion came.

I had found my treasure, but how could I recure it? How could I carry it away mesoen? Where should I take it? Or, if I did not carry it away, where should I hide it?

These thoughts flashed with the rapidity of These thoughts flashed with the rapidity of light through my mind. I stood now overcome with perplexity.

I heard a movement above me. Looking up suddenly I thought I saw a dusky figure giide almong the trees. "Is that Nigger?" I thought. It was a lonely place. There were the trio and the Spaniard—no other neighbors were near. The first were dangerous, the latter helpless. My strength lay in myself. My resolution was soon formed. I would bury as much of my treasure as I could carry in my tent, cover up the hole, and watch all night.

and watch all night.

It was ten o'clock before I had buried all that I wanted in my but, and covered up my hole to my estisfaction. The intense excitement of the my smissaction. The intense excitement of the occasion already begin to have its effects. I fancied I heard footsteps. A moment after I reached forth to get my revolvers, which, in my hurry and agitation, I had left in my tent some

The weapons were gone.

A cold sweat burst out upon me. I rushed back to the hole, hoping to find them there. A tall figure stood there. He had my pistols in his hands, displaying them with a triumphant ges-ture to two others.

It was "Nigger," with "Sing Sing" and "Pi-

"I am lost!" I groaned. "To stay here is death, to go back to my hut is destruction. I am unarmed. These men would think no more of killing me than of crushing a fly." These oughts came and passed in a moment.

Where should I go?

I could only think of the Spaniard. Without giving another moment's thought I turned and fiel. My movements were seen. I was discovand. With a lead and savings shout they rain after me. Six bullets whistled past my bead, but fortunately none touched me. If ever fear lent wings it was at that moment. I bounded along the path and down the hill and up on the other side toward where the Spaniard lived.

I heard them call on me to stop,
"Never mind," cried another voice, which I recognized as that of "Pirate;" "we'll get them both together this time!"

On, on I ran. The clatter of footsteps was

With the frenzy of desperation, I rattled at the Spaniard's door. My pursuers were close upon

Let me in! Save me!" I shouted. Hurried footsteps sounded within. The bars rattled. I heard a heavy sound, I was pulled violently inside, the door was banged to and se-cured just as the eager blows of my pursuers fell upon it.

"Just in time!" he murmured, breathlessly.

"Up stairs, quick!"
He beld a lantern in his hand. By its light I saw a rude ladder which ascended to an opening above. I clambered op as I was directed. The Spaniard came up after me.

"All right," said he, as he gave me a meaning glance.

The men below had dealt some tremendous blows at the door, which yet held on, however. I heard them eagerly shouting to one another. They said not a word to us. "No quarter" was their motto.

A few minutes of silence elapsed. They had gone off. They soon returned, however. I heard their heavy steps.

"This 'Il fix 'em," said one.

A moment after a terrific blow, as if dealt by some hugo beam, struck the door. The hinges yielded. But in a moment a tremendous growl sounded out and drowned every other sound. It was a wild, deep, terrific roar. My blood ran cold within me. I had beard the sound before, but never so near. Then there arese to heaven shriek after shriek, and piteous calls for mercy. The only answer was the terrific roar which had first sounded, and sounds as of breaking, crushing bones. In a few minutes all was still. The Spaniard descended. He was not gone long.

"It's all over!" he said, returning.

I descended. There on the floor lay the man-I descended. There on the floor lay the man-gled bodies of the three wretches, and in the cor-ner was the gigantic form of the largest grizaly

I left the but and never saw the Spaniard guin. In a few weeks I had my gold all safe in San Francisco, and was preparing to return to

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I HAVE had my WHEELER & WILSON Machine almost eight years, and have never coased bless-ing the lucky chance that brought it to me. Not one cent has it cost for repairs, and I have broken but one needle in five and a half years. The same needle has gone through "thick and thin," for since I learned that it would answer to use fine thread or silk for every thing, I never change my needle, but use the same one to sew thick cloth of many folds that I use for bemming pocket-handkerchiefs. MRS. R. S. BROWN.

New Haven, Conn.

Hiromogen's New Mostrer Managers.—This is one of the nesteet publications ever issued to this country. Its contents comprise Chelos Music, Art Notes, and Select Standing for the family circle. A magazine of this kind has long been needed. Hiromogon's New Mostrery is bound to be a complete success.—(K. Y. Sus.)

A Wine-Aware Youve's Pavez.—The Youve's Courasion, of Boston, amounces nearly a score of regular contributors for 1895. Many of them are among our best known and most brilliant withers.

No REMEDT IN THE WORLD OVER came into such universal use, or has so fully won the confidence of mankind, as Ayun's Camer Perconal, for the care of Coughs, Colds, and Consumption.—(Com.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

A Novelty for Little Pupils!

HITCHCOCK'S 10-CENT BOY'S and GIRL'S

MUSICAL ALBUM.

Containing Six Popular Instrumental Pieces for Practice, arranged for little fingers. Contents of No. 1: Lettle Maggie Hay, Coptain Jinks, Up in a Balloon, Physing Prapars, Set for Joseph, Charagagne Charlie. Sold by all Booksellers and Newsdealers, and mailed on receipt of price, 10 cents.

Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publish 24 Beekman St., New York.

NEWMAN & CAPRON'S Establishment for the sale of HOUSE FURNISHING Goods and Plated Ware, in great variety, is still lo cated at 1172 Broadway, cor. 28th Street.

Also, Builders' Hardware, Locks, Electro-Broaned and Plated Work of their own manufacture. Old household strictes requiring Replating done on short notice. They are also prepared to contract for Bell Work and Speaking Tubes in Hotels and Private Dwellings.

MAPLE LEAVES, enlarged and improved. The best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magnilue published. It will be sent from now to the end of 1810 for 50 cents. Send in your subscriptions without fellow.

thout delay.
O. A. ROORBACH, 100 Nassau St., New York.

NASBY'S PAPER.

The Toledo Blade.

A large quarto sheet, containing fifty-six columns slied with News from all parts of the World; Choice original and selected Tales, Sketches, Poetry, Wit and Haimer; a Commercial Department, a Religious Repetiment, a Young Folks; Department, and an Agricultural Department, all prepared expressly for the Brane. It is the constant aim of the Proprietors to make the Branes a truly National Newspaper—not a paper for the Bact, the West, the North, or the South, but for The Whole Country.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY, P.M.

No humorous literature of the age has been more universally read and enjoyed than the letters of "PARSON NASHY." Aluting always at the occretion of some evid, combining a profound philosophy and unanawershie arguments with the keenest wit and richest humor, the "Confedrit X Roads" Preaches has become famous wherever the English language is read. These letters are written expressly for the Banus, and will be continued regularly in its columns.

A NEW STORY.—He LOCKE (Personers V. Nassy), is now engaged on a new story, entitled "PAUL DENMAN; es, LOST AND SAVED," a Story of the Great Rebellion. This thrilling story will be published in the columns of the Share during the coming year, and of itself will be pronounced by every resolv worth many times the subscription price of the paper.

TERMS,—Single Copies, $2 per year; Clubs of five, $1 75 each; Clubs of tem and over, $1 50 each; and an extra copy to every person getting up a Club.

PAY! PAY! PAY! We pay liberally, in Cash, all who sasist us in extending the circulation of the Baars.

AGENTS WANTED,...We want an Agent at every Post-Office in the United States. Send for our Special Circular to Agents.

RPECIMEN COPIES sent free to any address. Send for a copy, and at the same time give us the address of a dosen or so of your friends, at as many different Post-Offices, to whom we will send copies free and postage posts. Address

MILLER, LOCKE, & CO.,

Toledo, Ohio.

STILL FURTHER REDUCTION at retail,

Im Garner & Co.'s newest style, latest pattern

PRINTS. to 50 cents per yard:

less than manufacturers' package prices. Also.

WAMSUTTA PRINTS, 8 cents per yard. A. T. STEWART & CO., Broadway, Fourth Avenue, and Tenth Street.

$10, $12, $15, $20, $25.

Watches and Imitation Brazilian and Australian Diamond Jewelry. New Styles Oroids Gold Chains, $5 to $10 each. Call or send for Price-List. JOHN POGGAN, No. 79 Names St., N. Y.

FURNITURE.

WARREN WARD & CO., Nos. 15 and II Spring St., corner Croeby. RETABLISHED 1800.

Wholesale and retail manufacturers of the latest strike of BEDECOM, PARLON, DINING, and LI-BRARY FURNITURE, MATTRESSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c., seitable for city and country resi-ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.,

CLOW HORSES made Fast and Fast Horses made Faster. The numbers of Baney's Journal containing these settleles complete, only 15 cents. BORERT BONNER says, in his N. J. Ledger, Oct. 16, they are very inscreeting and instructive, and shore worth the price of the publication.

HEUNTING and THAPPING, and how to Dress and Tan Skine and Furs, &c. The Journals with these complets, only 10 cents. Exposures of Humbugs in every Number. JESSE HANKY & CO., 119 Names St., New York.

" One of the oldest and best." Thus speaks the Bosros TRANSCRIPT of the

NEW ENGLAND FARMER, which is noted for the excellence and follows of its Market and Crop Reports, and the great extent of its correspondence from practical farmers.

Tunes: $2.50 a year for the Weekly, or $1.50 for the fouthly. Send stamp for specimens and premium

R. P. RATON & CO., Boston Mass. A GENTS WANTED for our new work; sells A to all classes, without regard to politics, religion, or occupation. Now Ready;

Our Home Physician.

A new Handy-Book of Family Medicine. By Greace M. Brann, A.M., M.D., of the University of the City of New York. This is new work, written up to date, Quackery, Humburgery, and Oid-Fogy Degene expensed. Bend for 16 page circular.

B. TREAT & CO., Publishers, 646 Broadway, N. L.; TREAT & LILLEY, 111 So. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.,

HITCHCOCK'S NEW

MONTHLY MAGAZINE

NOVEMBER.

CONTENTS:

Cat	GOTTA PA	VIII	Parte	witt and A	riography.
Car	LABOUR AL	LAN	*	,	44
Street	ar or Zor	OANTER		s Andres	Ramony.
Tur	FANT AG			*	Editorial.
Res	D Music	WELL
		se ar Porti
Gar	ATARR		*******		**
		Bost
		LARE			-
					marthutor.
					64 Duamated
Pos	muss. Cor	TRIBUTIONS.			.Original.
		MU	SIC.

Read what Moore's Rural Sec. Yorker says: Rend what Moor's Bural See-Yerker ange:

"Hireconcie New Moorants Managem,—if the excellent taste which characterises this first tense of a new medical periodical is but a preinde of what is to cone, then its publisher may rest assured of success.
Handsomely illustrated, beautifully printed, and well allied, those sixteen pages of liberature especially interesting to lowers of music—such as thographies of Maniman and Laconaire Da Vivet—and vocal and instrumental music, are very attractive and valuable."

This Magnatus is sold by booksellers and newsdealers generally, and mailed to subscribers at $3 per Year.

Specimen copies sent, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Political 24 Beekman Street, New York.

Malarious Fogs.

Countless millions of cubic feet of malarious vapor reck from the moist earth every twenty-four hours dur-ing the month of November. This evaporated mois-ture is the active principle which begets fever and ture is the active principle which begets lever and ague, bilious remittents, indigestion, dysentery, bil-lous choils, rheumatism, and many other allients which prevail more generally in the Fall than at other seasons, and some of which, in low, swampy regions and new clearings, take the form of virulent epidem-ies. The best safeguard against these complaints, as avidenced by the averagence of keep series of ware is evidenced by the experience of a long series of years, is the most pleasing and at the same time the most effi-cient of all vegetable toutes. The invigoration of the system is manifestly the best means of defending it against the nauses of sickness, whether constitutional or casual. Nature, as every pathologist knows, is the toot determined enemy of disease, and the paron-yeas of an acute mulady are in most instances the consequences of the efforts she makes to conquer tae for. The great object, therefore, of preventive treat-ment, is to reinforce the system, and it is accomplished thoroughly, rapidly, and safely, by the use of

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS.

HOSTETTER'S BITTERS

This powerful tonic contains also an aperient and corrective principle. It is no less valuable as a regula-tor and parifer that as an farigorant, and there is no danger of exciting the brain or over-etimulating the circulation by employing it as an antidute.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Broms is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been decrived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only called fact the enignium of the press in consequence of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well for The Improved Alumintum rouse is a metal differing en-

The movements are well fu-ished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are monufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Panos roce 116 to 252.
Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which ill be sent, postpaid, on demand.
Goods sont by Express, C. O. D., with charges.
Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VULLEMIN.

TO THE WORKING CLASS — We are now proposed to TO THE WORKING CLASS.—We are now prepared information the classes with constant employment at home, the whole of the time or for the square moments. Business new, light and profitable. Freezes of either were easily some from the to a type revealing, and a proportional seem by deeming their whole time to the issuitess. However, they and give serve except we much as mean that all who see this notice may send their address, and torthe business, we have the magazabled offer. To such as are not well establed, we will not fill to the common well establed, we will not fill to the common work one, and is copy of the Freight's Literary Changeson-one of the isspect and best family newspapers published—all send free by mill. Reads, if from want presents, profitable work, address E. C. ALLEN & C.C., Augusta, Maine.

CIRCULATE IT WIDELY. IT WILL DO GOOD WHEREVER IT IS READ

NEW YORK OBSERVER. $3 00 PER ANNUM.

SAMPLE COPIES PREE. SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO.,

87 PARE ROW, NEW YORK. BOOSET'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS. A Complete Catalogue now ready. Sent from the complete Catalogue now ready. Sent from the new Helf-Dime Series to the Best Senger. Bold every where, or specimen namber mailed for Five Cents.—64 Broadway, N. Y.

The colebrated IMITATION GOLD HUNTING WATCHES, "Collins Metal" (Improved Oroide). These justly colebrated Watches have been so thoroughly tested dering the last four years, and their reputation for time and as imitations of Gold Watches is so well established, as to require no recommendations. Prices:—Herisontal Watches, $10, equal in appearance and for time to Gold Watches worth $100; Patitiewied Levers, sits, equal to $100 Gold once: Patitiewied Levers, artira fine and superior failsh, $20, equal to $200 Gold once.

We have lest commenced making a very fine American Watch, full jeweled, Patent Lever, chronometer balance, adjusted to heat, oold, and position, $30 cunces down weight, equal in appearance and for time to a Gold Watch costing $500.

We charge only $20 for these magnificent Watches. All our watches are in hunting cases, gents' and ladier' after. Chairs, Collins Metal, $2 to $3. Also, all kinds of Jewelry, equal to gold, at one-tenth the price. CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

We are now making Jewelry of the California Diamonds.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

We are now making Jewelry of the California Diamonds. These are real stones of great brilliancy and hardness, and can not be distinguished from the gentles stones, even by good indges. They are particularly brilliant at night by artificial light, do not scratch or become dull by use, and vetain their brilliancy for an indefault time. The following are the prices: Ladies' and Genta' Pinge Rings, single stones, one carst wit.

Gents' Pins, single stone, according to the size of the stone.

After the stone.

After the stone of the stone of the stone of the stone.

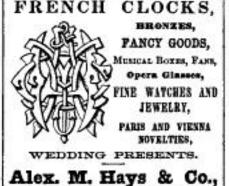

After the stone of the stone of the stone of the stone.

After the stone of the stone.

After the stone of the stone

TO CLUBS.—Where Six watches are ordered at one ine, we send a Seventh watch free. Goods sent by Express to be paid for on delivery. C. E. COLLINS & CO., No. 335 Broadway, New York.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest varieties to be found in the city, and are offered at Low Prices.

IF Sign of Gold Telegraph. _st

s. W. GEERY,

D. W. GEERY,

IMPORTER,

Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Teas, Wines, Ciyars, and CHOICE FAMILY GROCERIES,

Formerly I. & W. Geery,

Betablished in 1804.

The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has been the special hudness of this house far years.

My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquers in
the country.

My stock comprises an end of every thing constantly on hand, a full assortment of every thing appercaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues stoll by mail. Orders will be called for (in the city) every morning, if desired.

Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

WATERS' NEW SCALE PIANOS.

Iron Frame, Occretrung Browand Agrafo Bridge, Melodeons and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured. Warrasted for 8 years.
Planos, Melodeons, and Organs. Prices prestly reduced for Cash. New Tootare Planos, 252 and upward. New Cabinet Organs, 365 and upward.
Second-hand instruments, 560 and upward. Moothly installments received. Warenoons, 481 Broadway, N.Y. HORACE WATERS.

FOWLE'S PILE AND HUMOR CURE.

The greatest and only medicine in the world that is Farrented a Perfect Cure for all kinds of Pium, Lursons, Sonorum, Sauv-Eimme, Cavanen, and all Disseases of the Skin and Blood. Internal and external use. Extirely vegetable. In case of failure, frequest all dealers to return money, and charge it back to me. No failure for over ten years. H. D. FOWLE, Chemist, Boston. Sold every where. Send for Circulars.

HOLIDAY JOURNAL POR 1870. Containing a Fairy Story for Christmas, Plays, Pur-zles, and Wooders. 16 large pages, Illustrated. Scut PREE on receipt of a Scent Stamp for poetage. ADAMS & CO., 25 Broundeld Street, Boston, Mass.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving note times and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, out, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 48 Marray Street, New York.

AGENTS! AGENTS! AGENTS!

NOW I have it! Something New! Attractive! Valuable! Just what Agents want! What every Parally wants! Something for Holidays! 100 more Agents wanted at once! Quick sales! Large profits! A young hely makes 20140 in one helf day! Others can do it. I offer the largest premium ever offered Send for my private circular. W. J. HOLLAND, Springfield, Mass., or Chicago, III.

A GENTS wanted every where. Brown's Patent Don-bis-Core Ventilating Damper gives the most bear with the least foel. No Express charges. Send for Cir-culars. O.R. BRIGGS & CO., 356 Washington St., N.Y.

5000 Agents Wanted, A sample sent free, who eatherly new articles. Salable as flour.

Two eatherly new articles. Salable as flour.

Address N. H. WEITE, Newark, New Jensey.

HALL'S JOURNAL OF HEALTH for 1870 is Free times its former size, richle filterrated with Free-risk. Clube with Haurens' for 21 above their sole scription price. Address 176 Streadway, N. Y.

MAGIC PROYOGE SPES, wooderful and amsoing, in order a parkage. Lankage or Long, so cents. Send to W. C. Wentes, " Actor Place, N.Y.

LITTLE- BROWN, & COMPANY Publish this Day:

PARKMAN'S

DISCOVERY of the GREAT WEST

8vo. Cloth. $9 00.

This volume embodies the exploits and adventures of the first European explorers of the Valley of the Mississipple: the efforts of the French to secure the whole interior of the Continent; the attempt of La Salle to find a westward passage to India, his colony on the Illinois, his scheme of urvading Mexico, his contest with the Jesuita, and his assassination by his own followers. The narrative is founded catiraly on contemporary documents, including many unpublish-ed letters and journals of the chief explorers, which, for the first time, piace in a clear light one of the most interesting and striking portions of American History.

JUVENTUS MUNDI.

The Gods and Men of the Heroic Age.

By THE RT. HOP. W. E. GLADSTONE. Crown Swa. Cloth, $2 00.

In this edition all the references to the Poems of Homer have been care-fully verified, and nearly two hundred errors corrected.

CATARRH.

RELIEF AT ONCE !-- A PERFECT CURE! MORTON'S NEW REMEDY FOR CATARRIE

AND MODE OF TERATMENT
Is an improvement, and a perfection never before stained, it consists of the alternated inhalation of harmless liquids—they are paintess, elementing, deodorining, soothing, and powerful curvatives. Holled and comfort follow from the first day's use, and a permanent care in due course of time. It penetrates through the absorbedts to the very sent of the disease—breake it up at its fountain head—removes all the wretched symptoms, such as pain in the temples, notes in the head, obstruction of the air passages, offensive discharges from the nostries, and dropping of mucus into the threat, "cold in the head," successing, distinces, hose of memory, dimenses of vision, and restores the scarce of tasts and ernell. It liberally extinguishes this losth-some malady in all its forms forever, and curve the most topcless case known. Send a Stamp for Pamphlet to GERRIET NORTON, office 11 Ann St., N. Y. AND MODE OF TREATMENT

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general due that any other in the United States. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Dealers, Made by the LIVINGETON MANUFACTURING CO., 60 BEEKMAN ST., N. Y.

DAINTER'S Manual gives best methods and larest improvements in floure painting, Sign parioting, Graining, Varnishing, Polishing, Saining, Gilding, Glaring, Silvering, Greican Oil-Painting, Gilding, Glaring, Silvering, Greican Oil-Painting, Gilding, Glaring, Silvering, Greican Oil-Painting, Orlental painting, &c. Also, Principles of Glass-Siziang, Barmony and Contrast of Colors, Analysis of Colors, with Philosophy, Theories, and Fractions of Colors, &c. &c. 60 cents. Bod by all dealers, or sent by mail on receipt of grice.

JESEE HANKY & CO., 119 Nassau St., New York.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Present, 36, $12, $16. Offices, $15, $20, $20, and for a circular to LOWE FRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES To agents to sell the criebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Select mide on both side. First machine on trial. For further particulars, address

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Oblo. Boston, Mass.: or St. Louis, Mo.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR

PRIEST and NUN.

Apply at once to CRITTENDEN & McKINNEY, 1986 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WANTED-AGENTS-To set the American Knitting Machine. Price $5. The simplest, chempest, and best Knitting Machine ever invested. Will knit 19,000 stitches per minute. Liberal inducements to Agents. Address AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

$40 for a beantiful Set of Teeth on Goan, $20 HUNDER, at Dr. WAIT & SON'S Bental Institute, 117 East 25d St. (pear 4th Avenue).

THE MEXICAN; or, LOVE AND LAND, A charming poon, flux...led; 1 vol., ismo, 88 pages, cloth binding. By mall, 41, post free. Address FUBLISHER, Ber 184, Brooklyn, N. Y.

PEABODY Stationery Packages, 50 Peents, Beautiful Box of Pajer and Envelopes. Address NEW YORK STATIONERY COMPANY, Box 676, Post-Office, New York.

$200 to $300 PER MONTH made by any man of the property of the second sector of the and selfting Rubber Moulding and Weather String for Duors and Windows. Instructions and Price-Life of Motorials Jurnished. Res. Beauterauxy, Boston, Macs.

SALESMEN.—Wanted, a few reliable, energetic salesmen, to sell by sample standard goods. Address H. H. HICHARDS & CO. 4.12 Chesteut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

57 SEWING HACHINE, Repent and simple of the Will sew the beaviors Beaver Cheth, Leading, or Linen, Address Star Sawas Macmist Co., it Broadway, New York. Liberal discount to agents.

THE SOPRANO. A Masterl Story. By Take LOUIS G. Publisher, Borton

HARPER'S PERIODICALS

THE PERIODICALS WHICH THE BARPERS PUBLISH ARE ALMOST IDEALLY WELL EDITED. -- The Notion, N. Y.

TERMS FOR 1870.

Harpen's Masaeine, Oue Year.....$4 00 Harpen's Weeklet, Oue Year.......4 00 Harpen's Bellet, Oue Year.......4 00

postage.
The Volumes of the Managem commence with the Rembers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent secondary.

the current Volume, and back Numbers with to sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Werners and Baran commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order. Scheenbers to the Macanes, Werners, or Baran will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription empires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Deaft payable to Beath Notes, since, should the Order or Deaft payable to the order of Hanran & Storiums is preferable to Beath Notes, since, should the Order or Deaft be lost or stoles, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

In ordering the Magazine, the Weiner, or the Baran, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

$50" New Subswikers to either of Harper's Periodials furnished from the present time to the cioes of 1870 for Four Dollars.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERIODOCALS,

Resports Manathame in Habrius Pamorecals, Resports Manatham - Whole Page, $20; Half Page, $125; Quarter Page, $70—each invention; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion;
Hasper's Westly,—Invide Pages, $1 50 per Line;
Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion, Hasper's Razar.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display,
$1 20 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

The New Books of the Season

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

EF Sent by Mail, postage proposit, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

GEORGE RESOT'S NOVELS, Complete. Barper's Blustrated Library Edition, Complete in 6 vols., 12mo, Morocco Choth, 25 cents per volume. The set complete, in a neat case, $2 55.

ADAM REDE. THE MILL ON THE PLOSS.
PELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL.
SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE and SILAS MAR-

THE ROMANCE OF SPANISH HISTORY. By Joses
S. C. ARSOTT, Author of "The French Revolution,"
"The History of Napoleon Bonaparte," &c. With Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $2.00.

THE POLAR WORLD: a Popular Description of Man-and Nature in the Arctic and Antarctic Regimes of the Gode. By Dr. O. Hartwon, Author of "The Sea and its Living Worder," "The Harmonics of Nature," and "The Tropical World," With Addi-tional Chapters and 160 Illustrations Svo, Cloth, $8.75.

WRECKED IN PORT. A Novel. By Reserve Varue, Anthor of "Kissing the Rod," "Land at Lan," "Black Sheep," &c. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, Ring of Naples and of Italy. By Joan S. C. Amsort, Anthor of "The History of Napoleon Bousparte," "The French Revolution," &c. Heno, Clotch, $1.20, Uniform with Abbottle Historical Historica

A BEGGAR ON BORSELACE, or, A County Family. A Norel. By the Author of "One of the Femily," "Carlyon's Year," "Found Dead," &c. See, Faper, 35 cents.

PICTORIAL FIRLD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 18121 PICTORIAL FIRLE-BOOK OF THE WAR OF ISING OF Hillstrations, by Pen and Peacil, of the Ristory, Biography, Scenery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Economy J. Losson, Author of "The Ficturial Field-like of the Revolution." With 1802 Einsteinfans, sugarsed on Wood by Lossing & Barritt, thirdy from Grightal Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Valume, 1884 pages, large Sto. Price, in Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.0; Pull Room, $2.00; Haif Calf or Haif Morocco entra, $10.00.

8, A Novel. By Mrs. Octorsian, Anthor of "Chronicles of Carlingfort," "Perpetual Curace," "Life of Edward Irving," "Brownlows," "Agoes," &c. 8ve, Paper, 35 cents, RENEW 11 RENEW 111-Either Hanne 's WERKLY, MONTHLY, OF BARRA, and The Purce storage of the Purce storage of the Purce storage of the State of the October 18 R. WELLS, 889 Broadway, New York.

INEGAR .-- BOW MADE FROM CIDERA, bours, without using drugs. For elevatine, additions, without using drugs. For elevatine, additions. F. I. BAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Conn.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored bair or beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb sent by mail for $1. For sale by Merchants & Druggi-is generally. Address Magic Cross Co., Springfield, Nove.

$25 A DAY. - 35 new articles for Agents. Sumples from H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Mc.

$1140 Bow I made it in Six Months. Secret and sample matted free. 4. J. Pullars, M. F. 920 A DAY'S Barbara sons. Samples and Circu-820 Art Inc. 3, 11 HAND 2 10, Barbar St. Me.

"FOOR ANDY!"

A NEW DISCOVERY !! PHALON'S Salvation for the Hair.

For Restoring to Grave Hair its Original Color

PHALON'S "VITAMA" differs "colorers," and "restorers"

(?) in use. It acts on a totally different principle. It is limpid, fragrant, and perfeetly innocuous, precipitates no muddy or flactulent matter, requires no shaking up, and communicates no tain to the skin or the liner. No paper curtain is necessary to conceal its turbin appearance, for the simple reason that it is not turbid. It is, to all intents and purposes, a NEW DISCOVERY in Toiler Chemistry.

Pharen's "VITALIA" is warranted to effect a change in the color of the layr within 10 days after the first application, the directions carefully observed

IT IS AS CLEAR AS WATER! AND MAS NO SEDIMENT.

Price, One Dollar per Box, CONTAINING TWO BOTTLES.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

If your Druggis has not "Vitalia" on hand write, enclosing $1.00 and we will forward it immediately.

> PHALON & SON, 517 Broadway, N. Y.

TO THE LADIES, - One work's time, pleas-ranily employed, will pay for a first-tate Sewise Macrosea. Address. COREY D. KELSKY. 129 Lexington Ave., New York.

E BWARD SEARS' ENGRAVING ESTABLISHMENT, 45 BEEKMAN STREET, New York.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Piance is fully established as being unsurposed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Pinne is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase. Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Saver & Nixon, Chicago, Rila.; H. N. Herrkerab, Milwaukez, Wis.; Louis There, Louiseitie, Ky.; J. A. McCarre, Nashville, Term.; Kincaru. Buss., St. Louis, Mo.; C. M. Munca, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. R. Jackson, Sandusky, Ohio; Baarrand & Sons, Cleveland, Ohio; H. D. Muncas, Zanesville, Ohio; J. E. Goun, Philadelphia, Pa.; C. Butter, Pittsburgh, Pa.; L. B. Fowerli, Scrauton, Pa., Catret & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hasmon, Rhinebeck, N. Y.;
H. S. Macker, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Uvlas, Boffalo, N. Y.; Rassiscens & Howe, Syncase, N. Y.; Wante, Saver, & Perry, Boston, Mars.; Court Bros., Providence, R. I.; C. M. Louis, New Haven, Court. Mattimes Gray, Sau Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordoniere, Toronto, C. W.; E. Pirlin & Bro., St. John, N. R.

C. G. Gunther's Sons,

502-504 BROADWAY,

Offer a very Elegant Assortment of Novelties in

SEAL AND ASTRAKHAN SACQUES,

TURBANS.

Boas, Ties, &c.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

C. A. STEVENS & CO., 40 East 14th Street, Union Square, New York,

are offering

A choice relection of Diamonds, Pearls, Sapphires, and other Gems, meanted in the most article manner. Also, Fine Jeweley of every variety. Watches from the best Americas and European mannfacturers.

Silver and Plated Wars, a choice selection constantly on hand.

Particular attention

stactly on hand.

Particular attention gives to the Resetting of Diamonds, and the resconfecture of Silves Wase for Testimonials and Weddings, from original designs.

AGENTS for the SALE OF WATCHES morectured by the UNITED STATES WATCH CO. of MARION, New Jorsey. Bend for Circular.

ANTED - AGENTS - 275 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON - SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine with sellich, hem, fell, tuck, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and embroider in a most superior manuser. Price only $15. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $100 for any stachine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more elastic seam than ours. It makes the critical back Stotch. "Every second stick can be est, and still the cloth can not be guiled spart without seating it. We pay Agents from $25 to $200 per month and expenses, or a commission from which twice that amount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO., Perrentman, Pa., Bearon, Mass., or Sv. Louis, Mo. CAUTION....Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming of worthless cast-drom machines, under the same name or otherwise. Our is the only genues and really pessibled these machines menufactured. ANTED - AGENTS - 875 to $200

A NEW AND VALUABLE WORK. WEBB'S NEW ENGLAND RAILWAY AND WHANUFACTURERS' STATISTICAL GAZET-TEBH, a large quanto volume of nearly 600 pages, doubte column. Price 26. Containing an independence of every Station, Village, and City or each Bailroad in New England, together with a description of ever 40% of their representative Manufacturing Establishments, giving the number of spindles, booms, sets of machiners, size and quality of goods, cotton, sets of machiners, size and quality of goods. sets of machinery, size and quality of groots, collect and secol consumed, here power and make of wheel or regime, ft. fiell, agric in N. T., Boston, & Fille, &c. &c. Sent, C. O. D., by Express the voluntions to send by matil, or on receipt of price, by addressing the pul-liabors, WEBS ERIOS, & CO., Providence, R. I.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING,

MANUFACTURED BY WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, tw Send for Price-Lint.) Baltimere, Md.

OD LIVER DRAGEES

Hatter and Furrier. DANIEL D. YOUMANS, 717 BROADWAY,

offers at low prices:
LADIES FINE FUES in every variety: SEAL and ANTHARIAN SACQUES AND TURBANS; WHITE FOX NUFFS AND BOAS;
CHILDREN'S FUES, GENTS' FUES, &c. Importer of ENGLISH HATS for Gentlemen's Wear, Freeman & Burr,

138 & 140 FULTON St.,

NEW YORK,

inelte attention to their magniffeent stock of Men's and Boys' Clothing. It is of unparalleled extent and variety, made up in strict accordance with prevailing styles from the most fashtable materials, and for novelty of deelgn and excellence in workmanship can not be surpassed.

OVERCOATS for all seasons, $8 to $50.

SUITS for all occasions and occupations, $13

BOYS' SUITS for all ages, $6 to $20.

COUNTRY ORDERS.—Rules for self-meas-Out of the control of goods free. Freeman & Burr sail free, on application, their was raise for self-measurement, patterns of goods, sail price-lists, which enable gentlemen in any part of the country to order clothing direct from them with the certainty of receiving perfect fitting persents.

Two Months

FREE! FREE!!

The Most Popular Juvenile Magazine in America.

THE

TLE CORPORAL.

Entirely Original and First Class.

All new subscribers for THE LITTLE CORPORAL for the new year, whose names and movey are sent during November and December, will receive the November and December Nos. of 1869 FREE! THE LITTLE CORPORAL has a Larger Circulation than any other Juvenile Magazine to the world, and is better worth the price than any other magazine pub-

Because of its immense direntation, we are enabled to furnish it at the low price of ONE DOLLAR & YEAR. Single number, 12 cents, or free to any one who will try to raise a club. Beautiful premiums for clubs. Subscribe NOW. Back numbers can always be sent. Address

ALFRED L. SEWELL & CO., POBLISHERS,

Musical Boxes

The largest and oldest depot in America. The largest and oldest depot in America. The St. Statute, Fine St. Statute, Fine St. Novelties by nearly every Signmer. Pine Supply of Facry Geods, Suize Corred Goods, Pine Gold an Silver Watcher. M. J. PAILLARD & CO. 560 BROADWAY, N. Y.

STEREOPTICONS AND

MAGIC LANTERNS,

and over 2000 Views. Catalogues rent free. W. MITCHELL M-ALLISTER, 720 Chestons St., Philadelphia

I was enred of Deafuess and Catarch by a simple remedy, and will send the receipt free.

Mas. M. C. LEGGETT, Hoboken, N. J.

SENT POSTPAID ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.

SUGAR-COATED PILLS OF COD-LIVER EXTRACT.

CERES COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, &c.

NOT OBJECTIONABLE to the MOST DELICATE STOMACH. FIGURE.—Box of 60 Draptes, equal to one and a helf plots of oil, 75 cents; box of 120 Draptes, 31 20; box of 340 Draptes, 31 00.

Physicians having cases where cond-liver oil is inflicated, will obtain better results by the use of the Braptes than with ond-liver oil.

For full particulars, containing medical sectories on physicians' certificates, de., send for pamphel to WARD, SOUTHERLAND, & CO., Wholesale Agents, 130 William Street, New York.

EXTREMELY LOW PRICES UNION ADAMS & CO.

For Ladies.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Merino Hosiery, Kid and Castor Gloves.

For Misses.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Patent Union Dresses, . Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Cashmere Hosiery, Roman and Fancy Saskes.

No. 637 Breadway.

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

SAPOLIO,

FOR CLEANING AND POLISHING.

Saronio will make Tine resemble Silver.
Use only Saronio to clean Walte Print.
From Marbie Saronio removes all Stalies.
For polishing Salves Saronio is unsurpassed.
For cleaning Brase Stali-Bode Saronio has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, use Saronio.
Sample cake sent by mail on receipt of Depot, 211 Washington St., New York Established 1809.

Particular attention is called to our new brand SOAP FOR THE 1,000,000,

Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS OF IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE,

> WITE PURE SILVER.

The experience of FORTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpson, and the use of new and ingenious inboresving machinery, cushie us to offer to the trade a line of goods in ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS, which, for BRAUTY, FINISH, and DURABILITY. Can not be Excelled.

All goods bearing our trade-mark, "Improved Electro Treble Plate,"

ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED; and, if frund defective or not as represented, can be returned, and the money will be refunded.

OFFICE AND FACTORY, WALLINGFORD, CORN. SAMPLE AND SALES ROOM, 19 JOHN ST., N. Y.

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This one Bell, located in the sleeping-count, rings upon the opening of each whildew and door of the bouse. An experience of nice years without a failure proves that it is period, reliable, and satisfactory. Thousands who are using it testify to its merits, as will be seen by a pamphlet obtainable at the office. The public are cautioused against infringement, either in using or vending. The law will be applied to all such cases. E. HOLMES, 7 Morray St., N. Y.

A GENTS WANTED, AGENTS WANTED, A 325 to 5200 per monit, male and female, to sell the celebrated and original Conwoo-Street Passer Serial Machine, the sell the celebrated and original Conwoo-Street Passer Serial Machine, the selling selling to the superior manner. Price only $15. For simplicity and dombility, it has no rival. Do not buy from any parties selling machines resident the senso name as ours, maless having a Certificate of agency signed by as, as they are worthless Cast-from Machines.

For Circulars and Terms, apply to or address, C. BOWERS & CO., 436 Spence St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PAIENTS

-INVENTORS who wish to take out Letters Patent are advised to conneil with HILING American, who have presented claims before the Patent Office for Twenty-three Team. Their American and European Patent Agroup is the most extensive in the world. Charges less than any other reliable agency.

able agency.
A Pamphlet, containing full fest metions to Investors, is sent gratis. Address MUNN & CO., 37 Park How, New York.

CATALOGUES, by Mail, 10 cents each. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 12 pages, MAGIC LANTERNS and STREEDPTICANS, 100 pp. PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 54 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 904 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A GENTS WANTED for Willson's School and Family Charts.

To canvass every state in the Union. Men of ability, and well resourceded, can realize handsome profits. For particulars and terms, address HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square, N. Y.

A LL WANTING FARMS.—Good soft, wild A climate, and healthy. St miles south of Philadelphia. Frice $50 per Are. The place is growing sous narrow then most any other place in the U.S. Thousands are settling. Address CHARLES E. LANDES, Vineland, New Jersey.

TRIVERSITY DEC 1 9 1969

THE REISSUE OF BRARIE JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 674.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. 54 00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1930, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Cours of the United States, for the Southern District of New York,

CHARLES A. DANA.

CHARLES ANDERSON DANA WAS born in Hinsdale, New Hampshire, August 8, 1819. He is one of the old New England stock of Danas. His father failed in business. The son attended the district school two winters, when, at the age of eleven, he went to Buffalo, and entered his uncle's dry-goods store. Here all his leisure moments were given to sendy An inveterate reader, he stored his mind with knowledge of every kind. In 1837 the failure of his uncle threw him upon his oars. For two years young Dana was engaged in settling up the business of the establishment. Within that time he pre-pared himself for college, and finally entered Har-vard University at the age of twenty. He had age of twenty. He had a great predilection for the classics, and became unusually proficient in the Greek, Latin, and Ger-man languages. Close application to his studies seriously affected his eye-sight, and on this account he left the college, in 1841, without regular graduation. Harvard graduation. Harvard subsequently gave him his degree, and his name appears upon the catalogne among the list of graduates.

On leaving college Mr. Dana joined the Brook Farm community. This was one of the first socialist experiments in this country. While there Mr. Dawa become acquainted with MARGA-RET FULLER, GROEGE RIPLET, A. BRONSON RIPLEY, A. BRONSON ALCOTT, NATHANKEL HAWTHORNE, GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, ORES-TES A. BRONSON, THO-REAU, THEODORE PAR-KEE, and others. The farm was situated near West Roxbury, Mussa-chusetts. Mr. Dawa had charge of its fruit department sevyears. time he eral During this time he partly edited a small newspa-per called the Harbinger. In 1846 the com-munity was dissolved. Mr. DANA, then twenty seven years of age, sought imployment in Boston, He accepted an offer from Exizen Wargar, then proprietor and editor of the Chrosotype. Mr. DANA wrote editorial articles for that journal, and made him. self generally useful, for a salary of five dollars per week. He came to New York in February, 1847, and succeeded GRORGE G. FOSTER as city editor of the Tribuna. He was at first paid $10 per week; in the fall this amount was increased to $14. At once he took an advanced position as a journalist. On the breaking out of the French Berolu-tion in 1848 Mr. DANA tion in 1848 Mr. Dana went to Europe. He was absent nine months. During that time he visited the principal cities on the Continent, at an expense of less than $600. He carned, by his correspondence, enough to pay all his expenses and support his family. On his return he was made Mr. GREELET's principal assistant, at a salary of $20 per week. In two years this stipend was increased to $35, and in 1856 he was paid $2500 per year. This was equal to Mr. Greekley's salary, and was the largest re-ceived by Mr. Dana while employed on the Tribune. In 1856 Mr. Dana compiled his "Household Book of English Poetry," and in 1858 he and Groscor Riplay began their labors American newspapers. Soon after leaving the Mr. Dana was appointed by Edwin M. Stanton, then Secretary of War, one of the committee to settle the accounts of the Quartermaster's Department at Cairo. His associates were Gronos S. Boutwell, of Massachusetta, and Judge Logan, of Illinois. The investigation ture the Southern strong-hold silenced the enemies of General Grant, and prevented the General's removal from his command. On Mr. Dana's return to Washington he was appointed Assistant Secretary of War, with a salary of $8000 a year. He held this office until the close of the Rebellion. In 1865 he went to Chirago, and became editor of the Republication of the Republication of the Republication of the Republication of the sold out his interest at a profit of $10,000, and returned to New York. It was reasinly through

It was mainly through his personal insern-mentality and influence that the Sun Association was formed. Mr. Dasa took sole charge of the Sue on January 1, 1868. Since that time the Sau has taken a leading po-sition among the jour-nals of the country. Its daily circulation exceeds 75,000 copies. In April, 1869, Mr. Dana was of fered the Appraisership of the port of New York. He declined it. Two weeks afterward he was arrested, at the suit of Jour Resseat Young, of the Tribuse, for libel, damages being hid at $100,000. The suit has never been brought to trial.

In 1846 Mr. DANA married Miss Errick Macdaritt, who then resided in Walker Street. Four children, one boy and three girls, are the fruit of this union. Mr. Dana is now forty-ulses years of age. He is five feet ten inches high, is well built, has a broad forehead, whickers, mus-tache, and hair tinged with gray aroull been with gray, small, keen eyes, and wears glasses, is true to his friends and unrelenting in his emit-ties. His editorial as-sociates are trented as friends. He is never overhearing in his con-duct toward them. Mr. Dana is one of the best houseless of the best living languages of Eu-

THE "IRON AGE,"

A CONGRESSIONAL Consurrer has recently been consulting with our ship-builders in relation to the decay of a tende once extended and pref-itable, and always hon-The forts, as orable. reported, seem as bad as had been expected, and it is even hinted that, unless some decided change is made in our policy, not only may American ship-building be considered a thing of the past, but the time is not far away when it may be impossible to find an American ship in which to cross the

This question will soon

are happy in being able to give one item in aid of its elecidation—one, too, which shows that affairs are not in quite so had a way as has been supposed.

The bark Iron Age, of which we present a representation on page 756, has attracted the attention of a large number of our merchants

CHARLES A. DANA .- (PROTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD, NEW YORK.)

upon the "New American Encyclopædia." Mr. Dana was associated with Mr. Gazman on the Tribune until April 1, 1862, when he resigned his position and left the office. It is simply just to say that under his management the Tribuss became a recognized political power, and acquired an influence until then unknown among involved millions of dollars. His labors at Cairo finished, Mr. Dana was appointed a commissioner to examine the affairs of the Pay Department in the Valley of the Mississippi. He went through Grant's Vicksburg campaign in the winter and spring of 1863. His reports to the War Department after the first failure to cap-

"Three better

during the past two or three weeks, while she lay at Coenties Slip, loading for Galveston. She was built by Hannan & Hollingsworth, of Wilmington, Delaware, for Messra. TUPPER & BEAT-TIR, of this city. She is the first large iron sailing vessel constructed in this country; and, as the owners state, cost about as little as the average of their Clyde estimates for a similar vessel. Exof their Clyde estimates for a similar vesses. Fix-perience has shown that iron vessels far exceed wooden ones in beoyancy, in strength, in carry-ing capacity, and in durability, and therefore in cheapons; and the materials at our disposal for their construction are so good that builders esti-mate American plate for the purpose equal to English plate of an eighth of an inch greater whichever.

The Iron Age is handsomely modeled, 155 feet in length, 31 feet 9 inches beam, 7 feet between decks, 18 feet 6 inches in depth of hold, and her register is 680 tons. She is provided with REED'S patent screw steering apparatus, RITCHIE'S spirit compass, Anala's Liverpool double-acting pump, Thorrman anchors, and wire standing-rigging; and she is rated first-class by the American and French Lloyds.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1869.

PROSPECTS.

A LTHOUGH political parties nominally grow out of particular issues, they also represent tendencies of human nature; and in the history of all free governments this fact is constantly evident. Mon, for instance, are naturally conservative, or incredulous and timid; or they are naturally progressive, inclined to believe that the new is the true, and that not to go forward is to go backward. Here we have the germs of the Tory party and the Op-position: the party that would hold fast and the party that would cut loose. The strife, indeed, often degenerates into a mere battle of the ins and the outs, but the traditional principles and tendencies remain. Therefore it is a great error to suppose that, in our political situation, when the Fifteenth Amendment is adopted, parties will be wholly reconstructed upon new issues. The history of each party, its traditions, the character of its leaders and of its supporters, will always be vital elements in any augury of its prospects.

There is a loud cry upon the Democratic party from some of its organs not to race with dead horses, and even Mr. VALLANDIGHAM exhorts it to cut loose from all settled issues and obsolete questions. But this cry has been heard ever since the war ended, and where has that party dismounted from a dead horse or confessed any question to be obsolete? If any question might be considered finally settled it was that the colored citizens must be made politically equal. But almost without exception every Democratic convention of the autumn declared against that equality, and the Dem-ocratic party of New York voted against it. While this was the action of the party, its leaders were unchanged. It nominated General ROSECRANS in Ohio, but his letter declining the summous showed that he was not in accord with the party because he was not politically hide-bound, and it took its natural candidate, Mr. PENDLETON. In Pennsylvania the hope of sloughing off dend issues and leaders by nominating General HANCOCK was baffled, and Mr. PACKER, an original Copperhead, was selected. In Massachusetts alone, where there was no hope of success, a man of newer ideas was put forward in Mr. Joux Quincy Anans. In New York the same old leaders, with the same old cries, marshaled the old forces and directed the old assent upon equal rights and the defenses against legislative and electoral

The party remains the same, raises the old eries and follows the old lenders, because it is composed of substantially the same elements. It is not the intelligent and well-meaning Democrars who control the party policy. It is the ignorance and prejudice which are beneath them. The waves tors the boot-it is not the boat that governs the waves. There is not a Democratic leader in America for a generation who has dured to say "equal rights." How many of them who do not pander to the Roman Catholie element of the party? What Democratic chief in the State of New York would venture to insist that Roman priests shall keep their hands off the public school system? When it is asked why the Democratic party does not throw over the old i-sucs and the old lenders, the answer is that the one task that Hercules could not perform was to east off the fatal robe. To strip off the robe was to kill himself,

The strength of the Republican party lies in the great mass of Antelligent, thrifty, patriotic cirinens. The strength of the Democratic party lies in the multitude of ignorant citizens. The Democratic policy for a generation has been the necessary result of that fact. It was an ignominious and cruel poliev. But while this is still the feet, and until the party demands another kind of policy, what greater folly than to expect a frank acceptance of new issues and a preference of new men? Suppose the Legislature in this State restores phrase is, what then? The work will begin | with the abolition of the Police Commission and the Registry law. Will that course dimin-ish fraud and force at the polls? Will it incise good citizens to vote? Is it conceivable that any of the great objects of government will be more certainly secured? Is it not evident that an election in the city will then be a mere fraud without even the pretense of a check? And is that the celebrated "self-government"

And why should a party composed . such elements as we have described renoun : old issues and old leaders when it has just merceded by clinging to the 17. They are greeable to the party. When the Fifteenth Annoulment is adopted, therefore, there will remain two political organizations, and they will is judged according to their career and tendency. The Democratic party has not now, and will not have then, any great foundful policy, nor any record of more capable and honest administration of affairs upo. hich to appeal to the country. The Republic will have the satisfactory administration of General GRANT, the steady reduction of the debt, the popular confidence always inspired by a chief and Cabinet who are not technically politicians, and the consciousness of the support of the better sentiment of the country. These are positive, not negative, advantages. Democratic declamation does not There is no Republican disaffection, nor will there be any until the Democratic party takes a position which neither its character, precedents, nor managers show to be probable or possible.

THE ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL.

On the 8th of December the Great Council of the Roman Catholic Church will assemble at St. Peter's in Rome, amidst all the pomp with which that Church invests its chief events. It was supposed for some time that the summons of the Pope would be disregarded. But now all doubt is removed. Bishops, abbots, generals of monastic orders, and other ecclesiastics have received and obeyed the call of their Holy Father; and from all lands they are moving in large numbers toward the capital of their faith,

But the Council will not be an Œcumenical Council in the proper sense of that term. Œc-umenical, from the Greek word signifying the inhabited or civilized world, is synonymous with universal or general. Originally an Œcumenical Council was neither more nor less than a Parliament of the Roman Empire, which was identical with the civilized world. In this sense the word is still used as applied to the Bishop of Constantinople, who is styled the "Œcumenical Patriarch." In the early Christian centuries the whole ecclesiastical organization of the Church was based on the secular system of the Empire. Each of the first seven General Councils was called by the Roman Emperor, and at each of them he was present personally or by deputy; nor at any one of them did he fail, directly or indirectly, to influence the discussions. Constanting was more than President at the first General Council-that o Nice; and IRENE and her son Constantine presided at the seventh. This was the last Couneil regarded as Œcumenical by the Greek Church; for by this time the Empire had be-gun to crumble to pieces, and an Œcumenical or General Council of the Church was found to be impossible. The Pope, however, did his best to occupy the seat left vacant by the Emperor; but from this date (787) the Greek Church stood aloof. The establishment of the Second Roman Empire under CHARLEMAGNE completed and made permanent the religious and secular separation of the East from the

According to the Roman Catnolle Church twelve Councils, all of them General, have been held since the Second Council of Nice; but at none of these was the Greek or Eastern Church represented, and by that Church the decisions of those Councils have been disregarded. Attempts have frequently been made to reunite the Churches of the East and West; at, mainly in consequence of the pretens of Rome, all such attempts have signally failed. The last Council called General was that of Trent-a Council which was called for the purpose of making an end of Protestantism. sat for eighteen years, but apparently failed to necomplish its end. Indeed it was even less Œcumenical than any of its eleven immediate prederessors, and for the very obvious reason that the Churches of the East and the Churches of the Reformation were all of them unrepre-

The present Pope, Pros THE NEXTH, not unmindful of the past and not unwilling to give a Catholic or Œeumenical authority to his objects and aims, issued invitations to the "Bishops of the Eastern Rite," to "Protestants and other non-Catholics." But the Bishops of the Eastern Rite have not only positively refused to recognize the Council, but have expressed themsolves indignantly upon the terms of the invita-While the Protestant Churches, mainly through the persistene of Dr. Cumming, a Scottish divine in Lone or, have learned that the city of New York to its own control, as the | the invitation was not a invitation, but only a permission to return and penitently seek admision within the fold of Mother Church, The forthcoming Council will not, therefore, be Œcumenical in any true sense. It will not represent the Churches of the East, which have many millions of adherents. The Patriarchs of Alexandria, which is a more ancient See than that of Rome-of Constantinople, which for many centuries was a more important See than that of Rome-and of Armenia, with their numerous suffragans, will all be conspicuous by their absence. The Churches of the Reforma-tion—the Protestants of England, Scotland, and Ireland, of France and Switzerland, of the Netherlands, of North Germany, of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, of the United States of America, or Canada, of Australia—will all be unrepresented. Besides these, the Church in Russia will be absent, which, although a branch of the Greek Church, has an organization of its own. This immense empire, with its six ty millions of inhabitants, will not have a single representative in the Council,

JOSEPH DE MAISTRE pronounced an Œcumenical Council a chimera; and the forthcoming Council, despite its pretension, will be the best proof of DE MAISTRE'S foresight. In a word, the Œcumenical Council of 1869 will be a Council only of the Roman Catholic Church, and a purely Ecclesiastical Council. For, unlike all previous Councils of the kind, it will be absolutely unsupported by the civil authorities of any kingdom, empire, or republic. It will be no more representative of the Christian world than a Methodist Conference, an Episcopal Convention, a Lutheran Council. or a Presbyterian General Assembly. It will be, as we have already said, only a Roman Catholic Council; and, considering the diversity of sentiment which prevails regarding it among the adherents of Rome, it will but very imperfectly represent even the Roman Catholic

The Council will sit in St. Peter's Church, a part of which has been especially fitted as a council hall. The walls will be adorned with portraits of distinguished churchmen. The floor is to be covered by a costly carpet, the gift of a king. Galleries have been erected for the accommodation of reporters, of official theologians, of embassadors, persons of rank, and members o royal families, who may seek admission. With such exceptions the Council will be strictly private. The Pope will preside in person or by his legate. The discussions, if there be any discussions, will be conducted in bad Latin. No report of the proceedings will reach the outside world; for the reporters will report only to the Council itself. The pageant of the opening day will no doubt be magnificent, and the strangers who have come from far to see the spectacle are little likely to be far to see the speciacio and day, however, disappointed. With the first day, however, the sensation will begin and end. first day the real work of the Council will begin; and thoughtful men all over the world will intently watch the progress of this latest Papel experiment, whose failure would be a serious blow to the pretensions of Rome.

PERVERSION OF THE PUBLIC MONEY.

THE expression of public opinion in this State upon the proposition to give the public money to sectarian schools was last year so emphatic that the Legislature did not dare to de it directly. But in the City Tax levy there was a clause inserted, directing that a certain sum should be taken from the city revenues and given to such schools, Mr. NATHANIEL JARVIS, Jun., was selected by the Board of Education to make the distribution, and after a careful investigation be has made a report to the Comptroller, in accordance with the provisions of the act. Nor is there any complaint that his part of the duty has not been fairly and intelligently done. The result is, that $214,987 have been taken from the city money and given to fifty-three sectarian schools. Of this sum twenty-five Roman Catholic schools receive $153,880, and twenty-eight Protestant chools receive $61,107.

The people of New York are taxed to suport public schools in which all the children in the State may be educated. If the school necommodation is insufficient, it is the duty of the Legislature to provide for the difficulty by an increase of the tax. The words of the clause authorizing the sectarian distribution imply that the provision is made for children whom the public schools can not receive. But eareful investigation shows that proper care would even now make room for all children, while it is notorious that this grant of money for special sectarian schools is part of the plan of the Roman Catholic ecclesiastics to break down the system of public schools in the State. If the priests of the Church of Rome had control of the free schools of New York we should not have heard of insufficient accommodation, nor would there have been a special grant.

The hostility of the Roman clergy to public schools which they do not control is founded in the claim of their Church to an absolute domination of the life of every individual member, They assert that the important education is religious, and that their tenets are Christianity. A school, therefore, which does not teach religion 1 , in their view, atheistic. There must, then, be religious instruction in the schools; but il . only true religion is Romanism. The Roman clergy also object to the Protestant version of the Bible, which is read without comment as an opening exercise in the public schools. They insist, therefore, that the Bible shall be excluded as offensive to their faith; and should they succeed in excluding it, they would strengthen their plea that the education in the public schools is irreligious, because there would be then neither religious form nor religious book used in them.

This is a contest which the people of New York should settle at the beginning. Ample provision should be made for the instruction of all the children in the State in what are understood as the common branches of secular education. Every child should then be required to attend school, under proper penalties either upon his guardians or upon himself. Parents who preferred to educate their children at private schools would, of course, do so. Technical and sectarian religious instruction in the publie schools should be forbidden, for there is already abundant provision for such instruction according to religious preferences of every kind, Moreover, in a community which taxes Jews, Roman Catholics, and Protestants impartially for the support of schools, it is plainly just that the chief religious book of neither should be used in the school exercises, since it can only excite unnecessary ill feeling. But the attempt to divert the money paid by all the people for the secular education of all the children to the support of any Jewish, or Roman Catholic, or Baptist, or Presbyterian, or Methodist, or Unitarian, or Episcopal school should be stremuously resisted as an assault upon the state itself.

It is a cardinal principle in this country that the state, as such, favors no form of religious faith whatever. The state, as such, has no re-ligion. The State of New York, by its fundamental law, is an association for protecting the absolute liberty of every citizen in the enjoyment of his religious faith, whatever it may be, as well as in all other rights. The majority, therefore, whether it be Presbyterian, or Quaker, or Roman Catholic, or Jewish, or Anahaptist, has no right to compel the minority to sup-port sectarian schools. But under the clause in the tax levy there is such compulsion. Here, for instance, are the Hebrew Free School No. I, and the New York Protestant Episcopal Publie School, and the Immaculate Conception School. These are all strictly sectarian schools, and the people who have already paid one tax to educate their pupils in the public schools, by this clause are taxed again to educate the same pupils under a particular religious influence. It is the beginning of the destruction of the public school system, and, although a sop is thrown to certain Protestant sects, it is the work of the spirit which is most hostile to that system, and which will not relax any effort, open or hidden, for its subversion. Nothing can defeat this purpose of the Roman Catholic ecclesiasticism but the utmost vigilance. The Democratic party will yield in this direction whatever Roman Catholic influence may require, And it is a curious fact that, while in Austria the system of public education has been taken by the state from the priests, in New York it is apparently getting to be doubtful whether the priests can not destroy the State system.

JOHN JONES.

It is nobody's business that the stockholders of a railroad company pay honors to their president. Banks, insurance companies, associations of all kinds, very properly cause por-traits and busts of their distinguished or beloved officers to be made at their expense and pleasure. But if a savings-bank, having ordered a portrait of its president, should invite the President of the United States and all other distinguished persons to attend the ceremony of hanging it upon the wall of the directors' room, and should solicit the interest of the public by profuse advertisements, it would be very churlish in the public not, at least, to ask the question who is this gentleman, and why is there such a tremendous blowing of trampets because his associates have hung up his por-

When the statue of GROEGE PEADOUT by William Story was lately unvailed in Lon-don, every body felt that there was great propriety in thus visibly commemorating, in the heart of the business of London, a merchant who had given vast soms of money for the benefit of others. If a bust of Mr. PETER COOPER. or of Mr. Ezba Cornell, or of Mr. MATTHEW VASSAR should appear in the Central Park, it would be instantly perceived that they were the memorials of great public benefactors. Memorial statues are grateful witnesses of a sense of public obligation to individual men, except when a king builds his own statue at the expense of his people, or the directors of a hospital or other institution pernetuate their chief in bronze or marble. That a man has remarkable sagacity, which enables him to amass a huge fortune, and even to become one of the richest men is the world, is of no public importance, nor can the fact be supposed to excite any especial general admiration or gratitude. But a man devotes his powers and his resources, whether money or time or talents, to the relief and improvement of his fellow-men, takes his place with HOWARD OF FRANKLIN OF JENNER.

The youth of a country should stand before the statues of their fathers, not to admire certain qualities which are given by nature, but to contemplate the purposes to which those qualities were directed. A boy, looking at the portrait of John Howard, may feel that he has not the opportunity nor the gifts to do precisely what Howard did, but he will feel that, in his sphere and according to his powers, he also can carry a heart of sympathy and relieve human suffer ing wherever he goes. But the same boy, look-ing at a statue of John Jones, for example, and being told that he was the richest man in the world and made all his own money, will probably answer, "What's John Jones to me, or what am I to John Jones?" There are plenty of John Joneses who have made more or less money, and who have not been especially stingy. But certainly John Jones, who is worth a hundred millions of dollars and gives fifty thousand dollars to a charity, does not so well deserve a statue as a sailor who has starvation wages and gives part of them to an orphan asylum. If, indeed, the stockholders of John Jones's factory choose to build a statue to him; it is their privilege. But why should they take a speakng-trumpet upon the occasion, and arrest every body's attention, and talk about "worthy morals and proper lessons?"

ENGLAND'S DIFFICULTIES.

In the speech of Mr. Gransrows in London, at the Lord Mayor's inauguration, the signifi-cant confession is made that, "Whatever the tendencies of modern civilization—whatever its triumphs," "they have not had, nor are they likely to have in our day or in our children's, the effect of lightening the responsibilities of the Government,

That difficulties thicken about the English is very apparent. They consist of terrorism in Ireland; a supposed dangerous increase of power in the uneducated classes; a growing inferiori-ty in the industries which command universal competition; the inability to produce food with in a hundred millions sterling in value of the quantity annually consumed; and the steady growth of panperism. Political and economical troubles arise together to perplex those who have the largest interest in maintaining order.

Ever since the supply of food in England be came critical, contests have existed between capital and labor of an intense character. The pertinacity hitherto evinced by trades unions was due to the number of laborers standing on the verge of pauperism, and who, as more and more food was needed to be imported, were thrust into that hopeless condition. The laborers of the Continent, quieted by cheaper food and happier circumstances, are strangers to the combinations which in England have lowered the skill, impaired the morals, and diminished the effectiveness of their manufacturing industry, as compared with that of France, Belgium, and Germany. The superiority of the latter in many respects over the English, added to other causes, is, however, having its effects. At Bol-ton, in Lancashire, the laborers a few days ago treated the demand for a reduction of five per cent, on the wages paid in cotton factories with a respect wholly unknown. In various other departments of industry strikes have been settled by workmen on a basis which concedes the inability of the capitalist to continue high wages in the face of the competition to which labor is now exposed. This change in tone comes late, but it is yet possible to create a joint interest between classes hitherto opposed which may so improve the habits and industry of the operative as to make English competition with the world on the basis of free-trade harmless to the kingdom. Complete harmony is now essential

The slow recovery in England from the finan-cial explosion which, in 1866, followed the wildly speculative creation of companies on the cy of a limited liability, and and unwelcome termination of the war in the United States, is attributed by many to the high price of raw cotton; but the English grain crops of 1867 and 1868 having been bad, the large population, deprived of much of their were only small consumers of manufactured products. The diminished consumption of cotton goods in 1867 in England was equivalent to 50,000,000 pounds weight. manufacturing nations in Europe had to pay for raw cotton on the same or worse terms than the English—they were supplied with it largely through England—but whatever suffering they encountered from the high price of that staple was not attributed to a cause applicable equally to all nations except India and the United States, which were both growers and manufacturers of cotton. Portions of the English manufacturers clamor for protection instead of free-trade, and for encouraging the growth of cotton in expensive India, as the remedies for unprofitable labor. But protection would concede inferiority and prevent recuperation; and I young women, and a class of twenty-five at-the effort to elevate this culture in India will be fruitless against the superior climate and lands of the cotton-growing region in the South, and against the education and skill of Southern planters, who can raise enough of this staple at low prices-which must soon prevail-to supply the world.

Charles to the Contract of the

When the true causes of English stagnation are fully understood and admitted, a powerful effort will be made, through harmonious relations on the part of capital and labor, to recover the lost ground, even although reciprocity in the policy of other nations may not be allowed. The ground assumed by the English of ability to compete with all others, which for years was successfully maintained, can not be abandoned without continued and hopeless dis-

It is supposed that a million of laboring men in England, with their families, counting say four millions more, might be converted into agricultural laborers, if the land now approprinted to the parks of the aristocracy were opened to cultivation. As the struggle now going on involves the life or death of those who do not emigrate, it would seem that these parks must be applied to cultivation under a system of laws which no longer encourage landed accumulation. This change will un-doubtedly help the industry of England, but at the expense of the governing classes, which by gross neglect of high duties, and by a dedi-cation of their lives to frivolities and dissipation, have weakened, if not forfeited, their reditary claims. The increasing power of the uneducated classes has been invited by rulers whose prestige and strength have been volun-

The gravest difficulty which now disturbs the nation is the Irish question—not free, in the view of many, of complication with the United States. The large immigration into the United States of Irishmen loaded with hostility to England, and their connection with the Democratic party, create the fear that, if the Democracy should succeed in the elections, the Government here might be urged into at least a very unfriendly policy toward England. But spart from this complication the question in its domestic shape threatens the peace of the kingdom. Sympathy with Ireland, on the nd of supposed or actual cruelty practiced by landlords, has moved those laboring classes which have lately been invested with the ballot; and terrorism makes its beadway without much obstruction from the Government. Landlords are driven away, and the tenant is likely to become master of the field in scorn of English ascendency.

The difficulty is much deeper than is admitted. The difference in religion is at the bottom of it-a contest which Rome will not allow to be composed except on the basis of a complete triumph. The question is part of the wider one which seeks the conquest of nations, and the universal prevalence of Roman Catholicism. The human mind fails to measure the extent of this conflict, which has been active since the Reformation, involving a struggle every where for empire. England may gain peace for a time by conceding independence to Ireland, but only for a time, as she must ulti-mately share in the universal struggle.

In looking at the present aspect of things, it would seem that Providence is furnishing the world with additional proof that but little true happiness and repose may be found, at least en just conditions are neglected. Spain and Cuba are convulsed with revolution. France is disturbed with fear of such an event in case of Napoleon's death. Some of the South American republics are in arms. China full, insists on overflow upon others, and England for the first time abandons her colonial policy, fearing that its continuance may ambroil ber with other powers. The United States affords evidence, in many portions of it, that our republican system is afflicted with such deep corruption as to produce the apprehensions which draw from the English premier his guarded but ominous admissions. The times call for wisdom, virtue, and prudence there and here, or wide-spread confusion may follow. England must summon all of her resolution to overcome s which threaten ber industry and her government.

YOUNG MEDICAL GENTLEMEN.

In the golden age of the Republic, Captain and his mob silenced Mrs. LUCRETIA MOTT, in the Broadway Tabernacle, because of her indecent and incendiary declaration of the equal right of innocent Americans to personal liberty. But Captain Evenus and his mob, although characteristic defenders of the tru-Democratic faith and heroic champions of public decency, failed to save the great Goliath for whom they fought. The gentle words of Mrs. MOTT were more powerful than all the oaths and shillalahs of the Empire Club, and, like the smooth stones from the brook, siew the huge giant of the Captain's idolatry.

It is a lesson which the young gentlemen of the Philadelphia Medical School might pender with advantage. The authorities recently opened the clinical lectures at the hospital to tended. They were modest, intelligent, and sincerely interested in the study of a profession which, in many branches and under many cir-cumstances, it is most desirable that women should practice, and of course should practice with every advantage and with the best possible preparation. In the lecture hall, with the twenty-five young women, sat three or four hundred other young persons, sarcastically called young gentlemen. These last indulged their wit and humor before the beginning of the lecture by shouting, "Hat! hat!" to two or three of the managers of the hospital who were Quakers. After the lecture began, they were quiet. But the lecture was followed by a case of practical surgery, the treatment of a young man with a broken thigh. In the midst of the operation the young gentlemen burst into roars of mock applanse, stamping, clapping, hissing, and jeering, all directed at the twentyfive young women, who sat calmly, intent upon their duty. But lest the manifest desertion of their proper sphere by the young women had not been sufficiently demonstrated by the young gentlemen, the latter, when the ladies came out, erowded them from the footwalk into the cartway across the hospital grounds.

Like the conduct of Captain Ryspans and his mob, this of the Philadelphia young gentle-men was brave and manly. But, we fear, that also, like the former, it will fail of its purpose. If there are young women-and we assure these young gentlemen that there are a great many who are anxious to accomplish them medical and surgical science and practice, they know that the most disgusting obstacle they will encounter is not the nature of the study, but the conduct of the young gentlemen, their fellow-students. Are those young gentlemen not able to see that such conduct as theirs of the other day, instead of persuading modest women that women should not pursue such studies, only deepens the resolve of every selfrespecting woman that she will do all that she can by sympathy for her sisters who are inclined to these studies, were it only to save herself in delicate and critical moments from the possible presence and professional treatment other sex?

GENERAL JORDAN UPON CUBA.

GENERAL JORDAN, Adjutant-General of the Army of Cuba, gives in a recent letter some information as to the actual situation of the country as he views it. He says that the Cuban cause has no absolute need of foreign sol-diers of any kind. The Caban army numbers 26,800 men who have arms; and it is followed by 40,000 liberated slaves armed with the machetas—a weapon half hatchet and half meataxe. The pressing want is arms and clothes. If the Cubans had 75,000 stands of arms, he is very sure they could end the war in ninety days. They have not attacked the large cities and ports because, having no artillery, they could not hold them. Meanwhile there are 30,000 Cuban ladies "living an aboriginal life," half naked upon the hill-sides, suffering inde-scribebly, and absolutely requiring clothes and shelter.

This statement from the camp of the revolutionary army is certainly not encouraging for the Cuban cause. General JORDAN does not say that the revolutionary leaders have money to buy arms and clothing; but for the latter he appeals to the sympathy of "the American ladies." What, then, must be considered the prospects of the revolution? The difficulty has thus far been that no great and decisive battles were fought; and no such positive advantages gained as would justify action upon the part of foreign Governments. But it now appears that no such battle can be fought for want of arms. A new junta, or what may be called a foreign committee of the war, has been named in this country; and it is declared to be their intention to appeal to Congress to recognize Cuban independence, upon the ground that Spain has not yet subdued the revolution; that the Cubans have sacrificed every thing; that they were friendly to the United States Government during the rebellion, and have been for a long time identified in feeling upon the subject of slavery Such claims, if authentic, certainly comnand sympathy; but they are not grounds upon which to recognize Cuban independence. General JORDAN's letter does not describe a situation which justifies the assertion that Cuba has earned the recognition of her independence in the manner which reason and national comity demand.

NOTES.

Among the notable papers in Harper's Monthly for December is an article upon Œcumenical Councils, which is not only timely, but is of very great historical interest and value. It is by far the most complete and learned paper upon the subject yet published in this country, nor does the in the least oppress the style, which is lucid and picturesque.

AMOS KENDALL, who lately died in Washington, was noted for two things: for his influence upon General Jacusson as chief of the kitchen exhinet; and for virtually authorizing the robbery of the mails when he was Postmaster-Gen-eral. In 1835 certain and description In 1835 certain anti-slavery "mail matter" arrived in Charleston. A meeting of slave-bolders and their friends was called, which the clergy attended in a body. The meeting resolved that the mail matter should be burned; and the bags were rifled and the contents destroyed. Mr. Anos KENDALL was Postmaster-General: and when the subject was submitted to him by the Postmaster in Charleston Mr. KENDALL replied that he had no legal authority to exclu newspapers from the mail, nor to prohibit their delivery—but "I am not prepared to direct you to forward or deliver the papers of which you speak......I can not sanction, and will not con-demn, the step you have taken." Mr. KENDALL belonged to the worst class of public servants this country has known.

Two Administration has made no better ap-Assistant Treasurer in New York. In character, ability, and experience of affairs, no public man in the State is his superior; and his appointment is a subject of general congratulation.

A summe of "historical, personal, and critic-A Exams of "historical, personal, and critical epistles" has just begun in the Troy Doily Times by A. Hunker. The landshle object of this excellent person is "to write up the sad history of Reform in my country before it becomes utterly fixed in the popular mind as worthy and honorable." It certainly is in great danger of being so fixed very rapidly; and no time, therefore, was to be lost in unfixing it. Mr. Hunker has not begun too soon; and he addresses himself with great spirit to his task. addresses himself with great spirit to addresses himself with great spirit to his task, trusting that as "the great and good Mr. Nasby" has hitherto saved Kentacky from the horrors of progress, he may do something to stay them in New York. He evidently believes that there is a sunbeam in the encumber, if he can only get Tun most ancient and respectable barriers fall before new ideas. The Austrian universities have always as sternly refused to admit Jews as profeesors as the American colleges to admit women as pupils. But now a Jew has been made Pro-fessor of Ophthalmic Surgery in the University of Innabruck; while in this country Miss Many Hower has been appointed Professor of Hortin appointed Profe culture in the Kansas Agricultural College; and the St. Louis Law School in Missouri has proved that it has wider doors than the Columbia College Law School in New York, by admitting to the Junior class two young women, one from St. Louis and the other from Brooklyn. The managers of the school say that they are unwilling that any respectable person who wishes to study law, and who honorably complies with the con-ditions required, should be deprived on account of sex of the advantages of the Law Department. Such a decision may send to destroy the foundations of society, but it certainly seems to be very sensible. Is Portia so very unwomanly a figure?

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Tus Presbyterian Assemblies at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, dissolved November 13. The union of the Cid and New School parties was the occasion of great enthusiasm. The first united Assembly will be held in May, 1970, at Philadelphia.

The President has appointed Charles J. Folger, of Geneva, New York, to be Assistant United States Treasurer in New York, in the place of General Butterfield.

Treasurer in New York, in the place of General Betterfield.

On November 16 a retirond secident occurred, resulting in great less of life, in California, near San Leandro. A train on the Western Facific Railroad bound eastward collided with the Ahmeda Ferry train in a fog. From ten to fifteen persons were killed, and from thirty to forty wounded.

At Des Moines, lows, on the 18th, there was a collision between a relight train and the eastern bound Pacific Railroad passenger train. A Pullman palace car and two other passenger cars were demolished, and from fifteen to twenty persons injured.

The large frame building known as the Republican Wigwam, at Chicage, was destroyed by fire on the night of the 18th.

Anos Kendall, the veteran politicism, died in Washington, November 18, the largety-first year. He was one of the delegates to the Chicago Democratic Convention which nontinated General McClellan for President.

Major-General Wool died at Troy, November 10, in his eightieth year. Hon. Robert J. Walker died at his residence, in Washington, November 11, aged sixty-eight.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Tax Bishop of London on the 14th delivered a fa-peral sermen on the late George Peabody, at West-minster Abbey. The Bishop said no unlittled com-moner ever drew around his grave so large a con-course of discourse around his grave so large a concourse of sincers mourners as George Peaboly. The reason was that through a long life be had labored for others, especially for the poor. Simple in his labored its, unambitions of rank or power, he found his enjoyment in beneficence. It was his business to gather wealth, and his joy to give it away. His name would be the heritage of two great nations, and would form another strand of the cord binding England and America.

America.
George Peabody, just before his death, made an additional donation of £180,000 to the Peabody Fund in aid of the London poor.

A monster demonstration in honor of Henri Rochefort was made in the streets of Paris on the night of November 19.

November 18.

The Italian Cabinet approves of the choice of the Duke of Genos for the Spanish throne.

Admirst Topets has been elected Vice-President of the Spanish Cortex.

It is said that more than 600 Americans stiend the

It is said that more than 600 Americans attend the German universities.

The entire Hussian army is to be provided with breech-loaders.

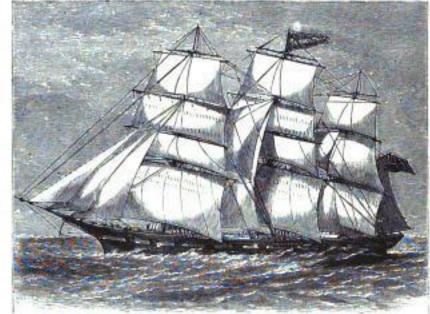

Latin will be the language of the Œcamenical Council, and a uniform pronunciation is to be fixed, in order that the assembly, owing to the diversity of accents, need not degenerate into a second Tower of Babel.

The Bishop of Orleans, France, declares that be will abide by the decisions of the Œcampajical Council, whatever they may be. The letter of the Archieshop of Parls, issued Movember 7, opposing the adoption of Parls, issued Movember 7, opposing the adoption of Papal behalibility by the Council without discussion, is reported to have been instigated by Kapoleon.

THE SCHOOL-SHIP "MERCURY."

It is only quite recently that practical philan-thropists have directed their attention to the homeless boys of our large cities. It was known that our craminal classes were fed from these "Arabs" of the street; but beyond the punish-ment of those detected in guilt socking was done—no effort was made in a practicable and sensible way, looking toward the prescrition of crime or the rescue of infortunate youth. Lately, however, simething has been accomplished in this direction by the Children's Aid Refuge. This plan lacked in one important respect. Factors from the Refuge the hour in most case. caping from the Refuge, the boys in most cases went back to the street, and, under the influence of the old temptations, resumed their former evil contres.

We think it was in Boston that the idea first originated of training neglected boys for seamen. A school-ship was instituted for this purpose in Beston; and our Commissioners of Public Charities have adopted a similar idea in this city, and the boys from Blackwell's and Hart's islands have been drafted into the school-ship Mercwy. This ship, of which we give an illustration on this page, arrived off the Battery November 1. She was formerly a Harro packet, a noble vessel, 200 feet in length, 40 feet beam, and 21 feet in depth, and about 1600 tons register. Her dimensions between decks are 7½ feet. Her ac-commodations and fitting up in cabins, store-rooms, etc., are perfection. She has been arcommodations and fitting up in catens, store-rooms, etc., are perfection. She has been ar-ranged for 300 boys, though at present there are only 114 on board; but there are 100 at Hart's Island engerly waiting for the necessary uniforms to come on board. These, as well as every thing possible, are made at the various institutions; and therefore the delay is altogether unavoidable. The yards are so heavy that, to fill all the sta-tions, in man of war sayle, it absolutely requiretions in man of war style, it absolutely requires each watch goes to school, and the other half goes on deck, loosing and reefing sails, learning sea-manship, exercising with the two brass six-pounders they have on board, and making all kinds of sensit to noon, when there is a spell for dinner and recreation until one. At that genuine Bowery style. After this they learn to box the compass. Then comes the rice roce box the compass. Then comes the rice rece recitation of the Lord's Prayer, then five min-utes' silent prayer, and then hammocks are piped down, and in a few moments the embryo tars are in the soundest of slumbers.

THE SCHOOL-SHIP "MERCURY."-[SECTORED BY THEO. R. DAVE.]

ROMAN CATHOLICISM IN FRANCE.

It has been charged, by the Roman Catholics, against Protestantism that the freedom of thought and conscience which the latter has neurished has been the cause of modern infidelity. Not has been the cause of modern infidelity. Not only is this charge without foundation as against. Protestantism, but it may with justice be hurled back against those who make it.

In Protestant England and America both political and religious liberty have found their boldesst champions, and have been developed to their largest growth, and under the most healthful conditions. On the other hand, in Roman Catholic Spain, France, and Italy civil freedom has been choked by the atmosphere; it has breathed by gaspe; its life has been perpetuated through a series of violent revolutions, and it has never gained a permanent triumph. Freedom of thought in these countries has been developed under the same morbid conditions. As their under the same morbid conditions. As their political revolutionists have always substituted anarchy for despotism, so their scientists and philosophers have almost invariably sought ref-philosophers lave almost invariably sought ref-uge from priesteraft in infidelity.

The present condition of France in these re-spects is very plainly shown in the attitude of M. Raspail, the editor of the Réveil, and one of the redical deputies of the Corps Legislatif. His opinions, as taken from his own lips, are pub-lished in the New York Herald. We will give a brief extract from this correspondence, show-ing the religious condition of France, and the peculiar views to which men of thought, dis-gusted with the corraption of the Romish Church, gusted with the corruption of the Romish Church,

"Religion," says M. Raspail, "must be based on morality—on our conscience. It must be at the hottom of the heart, or nosshere. We know nothing in regard to who or what is God. Rather than adopt all the niniseries (stuff) put forthree handred boys, and these there will not be the slightest difficulty in obtaining. Having formerly been a packet, every thing about the Mercey is in gallant, handsome style. All the woodwork is nearly painted; there is a profession of brasswork, which is pointed, and which the boys haven in remarkable reast. keep in remarkable nearnees, and like a mirror. Chief among the offi-cers is a gentleman whose bravery and humanity in the saving of human life have been gratefully ec-knowledged by the Queen of England, accompanied with a valuable gold watch, and by the King of Prassin, who presented him with a superb chro-nometer. He has also been the recipient, from various societies, of two gold and three silver medals. He was in command of the vessel when she was purchased by the city of New York by the city of New York, for her present purpose, and says, pichsamily, that it seems he was bought with the ship.

SCHOOL BETWEEN DECKS ON THE SCHOOL-SHIP "MERCURY."-[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]

The boys are generous-ly provided for in every thing touching their com-feet. They are divided into starboard and port watches, in naval style, and are well and warmly election in naval uniforms, having round their blue cap a ribbon with Mercary in golden letters. They rise at half past five (at five A.M. in som-mor), store away their hummocks and wash the docks, claim the brasswork, and make things ship-shape, until half past seven, when they have breakfast. Then half of Admiral Poarza has informed General Bow-es, one of the Commissioners of Public Charlties, that he is highly in favor of the institution, and believes it will prove a valuable nursery for our naval forces. The Admiral proposes shortly to make a cruise with the Mercury.

ward by the Jesuits, let us rather believe the beneficent Being to exist in nature. Who knows if we are not correctes parts of the divinity? Now, religion in France is a mockery, and worse—the instrument of tyranny and the source of degradation. Our people are corrupted by its agencies. The noblemen do not spend their nights with their wives, but stay with actresses and level women. In their eyes the title of father, husband, wife is as nothing. The wives, ou their side, amuse themselves by go-wives, on their side, amuse themselves by going to the churche, where they would never go if it was not for the priests. Ther go there, at the same time, to show off their is a robes and toller is to a day theatre. oe, at Compiègne, how the highest ladies, is the midst of holding their fashionable tea-parties and solvées, give renties and solrées, give rendexvous with 'little pieces of paper,' and then go and come from their walks, perfectly unconcerned—a mere pas-time. It is an odious disgrace that our Franco of to-day should be filled with so many convents, which are real houses of infamy and degradation for humanity. Here we have, inhabiting these numerous religious es-tablishments, a vast army of over 100,000 persons, who are all the time engaged in disseminating influny and in corrupting women—the wives and daughters of the people. Now these persons should be removed from such a state,"

THE "THON AGE."-(See First Page.)

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1862, by Hannes & Baothesas, in the Clark's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.]

MAN AND WIFE.

BY WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "The Moonatone," etc., etc.

WITH ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

PROLOGUE.-THE IRISH MARRIAGE. Part the Second. THE MARCH OF TIME

ADVANCING from time past to time present, the Prologue leaves the date last attained (the summer of eighteen hundred and fifty-five), and travels on through an interval of twelve years relie who lived, who died, who prospered, and who failed among the persons concerned in the tragedy at the Hampstead villa—and, this done, leaves the reader at the opening of Thu Story, in the spring of eighteen hundred and sixty

The record begins with a marriage-the marriage of Mr. Vanborough and Ludy Jane Parcell, In three months from the monomble day when his solicitor had informed him that he was a free man, Mr. Vanhorough possessed the wife he de-sired, to grace the head of his tuble and to push his fortunes in the world—the Legislature of Great Britain being the humble servant of his treachery, and the respectable accomplice of his

He entered Parliament. He gave (thanks to his wife) six of the grandest dinners, and two of the most crowded balls of the season. He made the most crowded balls of the season. He made a successful first speech in the House of Commons. He endowed a church in a poor neighborhood. He wrote an article which attracted attention in a quarterly review. He discovered, descounced, and remedied a crying abuse in the administration of a public charity. He received (thanks once more to his wife) a member of the Boyal family among the visitors at his country house in the automators. house in the autumn rocess. These were his tri-umphs, and this his rate of progress on the way to the peerage, during the first year of his life as the husband of Lady Jane.

There was but one more favor that Fortune could confer on her spoiled child—and Fortune bestowed it. There was a spot on Mr. Vanborough's past life as long as the woman lived whom he hall discounce and described. At the end of the first year Death took her—and the spot was rabbed out. rubbed out.

She had met the merciless injury inflicted on her with a mre patience, with an admirable cour-age. It is due to Mr. Vanborough to admit that he broke her heart, with the strictest attention to propriety. He offered (through his lawyer) a handsome provision for her and for her child. It was rejected, without an instant's hesitation. She repudiated his money—she repudiated his name. By the name which she had borne in her name. By the name which she had made il-maiden days—the name which she had made il-Instrious in her Art were known to all who cared to inquire after them when they had sunk in the world.

There was no false pride in the resolute attitude which she thus assumed after her husband had forsaken her. Mrs. Silvester (as she was had forsaken her. Mrs. Silvester (as she was now called) gratefully accepted for herself, and for Miss Silvester, the assistance of the dear old friend who had found her again in her affliction, and who remained faithful to her to the end. They lived with Lady Lundie until the mother strong enough to carry out the plan of life th she had arranged for the future, and to earn her bread us a teacher of singing. To all appearance she milied, and became herself again, in a few mouths' time. She was making her To all way; she was winning sympathy, confidence, and respect every where—when she sank sadden-ly at the opening of her new life. Nobody could account for it. The doctors themselves were dirided in opinion. Scientifically speaking, there was no reason why she should die. It was a mere figure of speech—in no degree satisfactory to any reasonable mind—to say, as Lady Lundie said, that she had got her death-blow on the day when her husband deserted her. The one thing certain was the fact—account for it as you might, In spite of science (which meant little), in spite of her own courage (which meant much), the woman dropped at her post and died.

In the latter part of her illness her mind gave way. The friend of her old school-days, sitting at the bedside, heard ber talking as if she though herself back again in the cabin of the ship. The poor soul found the tone, almost the look, that had been lost for so many years—the tone of the past time when the two girls had gone their dif-ferent ways in the world. She said, "we will meet, darling, with all the old love between us," lust as she had said almost a lifetime since. Before the end her mind rallied. She surprised the doctor and the nurse by begging them gently to leave the room. When they had gone she looked at Lady Lundie, and woke, as it seemed, to consciousness from a dream.

"Blanche," she said, "you will take care of my child?"

"She shall be my child, Anne, when you are

The dying woman paused, and thought for a lietle. A sudden trembling seized her. "Keep it a secret!" she said. "I am afraid for my child."

"I am afraid? After what I have promised you?"
She solomnly repeated the words, "I am afraid for my child,"
"Why?"

"My Anne is my second self-isn't she?"

"She is as fond of your child as I was of you?"

Yes. "She is not called by her father's name-she is called by mine. She is Anne Silvester as I was. Blanche! Will she evol like Me!"

The question was put with the laboring brenth, with the beavy accents which tell that death is near. It chilled the living woman who beard it to the marrow of her bones.

"Don't think that?" she cried, horror-struck.

"For God's sake, don't think that:"
The wikiness began to appear again in Anne Silvester's eyes. She made feeliy impatient signs with her hands. Lady Lundie bent over her, and heard her whisper, "Lift me up." She lay in her friend's arms; she looked up in her friend's face; she went back wildly to her fear for her child.

fear for her child.

"Don't being her up like Me! She must be a governess—she must get her beend. Don't let her net! don't let her sing! don't let her go on the stage!" She stopped—her voice suddenly recovered its sweetness of tone—she smiled faintly—she said the old girlish words once more, in the old girlish way, "Vow it, Blanche!" Lady Lundie kissed her, and answered, as she had answered when they verted in the shin. "I vow it, see the she way they are the sine of the shin." I way it. swered when they parted in the ship, "I vow it,

The bend sank, never to be lifted more. The The best sank, never to be lifted more. The last look of life flickered in the filmy eyes and went out. For a moment afterward her lips moved. Lady Lundie put her ear close to them, and beard the dreadful question reiterated, in the same dreadful words: "She is Anne Silvester—as I was. Will she end like Met"

Five years passed—and the lives of the three men who had sat at the disner-table in the Hampstend villa began, in their altered aspects,

Mr. Kendrew; Mr. Delamayu; Mr. Vanbor-ough. Let the order in which they are here named be the order in which their lives are reviewed, as seen once more after a lapse of five

How the busband's friend marked his sense of the husband's treachery has been told already. How he felt the death of the deserted wife is still left to tell. Report, which sees the immost hearts of men, and delights in turning them outward to the public view, had always declared that Mr. Kendrew's life and its secret, and that the secret was a hopeless passion for the beautiful woman who had married his friend. Not a hint ever dropped to any living soul, not a word ever spoken to the woman herself, could be produced in proof of the assertion while the woman lived. When she died Report started up again more confidently than ever, and appealed to the man's own conduct as proof against the man himself.

He attended the funeral—though he was no relation. He took a few blades of grass from the turf with which they covered her grave—when he thought that nobody was looking at him. He disappeared from his club. He traveled. He came heat. He admitted that he was eled. He came back. He admitted that he was weary of England. He applied for, and obtained, an appointment in one of the colonies. To what ion did all thi Was it not plain! his usual course of life had lost its attraction for him, when the object of his infatnation had ceased to exist? It might have been so-guesses less likely have been made at the truth, and have hit the mark. It is, at any rate, certain that he left England, never to return again. Another man lost, Report said. Add to that, a man in ten thousand—and, for once, Report might claim to

Mr. Delamaya comes next. The rising solicitor was struck off the roll, at his own request—and entered himself as a stu-dent at one of the Inns of Court. For three dent at one of the linis of Court. For three years nothing was known of him but that he was reading hard and keeping his terms. He was called to the Bar. His late partners in the firm knew they could trust him, and put husiness into his hands. In two years he made himself a position in Court. At the end of the two years he made himself a position out of Court. He peared as "Junior" in "a famous case, which the honor of a great family, and the title to a great estate were concerned. His "Senior" fell ill on the eye of the trial. He conducted the case for the defendant and won it. The defend-ant said, "What can I do for you?" Mr. De-lamayn answered, "Put me into Parliament." Being a landed gentleman, the defendant had only to issue the necessary orders—and behold, Mr. Delamayu was in Parliament!

In the House of Commons the new member

In the House of Commons the new member and Mr. Vanborough met again.

They sat on the same bench, and sided with the issue party. Mr. Delamayn noticed that Mr. Vanborough was looking old and worn and gray. He put a few questions to a well-informed person. The well-informed person shook his head. Mr. Vanborough was rich; Mr. Vanborough was well-connected (through his wife). borough was well-connected (through his wife); Mr. Vanborough was a sound man in every of the word; but—nobody liked him. He had done very well the first year, and there it had ended. He was undeniably clever, but he produced a disagreeable impression in the House, He gave splendid entertainments, but he wasn't popular in society. His party respected him, but when they had any thing to give they passed him over. He had a temper of his own, if the truth must be tobi; and with nothing against him-on the contrary, with every thing in his favor-be didn't make friends. A source man. At home and abroad, a soured man,

VIL

Five years more passed, dating from the day when the deserted wife was laid in her grave. It was now the year eighteen hundred and sixty-

On a certain day in that year two special items of news appeared in the papers—the news of an elevation to the perrage, and the news of Getting on well at the Bar, Mr. Delamaya got on better still in Parliament. He became one of the prominent men in the House. Spoke of the prominent men in the House. Spoke clearly, aensitive, and modestly, and was never too long. Held the House, where men of higher abilities "bored" it. The chiefs of his party said openly, "We must do something for Delamoyn." The opportunity offered, and the chiefs kept their word. Their Solicitor-General was advanced a step, and they put Delemaya in his place. There was an outery on the part of the older members of the Bar. The Ministry an-swered, "We want a man who is listened to in the House, and we have got him." The papers supported the new nomination. A great debate supported the new nomination. A great detent came off, and the new Solicinos-General justified the Ministry and the papers. His enemies said, derisively, "He will be Lord Chancellor in a year or two!" His friends made genial jokes in his domestic circle, which pointed to the same conclusion. They warned his two sons, Julius and Geoffrey (then at college), to be careful what acquaintances they made, as they might find themselves the sons of a lord at a moment's notice. It really began to look like something of the sect. Always rising, Mr. Delamayn reservext to be Attorney-General. About the same time—so true it is that "nothing succeeds like success"—a children relative died and left him a fortune. In the summer of 'sixty-six a Chief Judgeship fell vaca. t. The Ministry had made a previous appointment which had been universally unpopular. They saw their way to supplying the place of their Attorney-General, and they offered the judicial appointment to Mr. Delamayn. He preferred remaining in the House ismayn. He preserved remaining in the House of Commons, and refused to accept it. The Ministry declined to take No for an answer. They whispered confidentially, "Will you take it with a peerage?" Mr. Delamayn consulted his wife, and took it with a peerage. The Lon-don Greette announced him to the world as Passes Holchester of Helderters. Baron Holchester of Holchester. And the friends of the family rubbed their hands and said, "What did we tell you? Here are our two young friends, Julius and Geoffrey, the sous of a lord!"

And where was Mr. Vanborough all this time?

And where was Mr. Vanborough all this time? Exactly where we left him five years since. He was as rich, or richer, than ever. He was as well-connected as ever. He was as ambitious as ever. But there it ended. He stood still in the House; he stood still in society; nobody liked him; he made no friends. It was all the old story over again, with this difference, that the soured man was sourer; the gray bond, grayer; and the irritable temper more unendur-able than ever. His wife had her rooms in the house and he had his, and the confidential servants took care that they pever met on the stales. They had no children. They only saw each other at their grand disners and bolls. People are at their table, and danced on their flow, and compared noces afterward, and said bow dull it Step by step the man who had once been Mr. Vanborough's lawyer rose, till the peerage received him, and be could rise no longer; while Mr. Vanborough, on the lower round of the ladder, looked up, and noted it, with no more chance (rich as he was and well-connected as he was) of climbing to the House of Lords than your chance

The man's career was ended; and on the day when the nomination of the new peer was an-

when the nomination of the new peer was an-nounced, the man caded with it.

He hid the newspaper aside without making any remark, and went out. His carriage set him down, where the green fields still remain, on the northwest of London, near the foot-path which leads to Hampstend. He walked alone to the villa where he had once lived with the woman whom he had so craelly wronged. New houses had risen round it, part of the old garden had been sold and built on. After a moment's hositation he went to the rate and rang the helf. hesitation he went to the gate and rung the bell. He gave the servant his card. The servant's master know the name as the name of a man of great wealth, and of a Member of Parliament.

"WILL SHE END LIKE MEY

of great wealth, and of a Member of Parliament. He asked politicly to what fortunate circumstance he owed the honor of that visit. Mr. Vanborough answered, briefly and simply, "I once lived here; I have associations with the place with which it is not necessary for me to trouble you. Will you excuse what must seem to you a very strange request? I should like to see the dining-room again, if there is no objection, and if I am disturbing nobody."

The "strange requests" of rich men are of the nature of "privileged communications," for this excellent reason, that they are sure not to be requests for money. Mr. Vanborough was shown into the dining-room. The master of the house, secretly wondering, watched him.

He walked straight to a certain spot on the carpet, not far from the window that led into the garden, and nearly opposite the door. On that spot he stood silently, with his head on his breast—thinking. Was it there he had seen her for the last time, on the day when he left the room forever? Yes; it was there. After a minute or so he roused himself, but in a dreamy, sheent manner. He said it was a protty place, and expressed his thanks, and looked back before the door closed, and then went his way again. His carriage picked him up where it had set him down. He drove to the residence of the new Lord Holchester, and left a card for him. Then he went home. Arrived at his house, his secretary reminded him that he had an appointment in ten minutes' time. He thanked the secretary in the same dreamy, absent manner in which he had thanked the owner of the villa, and went in ten minutes' time. He thanked the secretary in the same dreamy, absent manner in which he had thanked the owner of the villa, and went into his dressing room. The person with whom he had made the appointment came, and the secretary sent the valet up stairs to knock at the door. There was no answer. On trying the lock it proved to be turned inside. They broke open the door, and saw him lying on the sofa. They went close to look—and found him dead by his own hand.

VIII

VIII.

Drawing fast to its close, the Prologue reverts to the two girls—and tells, in a few words, how the years passed with Aone and Blanche.

Lady Lundie more than redeemed the solemn pledge that she had given to her friend. Preserved from every temptation which might lure her into a longing to fullow her mother's career; trained for a teacher's life, with all the arts and all the advantages that money could procure, Anne's first and only easays as a governess were made, under Lady Lundie's own roof, on Lady Lundie's own child. The difference in the ages of the girls—sown years—the roof, on Lady Lundie's own child. The difference in the ages of the girls—seven years—the love between them, which seemed, as time went on, to grow with their growth, favored the trial of the experiment. In the double relation of teacher and friend to little Blanche, the girl-hood of Anne Silvester the younger passed safely, happily, unoventfully, in the modest sanctuary of home. Who could imagine a contrast more complete than the contrast between her early life and her mother's? Who could see any thing but a death-hed delusion in the terrible question which had tortured the mother's last moments: "Will she end like Me?"

But two events of importance occurred in the

But two events of importance occurred in the guiet family circle during the lapse of years which is now under review. In eighteen hundred and fifty-eight the household was enlivened by the arrival of Sir Thomas Lundie. In eighteen hundred and sixty-five the household was broken up by the return of Sir Thomas to India, accome

Lady Lundie's bealth had been failing for so

Lady Lundie's bealth had been failing for some time previously. The medical men, consulted on the case, agreed that a sea-voyage was the one change needful to restore their patient's wasted strength—exactly at the time, as it happened, when Sir Thomas was due again in India. For his wife's sake, he agreed to defer his return, by taking the sea-voyage with her. The one difficulty to get over was the difficulty of leaving Blanche and Anne behind in England.

Appealed to on this point, the doctors had declared that at Blanche's critical time of life they could not sanction her going to India with her mother. At the same time, near and dear relatives came forward, who were ready and anxious to give Blanche and her governess a home—Sir Thomas, on his side, engaging to bring his wife back in a year and a half, or, at most, in two years' time. Assailed in all directions, Lady Lundie's natural unwillingness to leave the girls vears' time. Assailed in all directions, Landy Lundie's natural unwillingness to leave the girls was overruled. She consented to the parting— with a mind secretly depressed, and secretly doubtful of the future.

At the last moment she drew Anne Silvester on one side, out of hearing of the rest. Anne Blanche a girl of lifteen.

"My dear," she said, simply, "I must tell you what I can not tell Sir Thomas, and what I am nfraid to tell Blanche. I am going away, with a mind that misgives me. I am persuaded I shall not live to return to England; and, when I am dead. I believe my husband will marry again. Years ago your mother was uneasy, on her death-bed, about your future. I am un-easy, now, about Blanche's future. I promised my dear dead friend that you should be like my own child to me-and it quieted her mind. Quiet wy a ind, Anne, before I go. Whatever happens in year, to come-promise me to be always, what you are now, a sister to Blanche."

She held out her hand for the last time. With a full heart Ann. Silvester kissed it, and gave the

In two mouths from that time one of the forehodings which had weighed on Lady Lundie's mind was fulfilled. She died on the voyage, and was buried at sea.

In a year more the second misgiving was con-Sir Thomas Lundie married again. He brought his second wife to England toward the brought his second wife to England toward the close of eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

Time, in the new household, promised to pass as quietly as in the old. Sir Thomas remembered and respected the trust which his first wife had placed in Anne. The second Lady Landie, wisely guiding her conduct in this matter by the conduct of her husband, left things as she found them in the new house. At the opening of eighteen hundred and sixty-seven the relations between Anne and Blanche were relations of sixtyles. lations between Anne and Blanche were rela-tions of sisterly sympathy and sisterly love. The prospect in the future was as fair as a prospect could be.

At this date, of the persons concerned in the tragedy of twelve years since at the Hampstead villa, three were dead; and one was self-exiled in a foreign land. There now remained living Anne and Blanche, who had been children at the time; and the rising solicitor who had discovered the flaw in the Irish marriage—once Mr. Delamayn: now Lord Holchester.

The Storp.

FIRST SCENE.-THE SUMMER-HOUSE. CHAPTER THE FIRST.

THE OWLA. In the spring of the year eighteen hundred and sixty-eight there lived, in a certain county of North Britain, two venerable White Owls. The Owls inhabited a decayed and deserted

The Owis innatited a decayed and deserted summer-house. The summer-house stood in grounds attached to a country seat in Perth-shire, known by the name of Windygates. The situation of Windygates had been skill-fully chosen in that part of the county where the fertile lowlands first begin to merge into the

the fertile lowlands first begin to merge into the mountain region beyond. The mansion-house was intelligently laid out, and luxuriously furnished. The stables offered a model for ventilation and space; and the gardens and grounds were fit for a prince.

Possessed of these advantages, at starting, Windygates, nevertheless, went the road to ruin in due course of time. The curse of litigation fell on house and lands. For more than ten years an interminable lawsuit colled itself closer and closer round the place, sequestering it from human habitation, and even from human approach. The mansion was closed. The garpreach. The mansion was closed. The gar-den became a wilderness of weeds. The summer-house was choked up by creeping plants and the appearance of the creepers was followed by the appearance of the birds of night. For years the Owls lived undisturbed on the property which they had acquired by the old-est of all existing rights—the right of taking. Throughout the day they sat peaceful and sol-emn, with closed eyes, in the cool darkness shed round them by the ivy. With the twilight they roused themselves softly to the business of life. In sage and silent companionship of two, they went flying, noiseless, along the quiet lases in search of a meal. At one time they would beat a field like a setter dog, and drop down in an ina non mee a sener dog, and drop down in an in-stant on a mouse unaware of them. At another time—moving spectral over the black surface of the water—they would try the lake for a change, and catch a perch as they had caught the mouse. Their catholic digestions were equally tolerant of a rat or an insect. And there were moments, proud moments, in their lives, when they were clever enough to snatch a small bird at roost off his perch. On those occasions the sense of su-periority which the large bird feels every where over the small, warmed their cool blood, and set them screeching cheerfully in the stillness of the night.

50, for years, the Owls slept their happy sleep their comfortable meel when by day, and found their comfortable meal when darkness fell. They had come, with the creeg-ers, into possession of the summer-house. Con-sequently, the creepers were a part of the consti-tation of the summer-house. And consequently tution of the summer-house. And consequently the Owls were the guardians of the Constitution.

the Owls were the guardians of the Constitution. There are some human owls who reason as they did, and who are, in this respect—as also in respect of snatching smaller birds off their roosts—wonderfully like them.

The constitution of the summer-house had lasted until the spring of the year eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, when the unballowed footsteps of innovation passed that way; and the venerable privileges of the Owls were assailed, for the first time, from the world conside.

Two featherless beings assessed volunted as

Two featherless beings appeared, uninvited, at the door of the summer-house, surveyed the constitutional creepers, and said, "These must come down"—looked around at the horrid light of noonday, and said, "That must come in" vent away, thereupon, and were heard. distance, agreeing together, "To-morrow it shall

And the Owls said, "Have we honored the summer-house by occupying it all these years— and is the horrid light of noonday to be let in on us at last? My lords and gentlemen, the Constitution is destroyed!"

They passed a resolution to that effect, as is the manner of their kind. And then they shut their eyes again, and felt that they had done their duty.

The same night, on their way to the fields they observed with dismay a light in one of the windows of the house. What did the light mean?

It meant, in the first place, that the lawsuit was over at last. It meant, in the second place, that the owner of Windygates, wanting money, had decided on letting the property. It means, in the third place, that the property had found a tenant, and was to be renorated immediately out of doors and in. The Owls shrieked as they flapped along the lanes in the darkness. And that night they struck at a mouse-and missed

The next morning, the Owls-fast asleep in charge of the Constitution—were roused by voices of featherless beings all round them. They opened their eyes, under protest, and saw in-struments of destruction attacking the creepers. Now in one direction, and now in another, those instruments let in on the summer-house the horrid light of day. But the Owls were equal to the occasion. They ruffled their feathers, and cried, "No surrender!" The featherless beings plied their work cheerfully, and answered, "Reform!" The creaters were turn down this way. plied their work cheerfully, and answered, "Reform!" The creepers were torn down this way and that. The horrid daylight poured in brighter and brighter. The Owis had berely time to pass a new resolution, namely, "That we do stand by the Constitution," when a ray of the outer smilight flashed into their eyes, and sent them flying headlong to the nearest shade. There they sat winking, while the summer-house was cleared of the rank growth that had choked it up, while the rotten wood-work was renewed, while all the murky place was purified with air and light. And when the world saw it, and said, "Now we shall do!" the Owis shut their eyes in pour remembrance of the darkness, and answered, "My lords and gentlemen, the Constitution is destroyed!" tion is destroyed!"

CHAPTER THE SECOND. THE QUESTS.

Wiso was responsible for the reform of the

The new tenant at Windygates was responsi-

And who was the new tenant?

In the spring of eighteen hundred and sixtyeight the summer-house had been the dismal dwelling-place of a pair of owls. In the autumn of the same year the summer-house was the live-ly gathering-place of a crowd of ladies and gen-tlemen, assembled at a lawn party—the guests of the tenant who had taken Windygates.

The scene—at the opening of the party—was as pleasant to look at as light and beauty and ovement could make it. Inside the summer-bouse the butterfly-bright-Inside the summer-house the butterfly-bright-ness of the women in their summer dresses shome radiant out of the gloom shed round it by the dreary modern clothing of the men. Outside the summer-house, seen through three arched openings, the cool green prospect of a lawn led away, in the distance, to flower-beds and shrub-beries, and, farther still, disclosed, through a break in the trees, a grand stone house which closed the view, with a fountain in front of it playing in the sun.

playing in the sun.

They were half of them laughing, they were all of them talking—the comfortable hum of the voices was at its loudest; the cheery pealing of the laughter was scaring to its highest notes the laughter was searing to its highest notes— when one dominant voice, rising clear and shrill above all the rest, called imperatively for silence. The moment after, a young lady stepped into the vacant space in front of the sammer-house, and surveyed the throng of guests as a general in command surveys a regiment under review. She was young, she was not the least embarrassed by her recomment restition. She was decread in she was fair. She was not the least embarrassed by her prominent position. She was dressed in the height of the fastion. A hat, like a cheese-plate, was tilted over her forehead. A balloon of light brown hair soared, fully inflated, from the crown of her head. A cataract of heads poured over her bosom. A pair of oock-chafers in enamel (frightfully like the living originals) hung at her ears. Her scanty skirts shone splen-did with the blue of heaven. Her ankles twin-kled in strined stockings. Her ahoes were of did with the blue of heaven. Her ankles twin-kled in striped stockings. Her shoes were of the sort called "Watteau." And her heels were of the height at which men shudder, and ask themselves (in contemplating an otherwise lov-able woman), "Can this charming person straighten her knees?"

The young lady thus presenting herself to the general view was Miss Blanche Lundie—once the little resy Blanche whom the Prologue has introduced to the reader. Age, at the present time, eighteen. Position, excellent. Money, certain. Temper, quick. Disposition, variable, In a word, a child of the modern time—with the merits of the age we live in, and the failings of the age we live in—and a substance of sincerity the age we live in—and a substance of sincerity and truth and feeling underlying it all.

"Now then, good people," cried Miss Blanche, "silence, if you please! We are going to choose sides at croquet. Business, business, business!" Upon this, a second lady among the company assumed a position of prominence, and answered the young person who had just spoken with a look of mild reproof, and in a tone of benevolent

The second lady was tall, and solid, and fire, and thirty. She presented to the general observation a cruel aquiline nose, an obstinate straight chin, magnificent dark hair and eyes, a serene splendor of fawn-colored apperel, and a lazy grace of movement which was attractive at first sight, but inexpressibly monotonous and wearise on a longer acquaintance. Lundie the Second, now the widow (after four mouths only of married life) of Sir Thomas Lundie, deceased. In other words, the step-mother of Blanche, and the enviable person who had taken the house and lands of Windygates.

"My dear," and Land Landie, "words have

"My dear," said Lady Lundie, Do you call Croquet, 'businese'?'

"You don't call it pleasure, surely?" said a gravely ironical voice in the back-ground of the

The ranks of the visitors parted before the last speaker, and disclosed to view, in the midst of that modern assembly, a gentleman of the bygone time.

The manner of this gentleman was distinguished by a pliant grace and courtesy unknown to the present generation. The attire of this gentleman was composed of a m-uy-folded white cravat, a close-buttoned blue dress-coat, and nankeen trowsers with gaiters to match, ridicu-lous to the present generation. The talk of this ous to the present generation.

entiemsh ran in an easy flow—revealing an inependent habit of mind, and exhibiting a careependent habit of mind, and exhibiting a careependent habit of mind. pentleman gentleman ran in an easy flow—revealing an independent habit of mind, and exhibiting a carefully-polished capacity for satirical retort—dreadof and disliked by the present generation. Personally, he was little and wiry and slim—with a bright white head, and sparkling black eyes, and a wry twist of humor curling sharply at the cerners of his lips. At his lower extremities, he exhibited the deformity which is popularly known as "a club-floa." But he carried his lameness, as he carried his years, gayly. He was socially celebrated for his ivory cane, with a sunfi-box artfully let into the knob at the top—and he was socially dreaded for a hatred of modern institutions, which expressed itself in season and out of season, and which always showed the same fatal knack of hitting smartly on the weakest place. Such was Sir Patrick Landie; brother of the late baronet, Sir Thomas; and inheritor, at Sir Thomas's death, of the title and estates.

Miss Blanche—taking no notice of her seepmother's reproof, or of her uncle's commentary on it—pointed to a table on which croquet mallets and balls were laid ready, and recalled the attention of the company to the matter in hand.

"I head one side, ladies and gentlemen," she resumed. "And Lady Landie heads the other.
We choose our players turn and turn about.
Mamma has the advantage of me in years. So

We choose our players turn and turn about, Mamma has the seventage of me in years. So mamma chooses first," wamma chooses first."

With a look at her step-daughter—which, being interpreted, meant, "I would send you back to the nursery, miss, if I could!"—Lady Lundie turned, and ran her eye over her guests. She had evidently made up her mind, beforehand, what player to pick out first.

"I choose Miss Silvester," she said—with a special emphasis laid on the name.

At that there was another parting among the crowd. To us (who know her), it was Anne who now appeared. Strangers, who saw her for the first time, saw a lady in the prime of her life—a lady plainly dressed in uncertained white—who advanced slowly, and confronted the mistress of the house.

A certain proportion—and not a small one—

A certain proportion—and not a small one— of the men at the lawn-party had been brought or me men at the nave-party had been brought there by friends who were privileged to introduce them. The moment she appeared every one of those men suddenly became interested in the lady who had been chosen first.

who had been chosen first.

"That's a very charming woman," whispered one of the strangers at the house to one of the friends of the bouse. "Who is she?"

The friend whispered back:

"Miss Lundie's governess—that's all."

The moment during which the question was put and answered was also the moment which brought Lady Lundie and Miss Silvester face to foce, in the presence of the comment.

trought Lany Linds and hass currents not to face, in the presence of the company.

The stranger as the house looked at the two women, and whispered again.

"Something wrong between the lady and the governess," he said.

The friend looked also, and answered, in one emphatic word: "Evidently!" There are certain women whose influence There are certain women whose influence over men is an unfathomable mystery to observers of their own sex. The governess was one of those women. She had inherited the charm, but not the beauty, of her unhappy mother. Judge her by the standard set up in the illustrated gift-books and the print-shop windows—and the sentence must have inevitably followed, the has not a single good feature in her face.

"She has not a single good feature in her face."
There was nothing individually remarkable about Miss Silvester, seen in a state of repose. She Miss Silvester, seen in a state of repose. She was of the average height. She was as well made as most women. In hair and complexion, she was neither light nor dark, but provokingly neutral, just between the two. Worse even than this, there were positive defects in her face, which it was impossible to deny. A nervous contraction at one corner of her mouth drew up the lips out of the symmetrically right line, when they record. A nervous more refer in the see they moved. A nervous uncertainty in the eye on the same side narrowly escaped presenting on the same store narrowly escaped presenting the deformity of a "cast." And yet, with these indisputable drawbacks, here was one of those women—the formidable few—who have the hearts of men and the peace of families at their mercy. She moved—and there was some subtle charm, Sir, in the movement, that made you look back, and suspend your conversation with your friend, and watch her silently while she walks She sat by you and talked to you—and behold, a sensitive-something passed into that little twist at the corner of the m outh, and into that nerv ous uncertainty in the soft gray eye, which turned defect into beauty—which enchained your senses —which made your nerves thrill if she touched you by secident, and set your heart beating if you looked at the same book with her, and felt her breath on your face. All this, let it be well understood, only happened if you were a man. If you saw her with the eyes of a woman, the results were of quite another kind. In that case, you merely turned to your nearest female friend, and said, with unaffected pity for the other sex, "What can the men see in her!"

The eyes of the lady of the house and the eyes of the governess met, with marked distrust on either side. Few people could have failed to see, what the stranger and the friend had noticed allike—that there was something smoothering under the surface here. Miss Silvester spoke first. "Thank you, Lady Lundie," she said. "I would rather not play." Lady Lundie assumed an extreme surprise which passed the limits of good-breeding.

"Oh, indeed?" she rejoined, sharply. "Considering that we are all here for the purpose of playing, that seems rather remarkable. Is any thing wrong, Miss Silvester?"

A finsh appeared on the delicate poleness of Miss Silvester's face. But she did her duty as a woman and a governess. She submitted, and so preserved appearances, for that time.

"Nothing is the matter," she answered. "I am not track well this morning. But I will also am not very well this morning. But I will play if you wish it."

"I do wish it," answered Lady Lundie.

Miss Silvester turned aside toward one of the entrances into the summer-house. She waited for events, looking out over the lawn, with a visible inner disturbance, marked over the bosom by the rise and fall of her white dress.

It was Blanche's turn to select the next player. In some preliminary uncertainty as to her choice, she looked about among the guests, and caught the eye of a gentleman in the front ranks. He stood side by side with Sir Patrick—a striking representative of the school that is among us—as Sir Patrick was a striking representative of the school that has passed away.

The modern gentleman was young and florid, tall and strong. The parting of his curly Saxon locks began in the centre of his forehead, traveled over the top of his head, and ended, rightly-cen-tral, at the raddy mape of his neck. His features were as perfectly regular and as perfectly unintel-ligent as human features can be. His expression preserved an immovable composure wonderful to behold. The muscles of his browny arms showed through the sleeves of his light summer coat. He was deep in the chest, thin in the fanks, firm on the legs—in two words, a magnificent human animal, wrought up to the highest pitch of physical development, from head to foot. This was Mr. Geoffrey Delamayn—commonly called "the honorable; and meriting that distinction in more ways than one. He was honorable, in the first place, as being the son (second son) of that once-rising solicitor, who was now Lord Holchester. He was honorable, in the second piace, as hav-ing won the highest popular distinction which the educational system of modern England can be-stow—he had pulled the stroke-oar in a Universseem—ne man pailed the service-our in a University boat-race. Add to this, that nobody had ever seen him read any thing but a newspaper, and that nobody had ever known him to be backward in settling a bet—and the picture of this distinm setting a bet—and the picture of this distin-guished young Englishman will be, for the pres-cut, complete.

Blanche's eye naturally rested on him.
Blanche's voice naturally picked him out as the first player on her side.

"I choose Mr. Delemann." the art's

"I choose Mr. Delamayn," she sai

As the name passed her lips the flush on Miss Silvester's face died away, and a deadly paleness took its place. She made a movement to leave the summer-house-checked herself abruptlyand laid one hand on the back of a rustic sent at her side. A gentleman behind her, looking at the hand, saw it clench itself so suddenly and so fiercely that the glove on it split. The gentle-man made a mental memorandum, and registered Miss Silvester in his private books as

Meanwhile Mr. Delamsyn, by a strange coin-cidence, took exactly the same course which Miss Silvester had taken before him. He, too, atsurveisor has a taken before him. He, too as-tempted to withdraw from the coming game.

"Thanks very much," he said. "Could you additionally honor me by choosing somebody else? It's not in my line."

Fifty years ago such an answer as this, ad-dressed to a lady, would have been considered inexcussibly impertinent. The social code of the inexcussibly impertinent. The social code of the present time halled it as something frankly amus-ing. The company laughed. Blanche lost ber

"Can't we interest you in any thing but severe muscular exertion, Mr. Delamayn?" she asked, sharply. "Must you always be pulling in a sharply. If you boat-race, or flying over a high jump? If you had a mind, you would want to relax it. You have get muscles instead. Why not relax them?"

The shafts of Miss Lundie's bitter wit glided off Mr. Geoffrey Delamayn like water off a duck's back.

"Just as you please," he said, with stolid good-humor.

"Den't be offended. I came here with ladies—and they wouldn't let me smoke. I miss my smoke. I thought I'd slip away a bit and have it. All right! I'll play."

"Oh! smoke by all means!" retorted Blanche.

44 I shall choose somebody clse. I won't have you!

The honorable young gentleman looked un-affectedly relieved. The petulant young lady turned her back on him, and surveyed the guests at the other extremity of the summer-

Who shall I choose?" she said to herself. A dark young man—with a face berned gipey-brown by the sun; with something in his look and manner suggestive of a roving life, and per-haps of a familiar acquaintance with the sen—adced shyly, and said, in a whisper:

Blanche's face broke prettily into a charming smile. Judging from appearances, the dark young man had a place in her estimation peculiarly his own.

"You!" she said, coquettishly. "You are going to leave us in an hour's time!" He ventured a step nearer. "I am coming going to leave us in an hour's time!"

He ventured a step nearer. "I am coming back," he gleaded, "the day after to-morrow."

"You play very badly!"

"I might improve—if you would teach me."

"Might you? Then I will teach you!" Shumed, bright and row, to ber step-mother. "choose Mr. Arnold Brinkworth," she said.

Here, again, there appeared to be something in a name unknown to celebrity, which nevertheless produced its effect—not, this time, on Miss Silvester, but on Sir Patrick. He looked at Mr. Brinkworth with a sudden interest and curiceity. If the lady of the house had not claimed his attention at the moment he would evidently have spoken to the dark young man.

But it was Lady Lundie's turn to choose a second player on her side. Her brother-in-law was a person of some importance; and she had her own motives for ingratiating herself with the bead of the family. She surprised the whole com-pany by choosing Sir Patrick.

Manager Tree

"Mamma!" cried Blanche. "What can you be thinking of? Sir Patrick won't play. Croquet wasn't discovered in his time.

Sir Patrick never allowed "his time" to be made the subject of disparaging remarks by the younger generation without paying the younger generation back in its own coin.

"In my time, my dear," he said to his nicce,
"people were expected to bring some agreeable quality with them to social meetings of this sort. In your time you have dispensed with all that. Here," remarked the old gentleman, taking up quet mallet from the table near him, one of the qualifications for success in modern society. And here, he added, taking up a ball, is another. Very good. Live and learn. I'll play! I'll play!"

Lady Lundie (born impervious to all sense of irony) smiled graciously.

"I knew Sir Patrick would play," she said,

Sir Patrick bowed with satirical politenes "Lady Lundie," he answered, "you read me like a book." To the astonishment of all persons present under forty he emphasized th words by laying his hand on his heart, and quoting poetry. "I may say with Dryden, added the gallant old gentleman:

"'Old as I am, for indice' love unfit, The power of beauty I remember yet."

Lady Lundie looked unaffectedly shocked.

Delamayn went a step farther. He inter-Mr. Delamayn went a step farther. He inter-fered on the spot—with the air of a man who feels himself imperatively called upon to perform blic duty.

"Dryden never said that," he remarked, "I'll answer for it."

Sir Patrick wheeled round with the help of his lvory cane, and looked Mr. Delamayn hard "Do you know Dryden, Sir, better than I do?" be asked.

he asked.

The Honorable Geoffrey answered, modestly,
"I should say I did. I have rowed three races with him, and we trained together."

Sir Patrick looked round him with a sour smile

"Then let me tell you, Sir," he said, "that you trained with a man who died nearly two hundred years ago."

Mr. Delamayn appealed, in genuine bewilder-

sur. Leasman appeased, in genuine bewilder-ment, to the company generally:

"What does this old gentleman mean?" he asked. "I am speaking of Tom Dryden, of Corpus. Every body in the University knows him."

"I am speaking," echoed Sir Patrick, "of John Dryden the Poet. Apparently, every body in the University does not know him?"

Mr. Delamayn answered, with a cordial earn estness very pleasant to see :

estness very pressant to see:

"Give you my word of honor, I never heard of him before in my life! Don't be angry, Sir.
I'm not offended with you." He smiled, and took out his brier-wood pipe. "Got a light?"
he asked, in the friendliest possible manner.
Sir Patrick answered, with a total absence of

"I don't smoke, Sir." Mr. Delamayn looked at him, without taking the slightest offense: You don't smoke!" he repeated. "I wonder how you get through your spare time?"

Sir Patrick closed the conversation:

"Sir," he said, with a low bow, "you may

While this little skirmish was proceeding Lady Lundie and her step-daughter had organized the game; and the company, players and spectators, Patrick stopped his niece on her way out, with the dark young man in close attendance on her. "Leave Mr. Brinkworth with me," he said. "I want to speak to him."

Blanche issued her orders immediately. Mr. Brinkworth was sentenced to stay with Sir Petrick until she wanted him for the game. Mr. Brinkworth wondered, and obeyed.

During the exercise of this act of authority a circumstance occurred at the other end of the amer-house. Taking advantage of the confusion caused by the general movement to the lawn, Miss Silvester suddenly placed herself close to Mr. Delamayn.

in lar Detamayn,
"In ten minetes," she whispered, "the sum-mer-house will be empty. Meet me here."

The Honorable Geoffrey started, and looked furtively at the visitors about him.

"Do you think it's safe?" he whispered back. The governess's sensitive lips trembled, with fear or with anger, it was hard to say which.
"I insist on it!" she answered, and left him.

Mr. Delamaya knitted his handsome eyebrows as he looked after her, and then left the summer-house in his turn. The rose-garden at the back of the building was solitary for the mo-ment. He took out his pipe and hid himself among the roses. The smoke came from his mouth in hot and hasty puffs. He was usually the gentlest of masters—to his pipe. When he harried that confidential servant, it was a sure sign of disturbance in the inner man,

PARAGUAY.

Thu so-called republic of Paraguay is in reality a despotism, ruled by a tyrant who has no parallel in modern times but Ali Pasha; and the allies have addressed themselves to his destruc-tion with a seal and effect which are very likely to bring about the extermination of his subjects

When this man's rule began, Paragusy was a rtile country; the old Jesuit settlement called the Missiones, in particular, was a rich and beau-tiful province, celebrated for its productiveness, Comfortable homesteads and innumerable hords Comfortable homesteads and innumerable herds of cattle were to be seen there, but now it is a desolute wilderness, without an inhabitant; and in the other parts of the country, where population still exists, the people are in the extremity of want and misery. The rivers of Paragnay present the flat and desolute appearance peculiar to the giant streams of the great continent of America. America. Water-fowl, vultures, and alligators have undisputed lodgings on the banks, and long lapses of distance lie between the towns; for in-stance, after leaving Corrientes, there is not a states, after leaving correlates, there is not a town for three hundred miles. Asuncion, the capital city, is picturesque, irregular, tawdry, and unfinished, the fine of I Spanish houses having been replaced by buildings more to the taste of Lopez, a semi-tarbarian in that as in every thing else. Public buildings are falling into decay be-fore they are half built, and min is written as fore they are half built, and ruin is written on every thing. There was a so-called Public Lievery thing. There was a so-called Public I-i-brary, but the books were nearly all theological, and few persons were ever seen reading there. Lopex, however, found a characteristic use for the books—he had them cut up for rocket and squib cases.

the state of the s

The Paraguayans are a handsome people, and the native costume of both sexes is beautiful, but it is abandoned almost entirely to the use of the lower classes. They are very ignorant, especially the women; and their lives are wretched, ac-cording to our ideas, though it is to be presumed they like them, or did like them, until they came to learn the unmitigated misery of prolonged and merciless war. The country has always been in merciess war. The country has always been in the worst political condition possible to its in-stitutions for the time being; so bad, that its probable extinction—a design with which "peo-ple who know" credit the allies, and which Lopez has certainly done his best to forward—would has certainly done his best to forward—would really appear to be the best thing that could happen to it. Francis, the first President of the Republic after the Spanish yoke had been thrown off, did much good, though he was a ruthless ty-rant, who might have been the model mouster had there been no Lopez. Terribly severe and irritable, and, haunted by a constant fear of as-sassination and revolt, he became, in his later wars, a moody, bitter, and cruel tyrant, above. years, a moody, bitter, and cruel tyrant, abso-lutely without a friend, or a single joyous hour. Francia ruled alone, and with irresponsible power, for twenty-six years, and died on Christmas-day, 1840, at the age of seventy-eight. He was buried in the Iglesta de la Incarnacion, the old-est church in Asuncion, in a tomb built on the est church in Asuncion, in a tomb built on the floor of the choir. The next morning the bricks were found scattered around in all directions, and his body had disappeared. What became of it remains a secret: the trembling people believed the Evil One had carried it away during the night; but it is peobable the alligators could have solved the mystery. The terrible dread his very name inspired did not die with him. "A native," says Mr. Masterman, "will never willingly speak of "el muerto," as they call him, and to this day will look round fearfully if Francis be mentioned, and only to intimate friends will tell tales of his cruel deeds and supernatural and to this day will look round fearfully if Fran-cia be mentioned, and only to intimate friends will tell tales of his cruel deeds and supernatural wisdom." The implicit obedience to which he tamed the people rendered them passive in the hands of his successors. They were perfectly submissive to Don Carlos Lopez, a man of very low birth and mixed blood, who was a tolerably good governor, for a Spanish American ruler not created and though impressions rules and overcruel, and, though imperious, rude, and over-bearing, tolerably just. He died in 1862, and his son Francisco was "elected" as his successor. On this occasion he appears to have inaugurated

"The election was but a farce. The deputies from the minety-two partedes of the republic mot in the capital, and sat in the Cabildo, which was surrounded by a strong body of troops, command-ed by the very man who asked their votes; and of course all free action, or even discussion, was out of the question. One member, it is true, out of the question. One memory, it is true, has the temerity to say that the office of President was declared by the 'organic law' of the country not to be hereditary, and that therefore Don Francisco was not eligible: he was listened to in ominous silence. Another suggested that the present was a good opportunity for modifying the laws of the country; when he was angrily told to hold his tongue by Lopez himself, who reminded the deputies that they had not met to consider the laws of the country, but to elect a new Pres-ident. That same night both disappeared, and have not been heard of since. It is almost superfluous to add that the next day 'the citizen Francisco Solano Lopez' was unanimously chosen Gefe Supremo y General de los Exercitos de la Republica del Paraguay.

There was much formal joy; and many forced stivals, which cost large sums of money, were held throughout the country; and the new Pros-ident began immediately to increase the army, having already raised his own salary to a much larger sum than his father's. There are those who believe that Lopez inaugurated the war with deliberate personal motives from the first, and give the following explanation, which in-troduces us to the inevitable female element in this strange story: "From Paris, in 1857, Lopez returned, and imported two novelties—the French uniform for officers, and a mistress for himself; the latter a most fatal step in his life, as that lady occupied, eventually, a very prominent place in Paraguayan affairs, and was, I believe, by her evil counsels, the remote cause of the terrible war which has utterly depopulated the country. She is of Irish parentage, but was born in France, and was married to a surgeon in the French and was married to a surgeon in the French army, who still lives, so I will not give his real name; that by which his wife is known in Paragusy is Madame Eloisa Lynch. She is a tall, stout, and remarkably handsome woman; and I could well believe the story, that when she landed in Asuncion, the simple natives thought her charms were of more than earthly brilliancy, and charms were of more than earthly brilliancy, and her dress so sumptuous that they had no words to express the admiration they both excited. She had received a showy education—spoke English, French, and Spanish with equal facility; gave capital dinner-parties, and could drink more Champagne without being affected by it than any one I have ever met with. A clever, selfish, and most unscrupulous woman, the infinence she exed over a man so imperious, so weak, and so vain as Lopez was immense. With admira-ble tact, she treated him with the utmost respect and deference, while she could really do with him as she pleased, and virtually was the ruler of Paraguay. She had two ambitious projects the first, to marry him; the second, to make him the 'Napoleon of the New World.' The first was a difficult one, for her husband, being a Frenchman, could not sue for a divorce; but a Frenchman, could not sue for a divorce; but should the second succeed, it would not be very hard, perhaps, to procure a dispensation, and her equivocal position would be changed for a secure one. Therefore, she gradually but insidiously imbued Lopes with the idea that he was the greatest soldier of the age, and flattered the vain, credulous, and groedy savage into the belief that he was destined to raise Paraguay from obscurity, and make it the dominant power of South America." er of South America.

Marie Control of the Control of the

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Moss Wise on most Werries!—An English elec-gyman went to an hotel to order a finner for a num-ber of elected friends. "May I sak, Sir," demand-d the waiter, gravely, "whether the party is High Church or Low Church?"
"Now, what on eath," cried the electrons in the

"Now, what on earth," cried the clergyman, "do my friends' coloites matter to you?"

"A great deal, Sir," rejoined the waiter, "if High Charch, I mest provide more wine; if Low Church, more wittles."

POPULAR DIRT OF UTAH-Spare rib.

A lady, out with her little boy and girl, bought the boy a rubber balloon, which escaped him, and few up in the sir. The girl, seeing tears in his eyes, said; "Never mind, Neddy; when you die and go to heav-en you'll dit it."

Secreme.—"My dear," said Mr. B.— to his wife, while his smilling countenance indicated the consciousness of having done a good action, "I have just had my life inserred for your benefit," "Well, I declare," said Mrs. B.— looking round upon her family and friends with an expression of injured innocence, "just to think of the selfabness of men, and particularly of husbands." There, you have been and had your life insured, while your poor wife may go without any insurance on hers. It's just what I would expect of you."

It is said ironically, perhaps that blacksmiths forge and steel every day.

People who let the grees grow under their feet-

Editors ought to be able to live chesp—they get bored" for nothing.

An ex-devil of a country printing-office was questioned as to the duties of a "printer's devil." He replied, "To bring in clean water, carry out dirty we ter, steal wood, lie, and numerous other articles."

POPPING CORN. We were popping corn, Sweet Kitty and I; It danced about, And it danced up high. And it descred up high.
The embers were bot
In their flery light,
And it went up brown
And it came down white.
White and beautiful.
Crimped and curled,
The pretriest fairy dance
In the world!
The embers were hot
In their dery light,
And it came down white.

And it came down white.

many a time are the embers!

Ah, many a time are the embers hot, And the human spirit can brook it o Yet forth from the fervent, flery light Cometh transform'd and enrob'd in wi

A sinderit was under examination once, at the College of Surgeons, when a hypothetical case was submitted, its various stages described, and the mode of treatment required. At last came the crisis: "Now, Str." said Sir A. C., "what would you do!" "Sir," replied the pupil of Esculapins, "I would send for you."

A sufferer complains that squeaking boots "mur-er sleep" in church.

"Mamma," said a little Feench girl, "do cats have souls?" "Why, durling?" "Because I should like to have my cat's soul always in heaven with mine." And then, after a memoric reflection, "Why, of course, all the cats' souls must be in heaven to catch the rate' souls."

The following notice was posted on a large box, which passed over one of the great through lines of a railroad a few days since: "Haggage smatters are requested to bendle this box with care, as it contrins nitro gives rine, Greek fire, gan cotton, and two live gotillas!" The box was not broken.

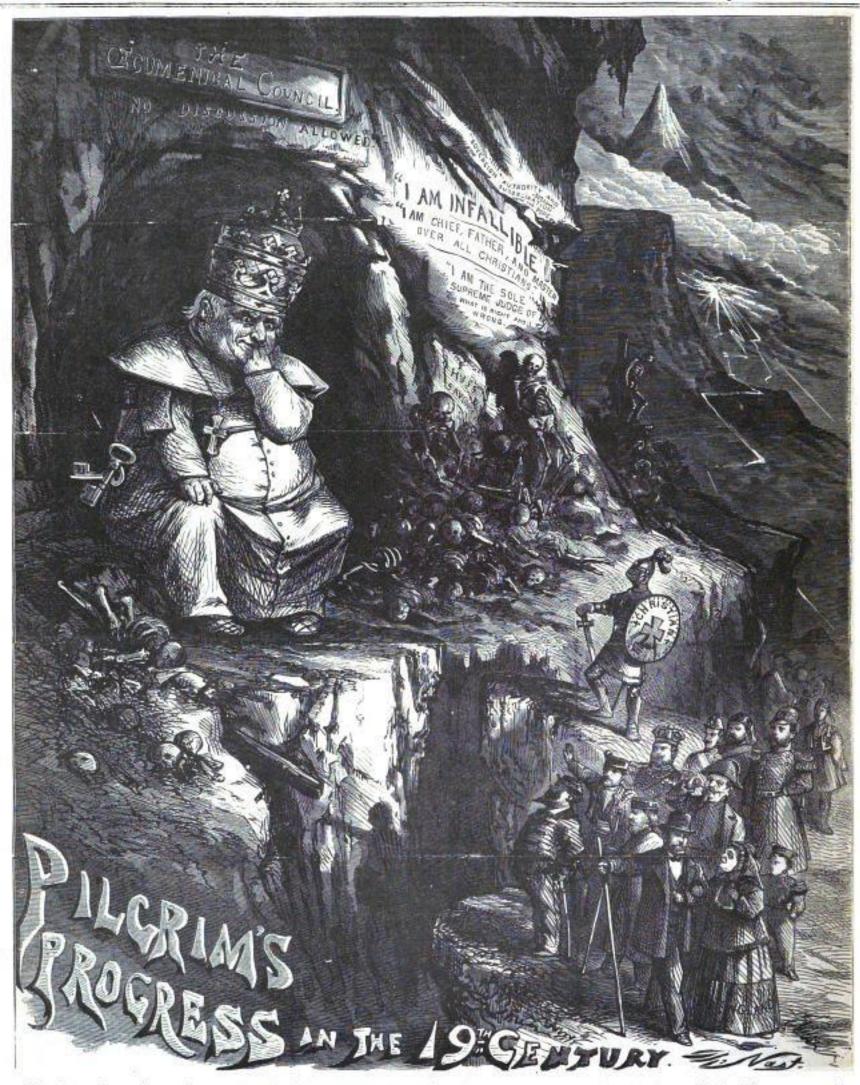

Lines taken from a hymn-book, which a young lady regulatedly left behind her in a chapel;

I look in valo—be does not come Dear, dear, what shall I do! I can not listen as I ought Unless he listens too!

He might have come as well as not!
What plagues these fellows are!
I'll bet he's fest salesp at home,
Or smoking a cigar!

The following is the latest marriage extension as suggested for marriages de contension: Pricet to belde-groom, aged sixty — "Do you marry this woman under any dehision?" "No." "Are you hald?" "Yes." "Any teeth?" "No." "Do you wear family "Yes." "Any teeth?" "No." "Do you wear family "Yes." "You believe in rheamaslem and have faith in goot?" "Yes." "You are attacky bored and incapable of being samused?" "Yes." "You care for nobody but yourneaff?" "Yes." "You care for nobody but yourneaff?" "Cartainly not." "Net for your bride?" "Naturally not." "Very good; then you two are united in the name of the law. Make her happy, as she will others."

An old tobacco chower finds that the Hible sustains his theorite habit. He quotes: He that is fifthy, let him be flithy still.]

" Now I saw in my dream, that at the end of the valley lay blood, bones, ashes, and mangled bodies of men, even of Pilgrims that had gone this way formerly; and, while I was musing what should be the reason, I espied, a little before me, a cave, where two giants, Pope and Pagan, dwelt in old time, by whose power and tyranny the men, whose bones, blood, ashes, etc., lay there, were cruelly put to death. By this place Christian went without much danger, whereat I somewhat wondered: but I have learned since, that Pagan has been dead many a day; and as for the other, many shrewd brushes that he met with in his younger days, grown so crazy and stiff in his joints, that he can now do little more than sit in his Cave's mouth grinning at Pilgrims as they go by, and biting his nails because he can not come at them.

"So I saw that Christian went on his way; yet, at the sight of the Old Man that sat in the mouth of the Cave, he could not tell what to think, especially because he spoke to him, though he could not go after him, saying, 'You will never mend till more of you be burnt!' but he held his peace, and set a good face on it, and though he be yet alive, he is, by reason of age, and also of the so went by, and catched no hurt."—Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.

"The governments of Europe which recognize the Roman Catholic Church as the State Church, generally expect that the Council will take some new action on questions directly affecting the relation of the Church to the State, and that claims will be asserted which not a single government is likely to accept or officially to recognize."—Daily Papers.

THE SALE OF INDULGENCES.

Anour three centuries and a half ago Pope LEO X., finding himself in rather straitened cir-cumstances, and unable, in consequence, to grat-ify his luxurious tastes, resolved to replenish his exhausted purse by the sale of indulgences for sins on a scale never ventured on before, veiling the true reason for this step under the present that funds were wanted to complete the church of St. Peter, at Rome. Three head-commission-ers were appointed to superintend the business in different parts of Europe, with a host of subor-dinates to work under their direction among the which the infant Jesus was cradled at Nazareth. Among the people who pressed about him was the hostess of the inn, who kneeled and kissed her own hay as a precious relic. Another seller ser own may as a precious rese. Another seller of indulgences exclaimed to a crowd of listen-ers at Baden: Ecos volunt !—(See, they fly !)— pointing to a cloud of feathers thrown out of the church-tower by a confederate, which he assured the gaping crowd were souls released from pur-

Indulgences were granted for the commission of the worst of crimes. By the present of a mag-nificent horse an officer procured indulgence not only for himself but for a hand of five hundred that two-thirds of the immense sums raised by the sale of indulgences should be retained to as-sist in defraying the expense of campaigns against the Turks. The common people also, who, for-tunately for the interests of morality and religion, were far better than the priesthood of the time, soon learned to regard Terzez, and his fellows with dislike and suspicion; and even before Letricu's open exposure of his wickedness his influence among them was rapidly declinmoralities, and should report him at Rome for censure. This was in 1518. Therest immediately sought refuge in flight. His terrore brought upon him a severe illness, from which he never recovered. He died the following year in the Dominican cloister at Leipsic.

TETZEL, it would seem, had overacted his part, and brought himself into disgrace with his superiors. The infamy of his proceedings at length

Our engraving, from a picture by Professor Hardanan, of Sintigart, represents the monk Thereat, in the beyday of his popularity. A group of soldiers are studying the license they have just bought. Pensant women perse toward him for the coveted indilgence which money alone can procure, or to purchase the release of some departed soul from purgatory.

people. One of these subordinates, Terzel by name, soon achieved an unenvisible notoriety by the shameless manner in which he drove his the shameless manner in which he drove his corrupting traffic among the German peasantry. He must have been corrupt, indeed, to surpass his follows in wickedness. All vied with each other in shameless wit and scandal. Manzet relates, in his "History of Germany," that a monk, by the name of Isatis, curried shout with him a feather which he declared had been placked from the wing of the Archangel Michael! Having had the misfortune to lose this at the village of Aldingen, he procured a handful of hay from the tavern barn, and gave out that it came from the stall in soldiers under his command. Theren, himself carried about with him a picture representing the Prince of Darkness torturing souls in the lake of Prince of Darkness torturing soals in the lake of fire; and had a couplet engraved on his money-box, setting forth that, as soon as the chink of the coin was heard in-ide, the soul for whom it was paid was released from torment. He be-came so lost to shame that he would sell in-dulgences for the commission of murder, or any other capital crime, for any sum he could squeeze out of a customer. But his popularity was of short duration. The Imperial Government took slarm at the constant outflow of money from Germany into the papal coffers; and decreed became so notorious that a commissioner was sent from Rome to examine into his conduct. Dreading the inquiry, TETZEL refused to appear when sum-moned before the commissioner at Altenburg, on the ground that he had been warned against the adherents of LUTHER at that place; but afterward, at Augsburg, he was subjected to a rigid examinat Augsburg, he was subjected to a rigid examin-ation by the commissioner, by whom he was se-verely reprimanded for his immorality, threaten-ed with the displeasure of the Holy Father, and with expelsion from his order. The commis-sioner appears to have been horror-struck with the results of his investigation. He wrote to a friend that he had detected TRIZEL in many im-

The very beggars hail his approach; for Tar-zzz.'s wares cost him nothing, and he will gauge his price to the condition of the purchaser. The picture derives additional interest from the fact that, in view of the meeting of the Œcumenical Council at Rome on the 8th of December, the Pope has this year decreed an indulgence in the form of a jubiloe, promising plenary indulgence and remission of sins to all the faithful who shall recite, in designated places before the meeting of the Council, a certain number of prayers "for the conversion of souls, and the peace, tranquillity, and triumph of the Roman Catholic Church."

"wortheaster

IN THE FALL.

The old antennal stillness holds the wood:

This mist of autumn makes the day a dream;
And country sounds fall faint, half understood
. And half unbeeded, as to sick men seem
The volces of their friends when death is near, And earth grows reguer to the tired ear.

At soft gray dawns and softer evening ends.
The air is echoless and dull with dawn;
And leaves hang loose, and whosoever wends.
It is way through woods is 'warr of altered hous.
And allen there; and off with hollow sound.
The obestnot busk falls ratiling to the ground.

Now comes the faint warm smell of fresh-built ricks And empty fields look up at empty skies, And smake floats sidelong from the burning quicks, And low across the stanted stubble flos The whitring covey, till its wings have grown A marmur—then, a memory alone.

Now, haply on some sunless afternoon When brooding winds are whisp'ring to the leaves, Shrill twitter'd half-notes fill the air, and soon From farm-house thatch and only collage caves. The circling awallows call their caper broad. And straight fly south, by macen summers woo'd.

A certain sadoes claims these suturn days—
A sadoese sweeter to the poet's heart
Than all the full-fed joys and lavish rays
Of rips arms: old wounds, old woes, departs Life calls a truce, and nature seems to keep Herself a-bush to watch the world asleep.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

In Dibe Books .- Book EE.

CHAPTER VIII.

HUGH WILL NOT HE AMBITIOUS.

Anour the middle of June Mr. Frost departed Italy. He was only to be away a fortnight liest. He would then return to London; and, at first. He would then return to London; a if all went well, would go back to Naples in

He had been to Gower Street several times He had been to Gower Street several times se-fore leaving England. He had spoken to Hugh about his prospects, and had said that if matters succeeded with the company who were employ-ing him he should be able to offer Hugh a splen-did chance of distinguishing himself.

"But," said Hugh, "this great company will have a great architect of their own. There will he subscriptors. of course, to do the developer.

be subordinates, of course, to do the drudgery, and the big man will get the credit. I do not say that that is unfair. Big men have to earn their bigness, mostly, and I am the last follow in the world to gradge them what they've earned. Besides, I do not want to be wandering about the Continent. I have served my apprenticeship and learned my trade, and now I want to try to make a home for myself and a place in the world. I am not ambitiou

A man ought to be ambitious," said Mr.

There might be a good deal to be said on that subject. But at all events, a man ought not to say he is ambitious if he isn't."

His mother and Mr. Frost succeeded, however, in persuading Hugh to remain some months longer in his present position. He was engaged by Digby and West at a weekly salary, and no per-Digny and west at a weekly salary, and no pur-manent arrangement had yet been come to. He would let things go on as they were for a while. Zillah had gained a repriere, but her anxieties remained active. At the best, she had trouble before her. If all went well, and her money— Hugh's money—were restored by the end of the year, it would still devolve on her to give her son some explanation as to this accession of fortune. some explanation as to this accession of fortune.

Her son's love and respect were very precious to her: even as her bushand's had been. She knew that Hugh inherited his father's stern ha-tred of deception. W. at would be say when he knew that his mother had concealed so import-ent a matter—and one which he surely had a right to be made acquainted with—all these years? And if he asked her, "Mother, why have you done this?" how should she answer

She was a woman of acute and observant in-telligence in most cases. In all that concerned her only son she was, of course, peculiarly quick to see and to understand. She knew that Hugh had fallen in love, and that his love was not the light, boyish foncy that Mr. Frost had tried to persuade her it would prove to be. Hugh had said no word to her on the subject, but there needed no word to convince her that she was right. And she liked Maud. She did not love her. She was not clingingly affectionate by na-ture, and all the love in her heart was absorbed by her son. But she had a kindly regard for the girl. She admired and approved her. She was get. See authors and appeared her. See was not gradging or unjust because this stranger with the deep bine eyes and golden hair had become paramount in Hugh's thoughts. She knew him to be steadfast and true; and she was well assured that neither lover nor wife would push her-self from her due place in her son's love and respect. But as she watched Hugh's growing love for Mand, the thought of falling from her own high honorable place in his regard became more and more painful and intolerable to her. Hugh had implicit faith in his mother's purity and geodness. She was his high model of wemon-hood; and he had often said to her, "I only hope my wife may be as good as my mother! I can't wish for any thing better." But could be still say so when he knew—?

There was a little human jealousy within her breast which made her feel that to humble herself now before Hugh, and say to him, "My see, I have sinned. Forgive me!" would be to yield to that other woman whom he loved a too absolute supremacy; to abdicate in her favor the sole pride and glory of her pas. She did not hate Mand for stealing Hugh's beart. The wife would be nearest and dearest; that she was resign if not content, to bear. She would still be honored mother. But she thought she would come to hate Mand if Hugh ever were to diminish by one tota his tribute of filial reverence. And all this time Maud knew no more of the position she occupied in the thoughts of the mother and son than we any of us know of the place e hold in each other's minds. After the party at Mr. Lovegrove's Mand had criously begged her aunt not to take her out to uny similar gathering again.

"I would not say this, dear Aunt Hilda," said Maud, "if I thought that you derived any gratification from the society of those people. But I watched you the other night, and I saw—I fancied-that you looked very weary and uninter-

"Not uninterested as long as my pet was there. I like to see ye admired, Maud." "Admired! Dear Aunt Hölda—"

"Weil I know, I grant ye, that the folks there were not of the class you ought to associate with. And if I were but in my rightful and proper posi-tion, what a delight it would be for me to present ye to the world you were born to live in! But as to presenting, my dear child, sure how would I go to court in a street cab? and living in Gower Street! I don't say any thing against it, and some of the old family mansions are in drearier places; but, after all, you know, there would be a degree of incongruity about attempting to en-tertain, or any thing of that sert, in a ledging of this kind; and ye know, Maud, he barely allows me enough for the necessaries of life as it is. Some women would run him into debt. But I couldn't bring myself to do that-barring abso-hate necessity: not to mention that I'd have to bear all the bullying and annoyance, seeing that he's safe and comfortable away beyond seas!" Mand endeavored to persuade her aunt that it was no feeling of pride which rendered her unwas no teering of prote which residered her un-willing to go to the Lovegroves. She disclaimed such a sentiment with much warmth. No: it was simply that the people she met there were uncongenial to her. That might be partly her own fault, but the fact remained so.

Mand did not say that the anxiety of suspense about Veronica made it irksome to her to see strangers. It was a subject that could not be mentioned between her aunt and herself. But as the weeks were on, and no answer came to her letter, her heart sank. She had scarcely been aware how strong a hope had sprung up within her on the receipt of Veronica's letter, until she began to measure the depth of her dis-appointment as the time rolled by and brought o further communication.

In the old days at Shipley Mand would have In the old days at shapery mann would menioved the oddity and newness of the society she had met at the Lovegroves. But now such enjoyment was impossible to her. She was conscious of nervously shrinking from a new face, of nervously dreading a chance word which migh touch on the still recent shame and sorrow that had befallen them all, as a wounded person starts away from the approach of even the gentlest hand lest it should lay itself unawares upon his hurt.

Mr. Frost's sodden mention of his proposed journey to Italy had disturbed her for this rea-son: though she told herself how absurd and weak it was to be so disturbed. Hundreds of people went to Italy, of course; many even of people went to Italy, of course; many even of the few people she knew were likely enough to do so. But in the frequent silent direction of her thoughts toward Veronica she had grown to associate her entirely with the word "Italy," as though that country held but one figure for all men's observation!

The question persistently presented itself to her mind; Did Mr. Frost know the story of Veronica? Was he aware who the man with whom she had fied?

Something a little forced and unnatural in Mr. something a little forced and unnatural in Mr. Frost's manner of introducing the subject of his approaching journey had struck her. Why should he have selected her to speak to respecting Hugh Lockwood's prospects? Had he had any purpose in his mind of sounding her respecting her feeling toward Veronica, and had he chosen this excess for siving her the information that he case for giving her the information that he was bound for Italy?

The impossibility of discussing this matter with her aunt, and the necessity she was under of shutting herself up from the consolation of sympathy or companionship regarding it, made her morbidly sensitive. She broaded and tormented herself.

At last she took a resolution: she would speak to Mrs. Lockwood. That the latter had she was well convinced. But even were that not so, Mrs. Lockwood would have heard it all from Hugh. Mr. Frost was the Lockwoods' old and intimate friend. Maud resolved to speak to Mrs. Lockwood. One afternoon after their early din-ner she stole down stairs, leaving Lady Tallis asleep according to custom. Her tap at the par-lor door was answered by Mrs. Lockwood's soft voice, saying, "Come in;" and she entered.

Mrs. Lockwood sat at the table, with an account-book before her. She looked, Mand thought, eld and harassed.

"Do J disturb you, Mrs. Lockwood? Please say so, if I do; and I will take another oppor-

"You don't disturb me in the least, my dear Miss Desmond. I have just finished my ac-counts for the month. Do sit down and tell me what I can do for you. There is nothing the matter with my lady?" she added, hastily, looking at Mand's face.

"Nothing, nothing. Do not let me startle you. I wanted to take the liberty of speaking to you in confidence—may I?"

Mrs. Lockwood took off the speciacles she was wearing, passed her hands over her forehead and eyes, and answered, quietly, "Pray speak."

Her manner was not tender nor encouraging, nor even very cordial; but it nerved Mand bet-ter than a too great show of feeling would have done. In a few words she told Mrs. Lockwood what Mr. Frost had said to her at the Lovogroves' about his journey to Italy, and so forth.

"Now what I wanted to ask you was this, "Now what I wanted to ask you was this, said Maud: "You know Mr. Frost well, and I do not; do you suppose he had any special motive in eaying all this to me, a total stranger?"

"Any special motive?" repeated Mrs. Lockwood, reddening, and looking, for her, singularly embarrassed.

"I mean—what I mean is this, Mrs. Lock-wood: the story of the great scerow and afflic-tion that has befallen the home that was my home from the time I was a little child until the other day, is known to you. I am afraid—that is, no doubt it is known to many, many other people. Is Mr. Frost one of those who know it? And did be mean to learn any thing or tell any thing about Veronica when he spoke to me of going to Italy?"

"Oh!" said Mrs. Lockwood, drawing a long breath and then covering her mouth with one white, delicate hand. "You were not thinking of yourself, then, Miss Desmond?"

"Of myself? What could Mr. Frost's plans be to me, or why should be care that I should know them?"

It was of Hugh he spoke, I thought. to me as of something that it concerned me to know! I think of Veronica so constantly, and I am obliged to lock my thoughts up from Amt Hilda so jealously, that perhaps I grow morbid. But I thought you would forgive my speaking to

As to Mr. Frost, I can answer you in two "As to Mr. Frest, I can answer you in two words. He knows from the Lovegroves that you have left Mr. Levincourt's house because his daughter ran away under particularly painful circumstances. But if your aunt has been discreet" (it was a large "if," and Zillah plainly showed that she knew it was so), "neither the Lovegroves nor Mr. Frost know the name of the man she was a switch. It has been a subject man she ran away with. It has been a subject of gossip, truly, but not in the circles of society where the Lovegroves move. Sir John Gale has lived so long out of England that he is almost forgotten."

"Thank you, Mrs. Lockwood," said Mand,

"I infer from what you say that you have ome reason to believe that your guardian's some reason to believe that your guardian's daughter is at present in Italy?"

"Oh yes, I forgot that you did not know.
I—I had a letter from her."

Mrs. Lockwood raised her sysbrows and looked at Mand attentively.

"I know I can trust you not to mention this to my scant. You understand how impossible it is for me to speak of Veronica to her. Annt Hilda is kind and gentle, and yet, on that subject, she speaks with a harshness that is very painful to me."

" Lady Tallis has been infamously treated." "You must understand, if you please, Mrs. Lockwood, that I have told Mr. Levincourt of my letter. It is only a secret from Aunt Hilds."
"You were very fond of this young lady?"
said Zillah, with her eyes observantly fixed on Mand's changing face,

"Yes," answered Mand. Then the tears gathered to her eyes, and for the moment she could say no more.

"Your fondness has not been destroyed by this miserable business?" pursued Zillah.

Mand silently shook her head, and the tears fell faster.

"Would you see her and speak to her again if you could? Would you hold out your hand, to her?" Mrs. Lockwood, as she spoke, kept her mouth concealed beneath her hand, and her eyes on

Mand was aware of a certain constraint in the elder woman's tone. She thought it sounded disapproving, almost stern.

"Oh, Mrs. Lockwood," she eried, in much agitation, "do not judge her too hardly! You have such a lofty standard of duty; your son has told me how excellent your life has been; he is so proud of you. But do not be too hard on her. If the good have no pity for her, what will be-come of her? I do not defend her. She failed in her duty toward her father; but she has been most basely and cruelly deceived, I am sure of "Deceived by her great love and faith in this man?" said Zillah, unwaveringly preserving the same look and attitude.

Mand grew very pale, and drooped her head.

Zillah removed her hand from her mouth, and, clasping both hands, rested them on the table before her. When her mouth was no longer concealed, she cast her eyes down, and ceased to look at Mand while she spoke.
"See now, Miss Desmond," said she, in her soft voice, "how unequally justice is meted out in this world! Once I know a girl—little more the this world! Once I knew a girl—little more than a child in years—very ignorant, very unpreceeted, and very confiding. She was not a handsome, hanghty young lady, living in a respectable home. This girl's associates were all low, vile people. She was not by nature vicious or wicked, but she loved with her whole childish, inexperienced heart, and she fell. She was 'most basely and cruelly decrived — I quote your 'most basely and cruelly deceived'—I quote your words. It was neither vanity nor valuglory that led her astray—nothing but simple, blind, misplaced affection. Well, nobody piried her, no-body cared for her, nobody helped her. If you, or any delicately nurtured young lady like you, had met her in the street, you would have drawn your garments away from the contamination of her touch."

"No, no, no! Indeed you wrong me! If I had known her story I should have pitied her from the hottom of my beart."

Trom the notion of my heart.

Zillah proceeded without heeding the interruption. "And all her sufferings—they were scote—I knew her very well—could not atone, Her fault (I use the word for want of a better. Where fault lay, God knows-perhaps

"Ob, Mrs. Lockwood!"
"Do I shock you? That girl' her through life—still pursues her
"Is she alive?" That girl's fault pursued

"Alive? No; I think she is dead, that girl. Her ghost walks sometimes. But another woin some respects a very different woman, inherits her legacy of trouble and shame and sor-row. That seems hard. But if you tell me that all life is hard; that we are blind to what is our bane or what our good, or uter any other fatalist dectrine, I can understand the reason and sequence of it. But when you preach to me that 'Conduct makes fate,' that we reap as we sow, and so forth, I point to these two cases.

The one an innocent—res, an isnocent—child; the other a well-educated, proud, beautiful, beloved young woman. The loving-hearted child is crushed and tortured and forseken. The or crusted and tortured and forsaken. The-forgive me, but I speak what you know to be true—the selfish, vain, arrogant, ambitions lady commits the same sin against the world, and is rich, petted, and pampered. The rough places are made smooth for her feet. People cry How sad! A lady! The daughter of a clergyman! Her friends hold out their hands to take her back. Even you - a pure, fresh, young creature like you—are ready to mourn over her, and to for-give and caress her with angelic sweetness and pity."

Mand could not help perceiving that Mrs.
Lockwood was mentally visiting on Veronica the hard usage of the poor betrayed young girl she had spoken of. It seemed as though in proportion to the pity that she felt for that young girl, she grudged every pitying word that was bestow-ed on Veronics. Mand felt it very strange that it should be so; and she had almost a sense of guilt herself for having become aware of it. But her intellect was too clear for self-delusion, and, albeit most unwillingly, she could not but under-stand the spirit of Mrs. Lockwood's words, and or repulsed by it.

"I think—" said Mand, gently, and turning her pale face full on Mrs. Lockwood: "I am young and inexperienced, I know, but I do think that having loved one suffering person very much should make us tender to other sufferers."

'Sufferers I" repeated Mrs. Lockwood, with a cold contempt, and closed her mouth rigidly when she had spoken.

she had spoken.

"Yes," answered Maud, firmly. The color rose very faintly in her cheek, and her blue eyes shooe. "My unhappy friend is a sufferer. Not the loss a sufferer because there is truth in some of the words you have applied to her. Pride and unhitten do not author such a fall as here." ambition do not soften such a fall as hers."

Again Mand could not help perceiving that Mrs. Lockwood was balancing Veronica's fate against the fate of the betrayed young girl: and that she derived a strange satisfaction from the suggestion that Veronica's haughty spirit could suggestion that Veronica's haughty spirit could be tortured by humiliation.

"There would be a grain of something like justice in that," said Zillah, under her breath.

Mand withdrew with a pained feeling. Her mind had at first been relieved by the mere fact of uttering the name of one who dwelt so constantly in her thoughts. But Mrs. Lockwood's manner had so repulsed her that she inwardly resolved never again to approach the subject of Veronica's fate in speaking to her. But to her surprise the topic seemed to have a mysterious surprise the topic seemed to have a mysterious attraction for Mrs. Lockwood. Whenever she found herself alone with Maud she was sure, sooner or later, to come round to it.

Once she said, after a long pause of silence, during which her fingers were busied with needie-work and her eyes cast down on it, "If that die-work and her eyes cast down on it, "If that poor young giri—she is dead now, you know— could have had a friend like you, Miss Desmond, years and years ago, it might have gone differ-ently with her. It would have given her courage to know that such a pure-hearted woman pitied rather than blamed her." rather than blamed her."
"I should think all honest hearts must be filled with compassion at her story," answere Maud, in a low voice.

"Do you think a man's heart would be? Do you think that, for instance, my—my son's would be?"

"Surely! Can you doubt it?"
"Poor girl! She was so ignorant of the world! She knew there was a great gulf between her and such as you are. She had never lived with good people. They were as distant from her as the inhabitants of the moon might be. If she had had a friend like you, Miss Desmond, that poor girl who is dead, it would have given her courage, and it might have gone differently with her."

GOVERNMENT AMONG HORSES.

When left to themselves, however well do-mesticated horses may have been while in a state of servitude, a rapid return to savage wildness characterizes their unrestrained freedom. But a regular form of government is soon developed, even with a small number of individuals, which even with a small number of individuals, which assumes marked proportions and exactness as the colony multiplies. As among men, one male gains an ascendency over all the others, and by general consent becomes commander-in-chief. A large, powerful stallion is at the head of affairs, which he retains even to old ago, notwithstanding the hot blood, spirit, and magnificent muscularity of large numbers of young stallions, whose flowing manes and talls indicate the restlessness of their condition.

Another curious circumstance is this, vix., that the stallion in command for the time being is, with a few exceptions, the father of a large proportion of the whole troop. At his death a service conflict of heels decides who shall be the and controller of the harem.

On the vast plains of South America, it is a magnificent exhibition to see a noble old veteran stallion parade three and four thousand horses in station parado tares and not thousand horses in line, and then, by a sign only known to wild horses, dismiss them for the day, when they scat-ter at all points to feed. That is a stampeds, and hence the origin of that word.

THE PLIGHTED TROTH.

Cw the sands, the yellow sands, Set two lovers musingly, Clasping tight each other's hands, Sedly looking toward the sea.

"I must sail in youder ship," Said the youth unto the maid;
"Ere to-morrow's sun shall dip,
From my sight the shore will fade;

"But my heart with thee will dwell, As it dwells by thee to-day, And I only say farewell To return and ever stay."

Then the maiden whispered low, "I shall think of thee, dear love; Joy may yet give place to woe, Still my heart will constant prove."

Years have come, and years have fied, Since the lovers made their vow; Fears arose and tears were shed— But they are united now, Neath the ocean's ruthless wave, Buried deep, the sailor lies; O'er the maiden's grass-grown grave Soft and low the night-wind sighs.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

SENDAY has not been generally observed in Prance by a complete cessation from labor. But now the working-classes desire to have an entire holiday, and working-classes desire to have an entire holiday, and some decisive measures are being taken to secure this object. The newspaper compositors of lilarer signed an agreement not to work on Sunday after the beginning of November; and it is said that compositors of Paris and other cities of France will do the same. Mechanics, clorks, and laborers in general favor the movement, which is warmly approved by the militaire section of the community.

The New York Society of Practical Engineers at a recent meeting discussed the subject of "Railway Dinasters"—their causes, and the means of preven-Dinasters"—their causes, and the means of preven-tion. A properly-constructed compound red, safety brakes, safety wheels and axies, properly-construct-ed cars, suitable care in signaling and telegraphing— these were some of the details considered. A new meshod of stopping a train by its own momentum was explained and recommended. It was remarked that the apathy of railroad companies was the great cause that prevented the adoption of efficient inven-tions for prevention of secidents. When the public really awakes to a thorough sense of the constant in-security attendant on our traveling arrangements, remodice will be devised.

remedies will be devised.

On Wednesday of last week the bronze status exected over the Hudson River Railroad Dépét, in honor of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbill, was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies. A large number of invited guests were present, and the prominent exercises were a prayer by Böthop Janes, an address by Mayor Hall, and a poem written for the occasion by William Ross Wallace. This work of art, which has before been described in detail to our readers, covers as area of $125 square feet, measures about 120 feet in a straight line, and $1 feet in extreme beight; weighs nearly 190,000 pounds, and cost over $000,000. in a straight line, and it feet in extreme beight; weighs nearly 198,900 pounds, and cost over $500,000. The stator itself is placed in the centre of a colossal bass-relief, which ingendously illustrates the arhierements of Vanderbilt, in connection with remarkable inventions of the present century, and also allegorically portrays the growth and prosperity of our Republic. Commodere Vanderbilt, the President of the New York Central and the Hodson River railroads, has been most successful in accumulating wealth; but this tribute to him is not a mare set of homage to immense riches. The remarkable traits of character which have made him a preminent man of the age, are weethy of califysation in young and old; and this memorial will serve to remind all that energy and perseverance seldom go unrewarded. and perseverance selfom go unrewarded.

Certain English students are carrying their spirit of experimental investigation a tride too far. At Rossall College, in North Lancashire, one of the col-Recasil College, in North Lancashire, one of the col-legians, Hogan by name, was observed to put some-thing into a singar-basin at breakfast-time, and short-ly afferward to make tender inquiries after the health of Mr. Sleip, a master connected with the establish-ment, who, fortunately, had left the sugar-basin un-touched, for on examination it was found to contain assentic. Mr. Hogan declared that he only put the assentic into the sugar out of curicetry, that he wanted to make an experiment, and considered Mr. Sleip the likeliest person to operate upon: It further appeared that he had more arsents in his possession. Under these circumstances the authorities of the college permitted young Mr. Hogan's father to take him away from the establishment. Outside of Utah, with its resident population of away from the establishment.

Outside of Utah, with its resident population of about 120,000, New York city is probably the greatest centre of Mormon operations. Here is the grand depth of their entigration department; and Mormon agents and elders are constantly passing through the city on business of various kinds. Moreover, there is a regularly organized Mormon Branch Church in Williamsburg, which is, however, only a mere restingiance for a few stationary salats, who are shifting here chiefly for the purpose of assisting those converts who require aid before they can leave for headquarters. Scattered throughout various parts of Europe are Mormon "Conferences," comprising about 12,000 persons. Converts are added from time to and the second of the time, and when a company is ready to emigrate it is taken in charge by one of Brigham Young's agents, and brought directly to New York.

Dr. Joseph Jones, Secretary of the Southern His-torical Society, estimates that the grand total of deaths in the Southern army during the entire war did not fall short of 200,000.

Somebody has made the distressing discovery that very few college-graduates marry, and proposes that undergraduates marry to remedy the difficulty. It is said that one-fourth of the graduates of Yale have

"Be kind enough, my dear counts," said the Em-peror to Prince Rapoleon the other day, "to walk into my private cabinet. It will detain you only a short period, and I desire much to have a conversation short period, and I desire much to have a conversation with you." The Prince entered the cabinet, but the door remained ajar. Some dispatches were just then brought to the Emperor, and he waited to read them, after which he said to the Minister, "Eh, bien I Monsieur, and what other news have you got for me today?" "Ah, etc.," said the Minister, "Parts is excited about the extraordinary speech which his limperial Highness has made to the Senate. It is revolutionary in its character, and injurious to the dynasty." The Emperor remaining elient, he continued: "What a pity that you did not send the Prince to Mexico in the place of your harmiess Maximilian, who was the best friend of Prance! The Mexicans would have delivered you, by this time, from the most danwas the heat friend of France! The Mexicans would have delivered you, by this time, from the most dangerous enemyliving." "Pet!" add the Emperor, winking with his half-closed syss toward the door of the cabinet where the Prince waited. It was too late. Prince Nagoleon suddenly appeared at the door. With a strange, half-furious, half-sarcastic look, he measured the Minister with a sweep of his piercing cyes, bowed low to him, and stepped back again into the cabinet. The Minister was struck dumb with astenishment and terror, while the Emperor, without saving a word, quistly continued to turn his cigarette saying a word, quietly continued to turn his cigarette between his fingers. Such is a bit of Paris gossip, the like of which is continually floating through that

What a catch was that ! A fisherman of Montereau. Prance, captured a fish not long ago which was found to contain a magnificent breast-pin, ornamented with thirty precious stones—diamonds, rubies, supphires, and smeralds of extraordings, based on the and eneralds of extraordinary beauty. The breast-pin is valued by Paris jewelers at the fabricus sum of George Peabody was strongly opposed to fraud in little matters as well as large ones. The conductor on an English railway once overcharged him a shil-ling for fare. He made complaint to the directors, and had the man discharged. "Not," said he, "that I could not afford to pay the shilling, but the man was cheating many travelers to whom the swindle would be oppressive." It is related of him that about twenbe oppressive." It is related of him that about twen-ty-five years ago he was so much pleased with an American lady visiting London that he offered ber his hand and fortune, which were accepted. Learning a short time afterward that she was already engaged—a fact of which she had kept him in ignorance—he re-bulsed her lack of sincertry, and broke off the engage-ment.

It is a significant fact that in answer to a recent ad-vertisement in one of the morning papers for a night-watchman no less than one thousand applications were received. Is this an index of the number who are destitute of employment?

are destitute of employment?

The Lessest treats the subject of rowing at length, showing that instead of the back being the carsenan's strong member, the power of his stroke is given by the great muscles of the buttock, the plate of the anatomist. According to this anthority, the rowing action is composed of two movements. The first is the srection of the trank from its stooping to a perpendicular position; and this is done, not by the srector spines, but by those powerful conta above-named, which we are whenever we raise cornelves from the sitting to the standing positive. The second movement is the week of the biceps and its assisting muscles, by which the arm is bent at the elbow joint to something less than a right angle. Upon the question whether the body should be straightened and the tion whether the body should be straightened and the tion whether the body should be straightened and the arm bent simultaneously or consecutively, authorities differ. Although time is gained by doing two things at coce, the Lenort is of opinion that the physical force of the body is hampered by the double action; and that the plustel, which do the heavy work, will contract with greater force and freedom, if they act singly and alone, than if they divide the available power of the body with the brackled muscles.

the body with the brachial muscles.

The Wall Street brokers, in a spirit of firn and mischief, unveiled a buriseque statue at the same hour when the geomine bronze memorial of Commodore Vanderbilt was receiving due bouors. The Stock Exchange was the scene of the wildest merriment during the indicrous ceremony. The first center was interrupted in the very beginning of his speech by a facetious broker who presented a bouquet of cabbages, which was acknowledged with the grace of a prima doma. Humorous silusions to the "Rafiroad King" and his doiner raised many merry shouts, and the donna. Humorous allusions to the ""Intiroad King" and his doings raised many merry shouts, and the programme included the singing of sundry joily songs. The whole affair closed with an expression of the greatest good feeling toward the Commedore.

Since the withdrawal of Père Hyacinthe from the order to which he belongs, it is forbidden to the barefooted Carmelites to preach in public.

M. Catacany, the new Minister from Russia to the United States, was been in Athens, his father being at that time the representative from Russia at the court of Greece. It is said that he succeeded in obcourt of Greece. It is said that he succeeded in ob-taining the appointment to the post of Minister to the United States in spite of the Emperor, with whom he is no favorite, through the influence of Prince Gortacha-toff. He is a man of intelligence and rioquence, and possesses in a marked degree the peculiar characterbeties of the Hussians.

The grandfather of the late Lord Derby originated the great race called the Berby. His father was the principal sporting poor of his day, and continued on the test up to the time of his death, which occurred at the age of eighty. The late fact owned many val-uable horses, and his death is an event in the sporting world. The facility sent at Koussier, in Leonarding. world. The family seat at Knowsley, in Lancashire, has had a race-horse breeding stud on it for a century, and many distinguished horses have been bred there.

Sainte-Beave, the celebrated critic, never fought but one duel. He quarreled once with a Mr. Dubois, and a meeting was appointed. Sainte-Beave arrived on the ground with an ancient fint-lock pixtol and an umbrella; and se it begen to rain, he at once unferied the latter implement. His adversary and the secondaryshemently protested, but Sainte-Pruve declared that he had no objection to being killed, but he did not intend to get wet. So the duel west on, Sainte-B holding up his umbrella all the time. Four shots exchanged without injury to either combatant.

exchanged without injury to either combatant.

The pleasant ways in which a scrupolously regulated diet affects the physical as well as the moral man are infinite. A certain philosopher found that when he are moderately, and had brought himself into sound health, the same shoes were easy which had been tight. He studied a pair of shoes. He had a pair rather smaller than usual, which afforded him the opportunity of making his observations with great accuracy. Having purposely tried excess of diet, he found them so pathwill as to be unbarrable on the feet. But they were perfectly easy and comfortable when he are only that happy quantity—enough. He traces even come to indigestion.

The Expens Agricultural College has but accombined.

The Enness Agricultural College has just appointed a new Professor of Horticulture—Miss Mary Howey. This is a new field for woman's labors; but doubtless there are some who can manage it well and gracefully. We trust Miss Hovey's gardens will blossom inxertently. antly.

Donn Stanley records in his "History of Wests Dean Stanley records in his "History of Westmin-ster Abbey" a wild legend, yet one precious to those who love the Sabbath, as showing how sacred the Locd's day was held in the worst ages of the church, and in times long antecedent to the fall of Popery and the rise of Paritanism. The Abbey was conse-crated, so the legend runs, by a celestial being. The time of his appearance was a Sanday evening, and his form that of a man. He was ferried scross the Thames by a faberman whom he found engaged fashing for animon. So soon as he steeped from the boat to the bank where the Abbey stood, the whole sky burst into a blase of light, and the astenished fisherman, resting on his care, saw a great multitude of angels descend-ing, each carrying a lighted candia. Attended by this on no care, saw a great minimose or angest descend-ing, each carrying a lighted candle. Attended by this brilliant train, the celestial being consecrated the flours of God. When the ceremony was over he re-turned by the way he came, but not till, along with an injunction that the Thames should pay tithe of salmon to the monks, he warned his ferryman to ab-stain henceforth from fishing on the Lord's day.

THE NEW OVER-COAT.

Ir was Christmas-day, but the festivities of that occasion scarcely existed for the Harford family. The mother had done her best to make it seem like Christmas; but her drunken hus-hand had just slammed the door behind him, while she, her face flushed with a blow, turned to her boy, Fred, who had sunk down by the fireside, and given himself up to melancholy houghts.

While sitting thus, Fred formed a resolution While sitting thus, Fred tormed a resource.

He would go to the city and find employment;
he would be sober and industrious, and afford that help and comfort to his poor mother which she could look for from no other source.

she could look for from no other source.

Fred carried out his determination. Two years passed by, and he was to come home to spend Christmas. It was early in the morning when he reached home, and proceeded to wake his mother in a novel manner. He commenced one of their old familiar carols, which he had many a time sung with the little ones at home. Not a jot cared he whether he awoke the whole mighthead or not with his Not a jot cared he whether he awoke the whole neighborhood or not with his resonant tenor voice, so that he awoke his mother, and so that she recognized his voice. That was all he cared for. But Mrs. Harford was already awake. Thoughts of her boy had made her sleepless, and she had heard the swift footsteps clanging down the streets, and then stop sud-denly at her door, when the singing began; and altogether it made her heart leap, for she fan-cied she knew the step, and how well she knew cied she knew the step, and how well she knew the carol! But the voice? It might be her the carol? But the voice? It might be her boy's, but if so, how changed—how deep and manly? A knock followed the carol, during the singing of which she had hastily dressed herself, tumbling over herself almost in her haste, and making a noise which aweke the children in the next room, though it did not wake her husband. He was sleeping off a drunken fit, and it would have taken something a little less noisy than booming cannon to arouse him.

In a moment she was at the door, and mo-In a moment she was at the door, and mo-ther and son were in each other's arms. After a long embrace she stood away to look him up and down, and after a fund survey, she said, "How you are grown, Fred! and how well you look! and how well-to-do in that great-coat: it makes you look quite the gentleman!"

"It's a real treasure, mother," and Fred;

"It's a real treasure, mother," said Fred;
"and doesn's it keep the cold out;"
"I should think so," said the mother, laying her hand upon it appreciatively. "It's a beau-tiful thick cloth, Fred. How did you manage to get it out of your small earnings, after what you've sent me? I'm sure I've been afraid that you did not leave yourself a penny scarcely. You needn't have been afraid.

Why, I've got a watch, too! look here. I gave fifty shillings for it."

"La, Fred! how ever did you menage it?" "I'll tell you by-and-by, mother. Now please belp me off with my great-cost; for my hands have got the frost in them to-night. I had half a mind to being this coat for father. But then, thinks I, it would soon be lodged at uncle'seasy come, easy go, you know—so I decided rather to tell father how to get one as I got this:

How meerily the breakfast-time passed, and what a happy day they hoped to spend! The sunshine was come into the house at last; it lighted up the faces of the sad mother and her lighted up the more or the sea insocer and sea-children, and made all bright. Toward nine o'clock the merry hubbub in the house awoke Mr. Harford; and learning that Fred was come, he set himself to the dreaded task of getting up.

Presently the church-bells began to chime, and Fred proposed that they should go to their house of worship. "I shall be glad to see the familiar old place again," he said. All the chil-dren wanted to go with Fred, and he wanted his father to go too. He refused quite decidedly at first; it was out of the question, he said, and he never went to church now. "All the more resecu.why you abould go to-day, father," urged

But I've got nothing fit to put on," said the father.

"Yes, you have," said the wife; "your best cont is up stairs."

"How came it there?" he asked, in astonish-

"Never mind about that now," said Mrs. Har-ford; "but just go and make yourself sprace, and go out with Fred this once. We may never meet fogother on a Christmas-day again, you know."

"Look at Fred's coat—what a beauty!" cried Susie, as Fred took it from a peg behind the door.

"Why, Fred, you look as though you were getting on in the world," said his father. "How did you manage to get that and your watch too?"

"You must know I haven't spent a farthing

"You must know I haven't spent a farthing of my wages on them," said Fred.

"Then how in the world did you get them?"

"The price of half a pint of beer z day for nearly three years got these for me," said Fred.

"All the fellows at our place are allowed half a pint a day. I told master that I'd rather not have any, and if he liked to make me any allowance for my not having it, he might; or I'd just leave it, and say nothing about an allowance. He said he liked to encourage young fellows to be abtainers, and allowed me three half-pence a day. That has been faithfully given me for about two years and nine months, and has been something like six pounds five shillings in my pocket. With that, you see, I have been well able to buy my watch and coat, and to sent home some little Christmas gifts last year, as well as to bring these."

well as to bring these,"
"Who'd ever ha' thought that three half-"Who'd ever ha' thought that three half-pence a day saved would have run up to that in less than three years?" said Mr. Harford, think-ing delefully of the many pence, and not only pence, but sixpences, he had spont day after day during that time and for years before—six-pences that made many pounds, which would have bought him coats, watch, and perhaps a house too—so many had he squandered. Ned was trying to do a sum of the same kind in men-tal arithmetic, though with lower figures than tal arithmetic, though with lower figures than those which came to his father's mind; and both began a series of self-reproachings, and both felt that they had been foolish in the high-degree.

"You did well—you did well, Fred," said his father, with a sigh.

Then Mr. Harford and his children went to church. When they returned Mrs. Harford seemed much suprised to see her husband returning with the rest; and she bustled about with a glad heart to get her Christmas dinner, just as in the happy days of long, long ago.

just as in the happy days of long, long ago.

Mr. Harford managed to eat a preity good meal, and felt the better for it. When it was over, and oranges and other good things brought by Fred were being discussed, his fishess air quite passed away, and he playfully helped the children to make wonderful things with orange-peel. By-and-by he leaned back in his chair, and said, "I can't believe it's me sitting here at home like this—semething like the poor follow as our parson was reading of this morning, as was sitting 'clothed, and in his right mind."

"Ah, it does n e good to see you," said his wife, with glistening eyes.

"Ah, it does no good to see you," said ma wife, with glistening eyes.

He looked down at his coat to avoid her glance, and said, "This may look tidy, missis, but it don't keep the cald out; I was regular nipped coming home from chapel."

"You ought to have a great-coat like Fred's," she replied. "You might easy get one, as he did, after next winter."

"What I wave three half-cence a day? "Course did, after next winter."

"What! save three half-pence a day? "Course I could, and I'll begin," he said.

"But I did something more than that, father," said Fred. "If I hadn't, I might just have gone on saving for a month or two, and then let it all."

"What did you do?"

"Why, I just kept right away from the public bouses. They're the places to keep one from having a coat to one's back; they strip you, if you frequent them; but they'll never clothe you. You'll begin to save three half-pence a day for a You'll begin to save three half-pence a day for a great-cost, father, as you say; but will you do the other thing? If you only would, I'll tell you what you'd get besides. Why, good boots, good hat, a watch in your pecket, clothes for the youngsters, good food and plenty of it, a comfortable, happy bonse and wite, health of body, and a clear and peaceful mind."

"Surely, sarely!" chimed in Mrs. Harford, in half and half-burgel! tone a half-sad, half-hopeful tone.

"And only one thing robs you of all that, fa-You know what it is, and how to con it, too; our minister told it all so beautifully this morning. God gives the victory over all evil, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Only we must not be still, and leave the fighting to our Captain; we must strive and struggle hard to overcome, relying on His help. You remember that he said all that, father?"

all that, father?"

"Yes, I minded it well. It seemed all for me. I thought then, if I could only begin striving I might overcome. Others—hundreds and thousands of others—have fought against this cursed liabit of drinking, and over one it.",

"So may you," said Mrs. Harrard. "Why, you've begun already, James. Think! you haven't had a drop to-day! Ill you've got to do is just to go on as you've begun, that's all."

"That 'll be enough, I sues, as the days go.
Srill, falks say as the irst stee is the hardon. Still, folks say as the list step is the hard-est, and I've taken the first, you say?"

Yes, yes."

"Ah, and I feel it too. Fred, my boy, if we "Ah, and I feel it too. Fred, my boy a dinner of all live till next Christmas we'll have a dinner of our own buying, please God, and not of yours; and if you come to see us, I'll have as respectable a great-cost on as you."

THE NEW OVER-COAT.-[SEE PAGE 763.]

"And I too," said Ned, standing up very straight to give emphasis to his words. "No more o' say tin shall go into the publics, not if I know it. I knows a trick o' getting the value of it now, as I didn't think of afore I saw Fred's great-cost."

So, to make a long story short, it came to pass that Fred's great-coat was an instrument chosen to work quite a revolution in Harford's home.
Did you ever know a man give is who commenced climbing upward and onward, with a strong determination, and relying upon God for strength and assistance? Never.
No, he did not give in; and the happy Christmas-day which they spent on the occasion of Fred's memorable visit was the first of a long series of happy ones. The sunshine that he brought did not fade away; it brightened and brightened into a perpetual glow of comfort and peace.

Fred did come home again on the following Christmas, and walked to chapel with his parents and brothers and sisters; but he was not the only one that went out of the house with a great-cost which I could never have for any other."

"THE BUTT-SHOOTING A CHERRY."

Our illustration sufficiently explains its own meaning. At first sight of the subject the stickler for the dignity of art might complain at the triviality of the incident represented. But the subtle observation of the painter, his delightful geniality, and the exquisite finesse with which he has caught all that is most characteristically boylike in gesture and expression, mise the picture into a region of purest humor, infinitely higher than the vulgar, coarse, and often brutal comicality of many of the old Dutch masters. The painter, like the poet and novelist, who enlarges the range of our sympathies, deserves the gratitude of all human kind; and in the moral, as in the physical, world there are inexhaustible materials for wonder and pleasure, in the lowly as in the elevated. Besides, in the realm of boyhood may we not find many analogies full of suggestiveness with more advanced life? How often, for instance, do we not see "children of a larger growth," greedy for gain, ready to become the "butt" of all kinds of indignities for the sake of a chance advantage—like the butcher-boy in the picture? Look at him; how astaions he is to aid the marksman—how, for steadiness, he plants his feet wide asunder; how, to facilitate the aim, he protrades his head and gapes his widest to catch the cherries! His eyes he protects with his fingers, but little he cares for the ridiculous smears on his checks from stray shots, which, of course, are more visible in the painting. Boylike, again, how totally oblivious in the excitement of the game are the urchins of the errands on which they were sent—the one for his orders, the other with his basket of linen. The fun affords unmixed enjoyment to the cherry-selling girls, for does not the sport entail a rapid consumption of their wares? The only individual of the group who entirely preserves his gravity is the dog, and that evidently because he is not quite sure whether he should not resent the mysterious liberties taken with his master. Of the picture itself—its admirable composition, its faultiess drawing, consummate delicacy of handling, and brilliant, gem-like coloring—we need not speak; suffice it to say that it was executed at the zenith of the master's powers, as indicated by the date, 1848, of its exhibition at the Reyal Academy—that is, two years after the exhibition of the famous "Choosing the Wedding Gown,"

MOHAMMED'S PORTRAIT.

Monamer was of middle height, rather thin, but broad of shoulders, wide of chest, strong of bone and muscle. His bead was massive, strongly developed. Dark hair—slightly curled—flowed in a dense mass down almost to his shoulders. Even in advanced age it was sprinkled by only about twenty gray hairs—ponduced by the agonies of his "Revelations." His face was oval-shaped, slightly tawny of color. Fine, long, arched eyebrows were divided by a vein which throbbed visibly in moments of passion. Great, black, restless eyes shone out from under long beavy eyeloshes. His mose was large, slightly aquiline. His teeth, upon which he bestowed great care, were well set, dazzling white. A full beard framed his manly face. His skin was clear and soft, his complexion "red and white," his hands were as "silk and satin"—even as those of a woman. His step was quick and elastic, yet firm, and as that of one "who steps from a high to a low place." In turning his face he would also turn his full body. His whole gait and presence were dignified and imposing. His countenance was mild and pensive. His laugh was rarely more than a smile. "Oh, my little son!" reads one tradition, "hadst thou seen him thou wouldest have said thou hadst seen a sun rising." "I," says another witness, "saw him in a moonlight night, and sometimes I looked at his beauty and sometimes looked at the moon, and his dress was striped with red, and he was brighter and more beautiful to me than the moon." than the moon.

In his habits he was extremely simple, though he bestowed great care on his person. His ent-ing and drinking, his dress and his furniture, retained, even when he had reached the fullness retained, even when he had reached the fullness of power, their almost primitive nature. He made a point of giving away all "superfluities." The only laxuries he indulged in were, besides arms, which he highly prized, certain yellow boccs, a present from the Neges of Abyssinia. Perfumes, however, he loved passionately, being most sensitive of smell. Strong drinks he ab-

His constitution was extremely delicate. He was nervously afraid of bodily pain, he would sob and roar under it. Eminently unpractical in all common things of life, he was gifted with in all common things of life, he was gifted with mighty powers of imagination, elevation of mind, delicacy, and refinement of feeling. "He is more modest than a virgin behind her certain," it was said of him. He was most indulgent to his inferic a, and would never allow his awkward little page to be scolded, whatever he did. Ten years, said Anas, his servant, was I about the prophet, and he never said as much as "Liff" to me. He was very affectionate toward his family. One of his boys died on his breast in the smoky house of the nurse, a blacksmith's wife. He was very fond of children. He would stop them in the streets, and pat their little checks. He never struck any one in his life. The worst expression he ever made use of in conversation was, "What has come to him?—may his forewas, "What has come to him?-may his fore-bend be darkened with mud!" When asked to need be caracted with must: when asket to curse some one he replied, I have not been sent to curse, but to be a mercy to mankind. "He visited the sick, followed any bier he met, ac-cepted the invitation of a slave to dinner, mended his own clother, milked his gosts, and waited upon himself," relates summarily another tradi-tion. He never first withdrew his hand out of another man's palm, and turned not before the other had turned. His hand, we read elsewhere—and traditions like these give a good index of what the Arabe expected their prophet to be—was the most generous, his breast the most coursesses his forces of the contractors. ageous, his tongue the most truthful; he was the most faithful protector of those he protected, the sweetest and most agreeable in conversation; sweetest and most agreeable in conversation; those who saw him were suddenly filled with reverence, those who came near him loved him, they who described him would say, "I have never seen his like either before or after." He was of seen his like either before or after." He was of great taciturnity, and when he spoke he spoke with emphasis and deliberation, and no one could ever forget what he said. He was, however, very nervous and restless withel, often low spirited, downcast as to heart and eyes. Yet he would at times suddenly break through those broodings, become gay, talkative, jocular, chiefy among his own. He would then delight in telling amusing little stories, fairy tales, and the like. He would romp with the children and play with their toys—as, after his first wife's death, he was wont to play with the dolla his new baby-wife had brought into his house.

PHOTOGRAPHIC WONDERS.

SURELY light never will have revealed all its marvels? Every year, if not every day, it is telling us something which we had not known before, something calculated to excite our surprise and admiratio fore, something calculated to excite our surprise and admiration.

Flates can now be engraved, and are engraved, for printing without any draughtsman and without any engraver. The thing has been done in more ways than one in past years, by a combination of photography with electrotyping—photography to produce the drawing, electrotype to produce the engraving; but now a method has been devised without any electric or galvanic agency whatever. Chemistry is the engraver, and chemistry in the very simple form of solution or dissolving. The process is not for producing a seak engraving, such as the engraved kines of a steel plate, but a raised or refirf engraving, such as a wood-cut block. Light, dissolution, and pressure; let us see how they respectively do their work.

The photographic picture is taken upon sensitized glass, just as in the cedinary carte de visite, producing a negative from which any number of positives may be taken. The picture may be a portrait, a landscape, a group of scripture, an architectural focade, or what not—any thing, provided it assumes the form of a glass negative. The positives obtained from this are not upon sensitized paper, but upon a thin film of gelatine, combined with bichromate of ammonia. When sensitized paper, but upon a thin film of gelati light has been allowed to pass for a sufficient length of time through the negative to the positive, is shows its action in a peculiar way on the film; wherever the light is the strongest (as in the high lights of the picture), the film is ren-dered insoluble; wherever it is the weakest (as in the shadows), the film remains easily soluble; whetever it is intermediate (as in the half-tints), the gelatine becomes partially soluble. It is the the genume becomes partially soluble. It is the bickromate of ammonin that renders the gela-tine susceptible to these peculiar varieties of effect. We may add that the electric light now furnishes a wonderful aid in taking the positives, rendering the photographer independent of times and sensous, day and night, bright days and dull days.

days.

We have, then, a positive picture, taken upon a film of golatine containing bichromate of ammonia. This film being next placed in warm water, the substance dissolves away in the unin the parts least acted on by the light; the parts most acted on are scarcely dissolved at all;

while the medium degrees of action produce me-dium degrees of dissolving or thinning. What is the total result? The film has become a sort of buss-relief; there is a picture of raised parts and depressed parts, owing to variations in the thickness of the film; and these variations are so beautifully graduated as to produce all the tints and half-tints from high lights to deep

The pressure, which next ensues, is not the least curious part of the operation. It seems scarcely concertable that a thin film of gelatine scarcely concertable that a thin him of granule will act as a mould to impress its inequalities upon a plate of metal; yet such it certainly does. A beautifully smooth metal sheet is prepared, consisting of lead alloyed with a little antismony; the alloy is nearly (but not quite) the same as stereotype metal; it has a nicely determined de-gree of hardness (or softness, whichever we like to call it), settled after a number of experimental trials. The solution film is placed arous the lead trials. The gelatine film is placed upon the lead plate, and the two between two steel plates; the group is placed in an hydraulic press, where an intense pressure is brought to bear upon it. intense pressure is brought to bear upon it.

This pressure amounts to as much as forty tons, even for a small picture, and rises to two hundred tons (nearly half a million pounds) when the dimensions are large. We might suppose that this overwhelming force would crush the delicate film into undistinguishable fragments. Nothing of the kind. The protuberances or raised parts press themselves bedily into the surface of the lead, preducing a sunker or intention. raised parts press themselves bodily into the sur-face of the lead, producing a sunken or integlio effect in all the places where the film presents a raised or comeo effect, and vice verse. It is wonderful to see how perfect is this action upon the plate, the picture appearing almost as if the graver had produced it. And it is scarcely less wonderful that the thin film of gelatine will bear twenty or thirty of these pressures, transferring its picture to twenty or thirty plates, before being worn out.

Leatly comes the printing. If the lead plate were inked in the ordinary way with inking-rollers, and passed through an ordinary printing-press, the print obtained would consist simply of masses of black and white, without any gradations or half-tints whatever; this would result nectorally from the results mode in which the dations or half-tints whatever; this would result naturally from the peckliar mode in which the plate is prepared. An ink or color, however, it got ready, consisting of water and galatine mixed with some kind of pigment or pains. This ink, instead of being lightly applied by means of a roller, is poured as a liquid all over the plate; a sheet of paper is placed upon it; a light pressure is applied, sufficient to equeeze out all the superfluous ink; and the paper is allowed thus to remain until the galatine in the lak has "see," or slightly solidified. The print, when removed, is dipped in a fixing-bath, which renders the ink permanent.

Another curiosity in recent photographic art is an accident, not a design—a peculiarity in the camera-iens, not a purposed mode of producing negatives and positives. A photographer, taking a photograph with a particular ions, detected in it not only the usual portrait of the sitter, but a some little distance a conv. phonom. shoot. in it not only the usual portrain of the since, at some little distance a copy, phantom, ghost, or double of it—producing what was certainly a startling effect, and one not likely to be very pleasant to the sitter, especially if of a superstitious turn of mind. Fortunately, science came in, and left no room for the creations of marveline. agers. Upon investigation, it was shown that these phantoms (if we may so call them) present two different varieties, and spring from two dif-ferent causes. (1.) A photographic image is somotimes so deeply impressed in the glass of the negative by the action of light, that the subse-cent cleaning of the class plate even with strong opent cleaning of the glass plate, even with strong acids, will not completely remove the picture. When such a plate is used for receiving another picture, the original image faintly makes its re-appearance. In this case the phantom is not the "double" or "fetch" of the sitter in the second interest. It is a very faint photograph of one per-"double" or "feach" of the sitter in the second picture; it is a very faint photograph of one person on the same plate which contains a fully developed photograph of some other person; and the juxtaposition may, perchance or designedly, produce very startling Pepper-like ghost effects.

(2.) When a lens has inequalities in its substance, due to an imperfect process of annealing, or when it is subjected to unequal pressure in different parts, it acquires the property called double refraction, two images of the same object being produced by it at the same instant. This explains the production of the double or feach phantom. An English photographer found out this matter accidentally. When he took a corts de visits portrait with a particular lens, there could be seen not only the portrait of the sitter in the usual way, but at some little distance another and a fainter image—a second portrait of the same person.

ime person. In both these cases science set the matter right by showing that, in the first instance, the nega-tive glass retained a faint image of a former pic-ture; and that, in the second instance, the lens glass was subject to the influence of double re-fraction. Thus two ghosts have been "laid," and rational explanations given of seeming mysteries. It was not always so. The reader will probably recollect a little incident some half a dosen years ago, in which a photographic cur-osity, instead of being honestly explained on sci-entific date, was made instrumental to a trading dodge. An announcement appeared in one of dodge. An announcement appeared in one of our journals to the effect that a photographer took his own portrait, no one else being present in the room; that, besides his own form, there appeared on the picture the image of a young girl twelve or thirteen years old; and that this image was the portrait of a cousin of his, who had been deed several years. The young lady appeared to be sitting in the same chair as the photographer himself, as a sort of "dissolving view." The outline of the upper part of her body was well defined, though dim and shad-owy; the chair was distinctly seen through the body and arms, as also was the table, upon which one arm rested; below the waist (which was ap-parently attired in a dress with low neck and short sleeves), the image faded away in a dim mist, which simply clouded the lower part of the picture. Now it has been clearly ascertained that all this would really occur under certain that all this would really occur under certain conditions. If the glass negative had been al-ready used for a portrait of the young lady, and if it had been insufficiently cleaned before the second application in the camera, precisely such a double picture might result—the fully devel-oped portrait of the photographer being super-posed, as it were, on a faint portrait of the young girl. All this is curious and instructive; but it led at the time to a traffic in "spirit photo-graphs."

Charren Hawn and Face, Sone Lers, &c., cu at once by the use of Hawner's Compiler In w (Thereins. It keeps the hands soft in the cold weather. See that you get the gentine. Sold Druggists. Price 26 cants per box. Sent by mall receipt of 20 cents.—Hausean & Co., New York.

Warn vor van. A Coven or bronchial affection creeping on the longs, take Avan's Cannar Pacro-nat, and cure it before it becomes incurable.—[Cov.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

$10, $12, $15, $20, $25.

Watches and Imitation Bearlian and Australian Diamond Jeweiry. New Styles Ocoide Gold Chains, $5 to $19 each. Call or send for Price-List.

JOHN POGGAN.

of Americanos, for Calarch or Colds in the bead, or a pint of Paus Paisw, sent, free of express charges, on receipt of $5; or a gailou of Paus Paisw for $50, double scrength. Address R. L. Wolcover, 181 Chachem Square, N. Y. Remit by post-office order, or by express, or money in registered letter. Small bottles sold at all Drug Stores.

EVERY CONSUMPTIVE AND INVALID SHOULD IMMEDIATELY USE GENUINE

HYPOPHOSPHITES, THE BEST and ONLY SUCCESSFUL DEMEDY FOR THE CURE OF CONSUMPTION!

Miscases of the THEOAT and LUNGS. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. J. WINCEMPER & Co., Proprietors, 26 John St., N.Y.

FURNITURE.

WARREN WARD & CO.,

Nos. 15 and 17 Spring SL, corner Crosby. Ватаванияте 1800.

Wholesale and retail manufacturers of the latest styles of EMDECOM, PARLOR, DINING, and Li-BRARY PURNITURE MATTRESSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c., suitable for city and country resi-

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED

Four Months sent free of THE BEE-KEEPERS' JOURNAL and National Agriculturist.

hi is a large illustrated, double-quarto, eight-page paper, containing Five different Departments, via: Bee-Keeping, Agriculture, Home and Freedid, Ladler's and Youthe' Departments, making it the cheapest and the best family paper in Free to every applicant and to all enterprising Bee-Keepers, Address

H. A. KING & CO., 37 Park Row, N.Y.

NEWMAN & CAPRON'S

Retablishment for the sale of

HOUSE FURNISHING ds and Plated Ware, in great variety, is still lo-1172 Broadway, cor. 28th Street.

Also, Builders' Hardware, Locks, Electro-Broused of Plated Work of their own manufacture. Old bossehold articles requiring Replating done on short notice. They are also prepared to contract for Bell Work and Speaking Tubes in Hotels and Private Dwellings.

WATERS

WATERS

NEW SCALE PIANOS.

Fith Iron From, Corretung Brass and Agrafs Bridge.

Elelodoons and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured. Warranted for 6 years.

Planos, Helodoons, and Organs. From graily refused for Cash. New I-octave Planos, $25 and apward. New Cabinet Organs, $45 and apward. Second-hand instruments, $40 and apward. Monthly installments received. Warranen, 481 Broadway, N. Y.

HORACE WATERS.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR

PRIEST and NUN.

Apply at case to CRITTENDEN & McKINNEY, 1916 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

DOSET'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

A Complete Catalogue now ready. Sent free.

Booky's "Balled Singer," the new Half-Dime Series of the Best Songs. Sold every where, or specimen number mailed for Five Centa.—648 Broadway, N. Y.

THE PERIODICALS WHICH THE HARPERS

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

HARPEN'S WEEKLY is an illustrated record of, and HARPEN'S WEEKLY is an illustrated record of, and HARPEN'S Upon the events of the times. It will have been a superior of the street of the superior of the sup HARTEN'S WERKLY IS AN Illustrated record of, and commentary upon the events of the times. It will treat of every topic, Political, Electrical, Literary, and Scientific, which is of current interest. In No. 47s, for November 20, was commenced the new story "MAN AND WIPK." by Winker Collars, the Arther of "The Forest is Wilk," "So Nove." Appealat, "not "The Homeston." Subscribers will be furnished with the Werkly from the commencement of this story to the close of 1879 for 34 og.

Published Weetly, with profess Illustrations.

The young lady who buys a single number of Han-run's Banan is made a subscriber for life.—N. Y. Breeding Post.

Hangus's Banas is a Journal for the Home. It is especially devoted to all subjects pertaining to Domestic and Social Life. If fernishes the latest Fashions in Dress and Ornament; describes in-door and out-door Ammements; contains Stories, Bessys, and Pooms—every thing, in brief, calculated to make an American Home attractive.

Published Workly, with profuse Illustrations.

The most popular Monthly in the world .- N. Y. Ob-

Harper's Nacalme

The Number for December commences the Perciteth Folome of Harrar's Managers. While no change is contemplated in the general character of the Magarica, the Conductors will not full to avail themselves of any suggestions which may seld to its present interest or permanent value. Special and increased statution will be given to the departments of Proplets institution will be given to the departments of Proplets will be produced that the varieties Editorial Departments shall give a complete riseums of the times. The Rasy Chart will comment upon topics relating to social Me and manners. The Rasy Policies the important books of the day. The Menthly Secord will note all important poinical events. The December will present the faceties and associous of the times.

Hasyen's Managers contains from fifty to one hundred per cost, more matter than any similar periodical issued in the English language. Thus the ample space at the disposal of the Conductors will enable them to treat fully of all the topics embraned in their plan.

The Published Hondride warranted in tasking and anticipating for the future a continuance of the favor which has been accorded to their enterprises in the past.

Published Menthly, with profess Elizatrations.

Published Monthly, with profuse Edustrations.

TERMS for HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEERLY, and BAZAR.

Meeter sourceds for the Manager commence with the Numbers of the Manager commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Robertyldous may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the correct Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wenner and Baran commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Humber next after the receipt of his ceder. Buberthers to the Manager, Wenner, or Baran will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give nodes of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Fost-Office Order or Braft fayable to the order of Harans & Barrians is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Braft he lost or solden, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

In ordering the Manager, the Wassary, or the Baran, the rame and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

EF New Subscribers to either of Harper's Periodicals furnished from the present time to the close of 1870 for Four Dollars.

THEMS FOR ADVERTISES ON HARPER'S PERSONNELLA.

Harper's Massains.—Whole Page, $100; Half Page, $126; Quarter Page, $10—each insertion; or, for a less epace, $10 to per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Westly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $1 50 per Line—asch insertion.

Harper's Sasor.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 50 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

A MERICAN AND FOREIGN STERROSCOPIC A VIEWS in great variety. Published by P. F. WEIL, Manuf'ver and Importer, 643 Broadway.  A FINE PRESENT: A Hand Stereoscope and Nine Views, $5 00: a fine Stereoscope, with Box and Twelve Views, $6 00.

NASBY'S PAPER. $10.

The Toledo Blade.

A large quarto sheet, containing fifty-six columns filled with News from all parts of the World, Chotes original and selected Tales, Sketches, Poetry, Wit and Remort, a Commercial Department, a Religious Department, a Young Folke' Department, and an Agricultural Department, all prepared expressly for the Reason. It is the constant aim of the Proprietors to make the Beans a truly National Newspaper—not a paper for the East, the West, the North, or the South, but for The Whole Country.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY, P.M.

No homorous literature of the age has been more universally read and enjoyed than the latters of "PARSON NASEY." Alming always at the correction of some evil, combining a profound philosophy and unanawerable arguments with the keenest wit and richest humor, the "Confairt X Roads" Freather has become famous wherever the English language is read. These letters are written expressly for the Baans, and will be continued regularly in its columns.

A NEW STORY.—Mr. LOCKE (Personand V. Naisri), is now engaged on a new story, entitled "PAUL BENMAN; es. LOST AND SAVED," a Story of the Great Rebellion. This thrilling every will be published in the columns of the Raps during the coming year, and of itself will be pronounced by every reader worth many times the subscription price of the paper.

TERMS, Single Copies, $2 per year; Clube of five, $1 75 each; Clube of tem and over, $1 50 each, and an extra copy to every person getting up a Club.

PAY! PAY! PAY! We pay liberally, in Cash, all who assist us in extending the circulation

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent at very Post-Office in the United States. Send for our special Circular to Agents.

SPECIMEN COPTES sent free to any address. Send fire a copy, and at the same time give to the address of a dozen or so of your friends, at so many different Post-Offices, to whom we will send copies free and postage post. Address

MILLER, LOCKE, & CO., Toledo, Ohio,

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminum Bronze is a metal differing entirely from any error offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even ladges have been deceived. It has seriously occupied the attention of science, tife nom, and has not only called forth the eulogiums of the priess in consequence of the pries in consequence of the priess in the priess

The movements are well distinct, perfectly regulated, and as all those goods are manufactured to my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, poepsid, on demand.

Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VULLEMIN,
No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

Impaired Digestion.

All the organs of the body are, so to speak, the pen-sioners of the stomach. In that living laboratory is propared the nourishment required to sustain them, and by the vessels and ducts connected with the diges-tive apparatus, that nourishment is conveyed to every part of the system. Upon the quality and quantity of this element of life, and upon the manner in which it is distributed and amountioned physical health mainly distributed and apportioned, physical health mainly depends; and as the mind inevitably sympathizes with the body, the vigor of the one is absolutely necessary to the well-being of the other.

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS

explishes this double object that it enjoys a repu tation as a preventive and curative never beretofore at tation as a preventive and curative never heretofore at-tained by any medicinal preparation. But its direct beneficial operation upon the weak or discretered stom-ach is not its sole recommendation. It is the most comprehensive of all known remedies. It tones, strengthens, and regulates the discharging as well as the assimilating organs; gontly moving the bowels, promoting healthful evaporation through the pores, rousing the inert liyer from its surpor, and inducing harmonious and natural action in the whole saling one and natural action in the whole salual 7. This benign result is not true and machinery. This benign result is not produced by any of the reactionary drugs which are used so lavish-ly in the old-school practice, founded by Paraceleus; but by mild, safe, and agreeable vegetable agents in-termixed with a pure and mellow stimulant which dif-fuses their inflatence through the system and renders their sanitary properties active and effective.

"A good Agricultural Library"

May be found in the volumes of the

NEW ENGLAND FARMER. So says the Wardsman and Repuseres. Our subscribers will find much besides, in return for TERMS: $250 a year for the Weekly, or $1 to for the Mouthly. Send stamp for specimens and premium.

R. P. EATON & CO., Boston Mass.

$2500 to $3000 PER YEAR.—
In every town in the Union to make and sell an article of daily consemption to every facility. It is entirely new. Sale parameter as four.

Address LOUIS COSLENTZ.
Middletown, Md.

The celebrated IMITATION GOLD HUNTING WATCHES, "Callins Metal" (Improved Oroide). These justily celebrated Watthes have been so thoroughly tested during the hast four years, and their reputation for time and as imitations of Gold Watthes is as well established, as to require no recommendations. Prices: — Horizontal Watches, $33, equal is appearance and for time to Gold Watches worth $100; Prill-Jeweled Levers, $15, equal to $150 Gold ones; Prill-Jeweled Levers, sarts fine and superior finish, $20, equal to $200 Gold ones. We have just commenced making a very fine American Watch, full jeweled, Patent Lever, chrocometer halance, affected to heat, cold, and position, tay ounces down weight, equal in appearance and for time to a Gold Watch costing $200.

We charge only $25 for these magnisteent Watches. All our watches are in hunting cases, gents' and indice' sincs. Chains, Collins Metal, $6 to $5. Also, all kinds of Jewelry, equal to gold, at one-tent the price.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

We are now making Jewelry of the California Diamonds. These are real stones of great brilliancy and kardness, and can not be distinguished from the gennine stones, even by good judges. They are particularly brillians at night by settificial light, do not accratch or become dull by use, and retain their brilliancy for an indefinite time. The following are the prices:
Ladies' and Gents' Pinger Rings, single stones, one carst wit.

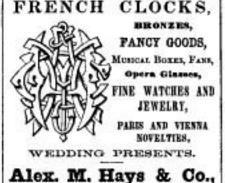

Gents' Pins, single stone, according to the rise of the stone.

45 to 26
Ladies' Cluster Pins 51 50
Ladies' Cluster Pins 51 50
Ladies' Cluster Earriags 57 00
TO CLUSS.—Where Six watches are ordered at one time, we send a Seventh watch free.

Goods sent by Express to be paid for on delivery.

C. E. COLLINS & CO., No. 320 Broadway, New York.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-ctics to be found in the city, and are offered at

tr Sign of Gold Telegraph. 41

S. W. GEERY,

S. W. GEERY,
IMPORTER,
Wholesale & Hetall Dealer in Teas, Wines, Cigars, and CHOICE FAMILY GROCERIES,
Formerly I. & W. Geery, No. 710 Broadway,
Established in 1804. New York,
The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has been the special business of this house for years.
My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquors in
the country.
Constantly on hand, a full assortment of every thing appertaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Orders will be called for (in the olif) every morning, if desired.
Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

MASON & HOADLY'S METHOD FOR THE PIANO-FORTE.

A new work which has been thoroughly tested in private teaching, and which has proved to be of the highest value to instructors, furnishing the necessary saterial to train pupils in the most thorough manner. Adapted to those who would become masters of the instrument, and to such as aim at only moderate profelency it is superior as a self-instructor. Containing the ACCENT EXERCISES invented by Mr. Mason, and frond is no other work.

By W.M. M. A. A. A. A.

By WM. MASON and E. S. HOADLY. Prios, with either American or Foreign Fingering, $4 00. Sent, postage paid, on receipt of prios. O. DITSON & CO., Besten; C. H. DITSON & CO., New York,

A GENTS WANTED for our new work; sells to all classes, without repard to politics, religion, or occupation. Now Beady:

A new Handy-Book of Family Medicine. By Grozon M. Bram, A.M., M.D., of the University of the City of New York. This is new work, written up to date. Quackery, Humburgery, and Old-Fogy Dogmas exposed. Bend for 16-page circular. . B. TREAT & CO., Publishers, 684 Broadway, N. Y.; TREAT & LILLEY, 157 Su. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES To agents to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. States slike so both side. First machine on trial. For further particulars, address

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Clereland, Obio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Lozie, Mo.

WANTED-AGENTS-To sell the Ameri-can Kultiling Machine. Price 55. The simplest, cheapest, and best Ruiting Machine ever in-venied. Will knif 35,600 silubles per rainups. Liberal inducements to Agents. Address AMERICAN KNIT-TING MACHINE CO., Sector, Mass., or St. Lonia, Mo.

$200 to $300 PER MONTH made by any man and selling lighter Moulding and Weather Strips for Duors and Windows. Pastructions and Price-Let of Materials furnished. But Bus Derman, Boston, Mass.

THE SOPRANO. A Marical Story. By Janu. Kamasponia. Paper, 1b cents: Cloth, $1 cc. LORING, Publisher, Boston.

$25 A DAY. - 23 pew articles for Agents.

Simples from H. B. SHAW, Affred, Mo.

The Companion is an eight-page weekly paper - practical in its character, wideawake, and entertertaining.

It gives a great variety of reading, interesting alike to young and old-and has for contributors such writers as ogether with many other well known and popular authors. Subscription Price $1.50. Send for a specimen copy to

Harriet Beecher Stowe, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, "Sophie May," Miss E. Stuart Phelps, Mrs. Holes C. Weeks.

PERBY MASON & CO., Publishers Youth's Compan

151 Washington St., Bosrow, Mass.

CATARRH.

BELIEF AT ONCE :-- A PERFECT CURE! HORTON'S NEW REMEDY FOR CATARRH AND MODE OF TREATMENT

AND MODE OF TREATMENT
Is an improvement, and a perfection never before abtained. It consists of the alternated inhabition of harmone liquida—they are published, cleanaing, decodurstring, southing, and powerful curvatives. Bellef and comfact follow from the first day's use, and a permanent curv in due course of time. It perceitates through the absorbents to the very cent of the disease—breaks is up at he fountain head—removes all the wretched symphone, such as pain in the temples, redses in the head, obstruction of the air passages, offensive discharges from the nestrils, and dropping of mucos (into the throat, "coid is the head," enseuing distriness, loss of memory, dismeas of vision, and restores the sense of taste and smell. It liberally extinguishes this leathsome madaly in all its forms forever, and cares the most toppless case known. Send a Stamp for Pamphlet to GERRIT NORTON, office 11 Ann St., N. Y.

TO THE WORKING CLASS.—We are now prepared to the rather diseases with constant staging species at harmon, the whole of the time or for the space moments. Realizes new, high and of people and the space that the space and the space has been as the space of the space

THE BOLLAR WATCH.—A perfect time-keeper, with superior compass attachment. Cased in pone Groide of Gold, enimeled dial, giose crystal, steel and brass works. Usual watch size. Made entirely of metal, and in eleganity-dirished Oroide case. Entirely new—patented. A perfect "gen of ingenuity." This is no weaden compass. Warranted rives years. Satisfaction generated. Sincle emple, in next case, mailed prepaid for only $1, three for $2, by addressing the sole manufacturers.

MAGNETIC WATCH CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

"A SPLENDID PAPER,"

SO BAYS ONE OF OUR EXCHANGES OF THE NEW YORK OBSERVER.

$8 to PER ANNUM. SAMPLE COPIES FREE. SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO.,

37 Pass Row, New York.

MAPLE LEAVES, colarged and improved. M. The best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magazine published. It will be sent from now to the end of 1876 for 60 conts. Send in your subscriptions o. A. BOORBACH, 192 Nassan St., New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the maierial accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circular containing full information about there Presses, prices, reconnectations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 10 cants, ADAMS PRESS CO., 55 Marray Street, New York.

POCKET REVOLVERS. SEX-Shoote A next, durable weapon; four-inch barrel. Price g12 A nest, durable weapon; four-inch barrel. Price 21 80, postpaid. Address S. G. AUSTIN, Ehie, Mich.

VINEGAR — HOW MADE FROM CIDER, 10 hours, without neigh from For droubers, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cuonwell, Conn.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored hair or T beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb sort by malf for $1. For sale by Merchants & Druggistor generally. Address Magic Comb Co., Springfeld, Mass.

THE MEXICAN; or, LOVE AND LAND, A charming poom, Sherirated; I vol. form, 950 pages, cloth binding. By mail, $1, post free. Address FUELISHER, Box 105, Brooklyn, N. Y.

PENEW!! RENEW!!!-Either Harrer's Werrity, Mortuly, or Eszar, $4, and The Pene-sological Jornaca, $2, sent to one address for $5, by S. R. WELLS, $40 Broadway, New York.

$1140 -- How I made it in Six Mon.as. Secret and sample mailed free. A. J. Fallers, N. F. $20 A DAY! Business new, Samples and the 3-

The New Books of the Season

PERCHASIAN BY HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

EW Sent by Wall, postage proposid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

HAYDN'S DICTIONARY OF DATES, relating to all Ages and Nations. For Universal Reference. Ed-lied by Edmanus Visuans, Assistant Secretary and Keeper of the Library of the Royal Institution of Great Britain; and Revised for the Use of American Renders. Sec., Cloth, $5.00.

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. By Joseph McCarrer, Anthor of "The Waterdale Neighbors." Illustrated. Sva, Paper, 75 cents.
3.

THE POLAR WORLD: a Popular Description of Man-and Nature in the Arctic and Antarctic Regions of the Globe. By Dr. G. Hantwin, Anthor of "The fica and its Living Wonders," "The Bermonies of Nature," and "The Tropical World," With Addi-tional Chapters and 160 Binstrations. See, Cloth, 80 15.

50 10.

THE ROMANCE OF SPANISH HISTORY. By Joses S. C. Annorr, Anthor of "The French Revolution," "The History of Nagonous Bousparts," &c. With Blustrations. 12mc, Cloth, 27 00.

WHECKED IN PORT. A Novel. By Escusto Yaves, Author of "Kissing the Rod," "Land at Last," "Black Sheep," &c. 6vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, King of Naples and of Italy. By Jone S. C. Ameerr, An-ther of "The History of Napoleon Bonaparte," "The French Berobition," do. 18mo, Cloth, 81 St.

ABBOTTS ILLUSTS ATED HISTORIES.

16mo, Cloth, $1 10 per volume Demo, Cloth, $1.00 per volume.

Cyron vir Great, Darion vir Great, Kerrer, AlReadder vir Great, Roberton, Handersa, Pyresee, Julito Cerar, Chopaver, Nero, Alfred virGreat, William vir Conqueron, Hickard II, Mosand II., Richard III., Mart Quiers of Bours, QuierBerersette, Charles I., Crarles II., Josephone, Marca Astronouve, Marcar Roland, Benev IV., Peter vir Great, Gregors Kear, King Philip, Herrande Conten, Hardaret of Assoc, Joseph Bonapart.

T.

A BEGGAR ON BOSSERACK; or A County Family. A Novel. By the Author of "One of the Family," "Carlyon's Year," "Found Dead," &c. evo, Paper, 30 cents.

9.
PICTORIAL FIELD BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the Blatory, Biography, Scenery, Reites, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Busses of the Revolution, "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution," With 892 Illustrations, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Barrist, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1984 pages, large Svo. Frice, in Cioth, 57 de; Sheep, 85 Sci. Pull Roam, 19 00; Half Calf or Half Morecon ettra, $10 cc.

THE MINISTER'S WIPE. A Novel. By Mrs. Out-raser, Author of "Careoticles of Carlingford," "Ferpetnal Carate," "Life of Edward frying," "Brownlows," "Agues," &c. Svo, Paper, 75 cents.

UPHAM'S MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. Mental Philosophy: embracing the Three Departments of the Intellect, Sensibilities, and Will. By Tookas C. Urman, D.D., Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Sewboin College. In Two Volumes. Vol. 1.: Intellect, Language, Vol. 11.: Sensibilities, Will. 11mo, Cloth, $1 ib per volume.

IN SILK ATTIRE. A Novel. By Welliam Black, Anthor of "Love or Marriago!" Syo, Paper, 50 cts.

12.
COUNTESS GISELA. A Novel. By E. Maxiett.
Translated by A. Nahmer. Svo, Paper, 85 cents.

A GREEK GRAMMAR FOR MEGINNERS. By Wildiam Herry Wandels, Professor of Abrical Languages in the University of Georgia. 18000, Clock, $1.00.

POUND DEAD. A Novel. By the Author of "Clarly-on's Year," "One of the Family," &c. 8vo, Paper, MOORE'S LETTERS AND JOURNALS OF LORD BYRON. The Letters and Journals of Lord Byron. With Notices of his Life. By Transas Moore. New Edition. 2 vols., 8vo, Cloth, 26 90.

GUICCIOLI'S LORD BYRON. My Recollections of Lord Byron, and those of Eye-Witnesses of his 12%. By the Consysses Gracious. Translated by Heroner E. H. JERSINGHAM. Portrait. 16mo, Cloth, $1 Th.

GEORGE HIJOT'S NOVELS, Complete. Herper's Himstated Library Edition, Complete. In 8 vols., 12mo, Mercoro Cloth, 75 cents per volume. The set complete, to a neat case, 33 Th.
Anas Bros.—The Muta. on rate Fines.—Frank Hear.
—Summa or Cleminal Life and School Massess.—

THACKERAYS NOVELS:

THACKERAL S SOUTHERS, Sup. Paper, 55 certs.

—Presesses. 179 Binstrations. Svo, Paper, 75 cis.

—The Viscouran. 150 Binstrations. Svo, Paper, 75 cis.

—The Viscouran. 150 Binstrations. Svo, Paper, 75 cents.—The Navonate. 150 Binstrations. Svo, Paper, 75 cents.—The Angestonse of Paule. 44 Binstrations and Fortrait of Author. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.—Breat Basson and Lover the Wilson Ed. 15 Binstrations. Svo, Paper, 56 cents.

CHARLES READES NOVELS:

HARLES SHADK'S NOVELS:

HARL CAM. Blusteided, Svo, Paper, Moonta.—Gausrun Galent; or, Jealoury, Blustraked, Svo, Paper, Moonta.—It is Navan Too Late to Merce, Svo, Paper, 25 cents.—Love Ms. Letrus, Love Ms. Love, svo, Paper, 26 cents.—Foot Prav. Svo, Paper, 25 cents.—Watte Livis.—Svo, Paper, 25 cents.—ProWortheaved, Cameria Jonatorous, sed Other Stories. Svo, Paper, 56 cents.—The Cloisess and the Heave. Svo, Paper, 56 cents.—The Cloisess and the E VERY ONE send stanp for Circular of Tearns to R. G. Waldaum, E. Boston, Mass. Manager regarded by Both' days grown. Per Accepta-

FRIEND (to newly-arrived Irishwan). "Ah, Mike, me boy, you're just in time to Vote. Come away with me and get Naturalized. Yer may be an Alderman soon yerself, if yer like," Hatter and Furrier.

DANIEL D. YOUMANS.

717 BROADWAY,

offers at low prices

LADIES' FINE FURS in every variety; SEAL and ASTRACHAN SACQUES AND TURBANS; WHITE FOR MUFFS AND BOAS; CHILDREN'S FURS, GENTS' FURS, &c.

Importer of ENGLISH HATS for Gentlemen's Wear.

WILLSON'S SCHOOL and FAMILY CHARTS.

To canvass every state in the Union. Men of Franklin Square, New York.

ability, and well recommended, can realize handsome prodis. For particulars and terms, address HARPER & BROTHERS, POINSONES,

AGENTS WANTED for

MESADOT NUMBER

C. G. Gunther's Sons,

502-504 BROADWAY.

Offer a very Elegant Assortment of Novelties in

SEAL AND ASTRAKHAN SACQUES,

TURBANS,

Boas, Ties, &c.

STEINWAY & SONS' GRAND, SQUARE, AND UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Recipients of the First Grand Gold Medal of Honor at the Exposition Universelle, Paris, 1867; the Grand Testimonial Medal of the Parin Societe des Beaux Arts, in the same year: the Grand Honorary Gold Medal of Merit, with the Crown and Ribbon, from the King of Sweden and Norway, and the Academical Houser and Memberahlp from the Royal Academies of Sciences and Arts at Berlin and Stockholm. And also of the First Prize Medal at the International Exhibition in London, 1862, together with thirty-five first-class Premiums in the United States.

Warerooms, Steinway Hall, Nos. 109 and 111 East 14th Street, New York.

A GENTS WANTED.—AGENTS WANTED,
A 575 to 5700 per month, male and female, to sell the celebrated and original Counce-Sease Paster Size to Manurs, improved and perfected; it will ben, fell, stitch, tack, bind, braid and embedder in a most superior manner. Price only 515. For simplicity and durability, it has no rival. Do not buy from any parties selling machines noder the same name as curties selling machines noder the same name as curties tarring a Certificate of agency signed by us, as they are worthless Cont-from Machines.

For Circulars and Terms, apply to or address,
C. BOWERS & CO., 426 Spince St., Philadelphia, Pa.

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This cue Bell, located in the sleeping-room, rings upon the opening of each window and door of the house. An experience of nice years without a failure proves that it is perfect, reliable, and solidationy. Thousands who are using it testify in its marita, as will be seen by a pamphlet obtainable at the office. The public are entitioned against infringement, either in using or vending. The law will be applied to all such cases. E. BOLMES, 7 Marray St., N. Y.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING,

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Bend for Price List.) Baltimore, Md.

£ 28,000,000. England. According to the optu-lon of the best lawyer, I am the helr to this Estate. I will sell a few shares at a sacrifice to obtain money to prosecute my claim in England. For particulars, address. JASSEL LAWRENCE, New York.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Plance is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and dnish.

Every article used in the construction of the Halnes Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being resecuable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS.

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Smith & Nikon, Chicago, His.; H. N. Hemistran, Milwinkee, Wil.; Louis Thing, Louisville, Ry.; J. A. McClubs, Nashville, Tenn.; Kencket Bace., St. Louis, Mo.; C. M. McRon, Cincinnati, Obio; J. R. Jackson, Sandusky, Obio; Brainard & Sons, Cleveland, Obio; H. D. McRon, Zanesville, Obio; J. E. Obern, Philadelphia, Pa.; C. Berne, Pittsburgh, Pa.; L. B. Powerl, Scientia, Fr.; Carry & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hansson, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; H. S. Marken, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Utier, Buffalo, N. Y.; Reinistrov & Hows, Syncose, N. Y.; Warre, Smith, & Frank, Boston, Mass.; Court Bace., Providence, R. I.; C. M. Looms, New Haven, Cone.; Matters Galv, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordherman, Toconto, C. W.; E. Prinke, & Bac., St. John, N. B.

UNION ADAMS & CO.

For Ladies.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Merino Hosiery, Kid and Castor Gloves.

For Misses.

Patcht Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Patent Union Dresses, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Cashmere Hosiery, Roman and Fancy Sashes.

No. 637 Broadway.

A BALSAMIC HAIR RENEWER.

Mr. Ws. Marsons, of Bergen Chy, Hudson County, New Jersey, says: "For a number of years, my halr has been falling out, but since using BARRY'S TRI-COPHEROUS the falling has ceased, and the hair has become vigorous and strong."

A GENTS. OROIDE GOLD. AGENTS. A SEC ALS. OBLIGATION OF THE PART FORWARD PART Is indestructible. Writer 4 pages with one dip.
Soils at soith-looks like 16-carat Goil. Sample box, 12 pages, for 15 cents, postpoid: also other novelties.
Cyry Novelty Co., 404 Library St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CUFFROYS LIVER DRAGEES

SENT POSTPAID ON RECEIPT OF PRICE. SUGAR-COATED PILLS OF COD-LIVER EXTRACT.

CERES COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, &c. NOT OBJECTIONABLE to the MOST DELICATE STOMACH.

PRICES.—Box of 60 Dragées, equal to one and a half pints of oil, 75 cents; box of 200 Dragées, $1.55: box of 200 Bragess, $2.00.

Physicians having cases where cod-liver oil is indicated, will obtain better results by the use of the Bragées than with cod-liver oil.

For full particulars, containing medical societies' reports, physicians' certificates, &. &c., send for pamphlet to WARD, SOUTHERLAND, & CO., Wholesale Agents, 120 William Street, New York.

WILLIAM KNABE & CO.'S

(ESTABLISHED THIRTY-TWO YEARS)

GRAND, SQUARE, and UPRIGHT PIANOS. BALTIMORE, MD.

These Instruments have been before the public for thirty-two years, and upon their excel-ce alone attained an UNPURCHASED PRE-EMINENCE which pronounces them UNlence alone attained a Tone, Touch, Workmanship, and Durability.

They have been awarded Sixty-five Gold and Silver Medals at different Fairs over other

All of their Square Pianos have their New Improved

Overstrung Scale

Upper Three Octaves Agraffe.

Warcrooms { 650 Broadway, New York; 69 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

J. BAUER & CO., General Agents.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

HAINES BRO'S

C. A. STEVENS & CO., 40 East 14th Street, Union Square, New York,

are offering

A choice selection of Diamonds, Pearls, Sapphirea, and other Genn, mounted in the most artistic manner.
Also, Pine Jewelry of every variety. Watches from the best American and European manufacturers.
Silver and Phase West. Silver and Plated Ware, a choice selection con-tabily on hand.

stantly on hand.

Particular attention given to the Resetting of Diamonds, and the manufacture of Silver Ware for Testimontals and Weddings, from original designs.

AGENTS for the SALE OF WATCHES manufactured by the UNITED STATES WATCH CO. of MARION, New Jersey. Send for Circular.

PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

(Patented June 1, 1869.)

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the ad-vantages of the French patents, with wonderful SIMPLICITY, DURABILITY, Lovers of GOOD COFFEE are manimous in its peaker.

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO.,

SOLE MANUFACTURERS, Wallingford, Conn.

Sample and Sales Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

JANTED—AGENTS—$75 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to introduce the GENCINE IMPROVED COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEVING MACHINE This Machine will stilch, bem, sell, took, quilt, coed, bind, beaid, and embedder in a most superior manner. Price only $13. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1000 for any machine that will sew a strouger, more beautiful, or more clustic seam than ours. It makes the "Health Lock Stitch." Every second stilch can be cut, and still the cloth can bet be pulled spart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $15 to $500 per month and expenses, or a commission from which wice that smount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO., Privacraon, Pa., Boaves, Mass., or Sr. Leuis, Mo. CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthless cast-from matchines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only gennine and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

FOR THE BIOGRAPHY OF

GEORGE PEABODY,

and a representation of the Portrait presented to him by Queen Victoria, see "BOURNE'S LONDON MER-CHANTS," published by Harper & Brothers.

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Bockers. With Portrait of George Peabody and 24 Illustrations. 18mo, Cloth, Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of $1 00.

CATALOGUES, by Mail, 10 cents each. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 111 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 71 pages.
WAGGU LANTERNS and STRUMENTOLARS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 994 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

TO THE LADIES.—One week's time, pleas
I saily employed, will pay for a first-rate flaware
Macsure. Address CORET D. EELEST, 130 Lexington Ava., New York.

E DWARD SEARS.

BEERMAN STREET, Now York.

GOODALL'S PLAYING CARDS New patterns. Victor E. Mangar, Sole Ag'1,110 Roads St.

Send for terms of 'Linden Hall.' Little Lancaster Co., Pa.

· Vol. XIII.—No. 675.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1939, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York,

SEÑOR MIGUEL ALDAMA, PRESIDENT OF THE CUBAN JUNTA

THE character and standing of the members of the Cuben Junta, in this city, are a guarantee to the friends of the Cuban cause that its interests will not be allowed to suffer. The Junta con-sists of six members besides the President. These are, Hilanion Cisneros, Carlos del Castel-lo, Francisco Fesser, José M. Mora, Manu-

LO, FRANCISCO FERSER, JOSÉ M. MORA, MANU-EL MARQUEZ STERLERO, and J. M. MESTUE. Three of these have been distinguished members of the Havana bar. The others have gained equal distinction in eminent business positions. The newly-chosen President of the Cuban Junta, Schor Miocki. Aldama, is a gentleman of about fifty years, of very dark complexion, sharp black eyes, active, bold, and full of the American spirit. He owns five of the largest and most valuable estates in Cuba, which estates lately employed 2000 or 4000 negroes and Chinaand most valuable estates in Cuba, which estates lately employed 3000 or 4000 negroes and Chinamen. Besides these, he owns the grandest private residence in Havana, and a large share of the Havana Railroad, most of which property, to the amount of several millions, has recently been confiscated by the Spanish Goreument. Serior Aldama has always been prominent among the revolutionary spirits of Cuba. A few years ago General Saznano offered him, by order of Queen Indexella, the title of Marquis of Santa Rosa, which honor he declined. He was, until exiled, President of the Havana Insurance Company, and a member of the Council of Administration of the Island of Cuba. In January his splendid mansion in Havana was sacked by the Volunteers of the Spanish army; and his other property, mansion in Havana was sacked by the Volunteers of the Spanish army; and his other property, before the Spanish Government seized it, was pillaged by the troops without let or hindrance. Sefor Aldana enters upon his duties at a time when the cause of Cuban independence in this country is sadly in need of an efficient leader. His friends predict for him signal success.

Besides the portrait of President Aldana, we also give on this page a representation of the barning of a plantation by the Cuban insurgents. This work of devastation is now being carried out on the largest possible scale, and is one of the marked features of the war as at present carried on by the Cubans, who find that their only chance of success depends upon the destruction of the enemy's supplies. They are doing what Surriban did in the Valley of the Shenandosh, and what Surriban did in his march through Georgia and the Carolinas.

SESOR MIGUEL ALDAMA, PRESIDENT OF THE CUBAN JUNTA, NEW YORK CITY.

SLEEP AND DEATH.

"To love life without fearing death," said Hufeboul, is the only means of living happy and dying at a good old age. People who dead death seldom oftain longerity. If death presents itself to us under a repolisive and terrifying aspect, it is solely owing to our habits and prejudices having perverted our feelings. Montaigne justly said that it is the darkening the room, the faces full of grief and desolution, the monning and crying, that make denth terrifie. Civilization, by investing death with the most lugularious associations that it can conjure up, has also contributed to rendering it a hideous spectre. It is the reverse with the potient. In nine cases out of ten death is not only a relief, but almost a sense of voluptuousness. Sleep daily teaches us the reality of death, "Sleep and death are twins," and the poets of antiquity. Why, then, should we fear death, when we daily invoke is brother as a friend and a consolution? "Life, said Buffon, "begins to fail long before it is unterly gone." Why, then, should we dread the last moment, when we are prepared for its advent by so many other moments of a similar character? Death is as natural as life. Both come to us in the same way, without our consciousness, without our being able to determine the advent of either. No one knows the exact moment when he goes to sleep, none will know the exact moment of his death. It is certain that death is generally a pleasurable feeling. Lucan used to say that life would be unsupportable to man if the gods had not hidden from him the happiness he would experience in dying. Tullius Marcellinus, Francis Suares, and the philosopher La Mettrie, all spoke of the voluptuousness of their last moments. Such are the constitution which whilesenthy reconstitute to the death. losopher La Mettrie, all spoke of the voluptuous-ness of their last moments. Such are the con-solutions which philosophy presents to timid minds that dread death. We need not say what much higher and loftier consolations await the Christian who is firm and steadfast in his faith, and has before him the prospect of eternal life.

THE CUBAN INSURGENTS BURNING PLANTATIONS.

RECEPTION.

O MEADOW that lies right under the skies,
Open all night and day!
I wish I were listening half so well
To hear what the heavens say;
So quick to welcome what they let fall,
So ready with thanks as true,
I never should lack any good at all
If my heart were like you!

Blossoming sweet and full to meet Every smile of the sun,
Growing glad with a brighter green
Wherever the waters run;
Garnering up into golden grain
All the light and the dew,
I never should have any day in vain
If my heart were like you!

Carl Sprices.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1869.

JOURNALISM.

THE Morals and Manners of Journalism is the subject of an article, by Mr. RECHARD GRANT WHITE, in the December Galery, which presents very forcibly some of the chief difficulties of journalism. The theory of true journalism be thinks plain. It is candor, good faith, and decency. But he also thinks that the consideration accorded to a journalist of acknowledged ability is not one of unmingled respect. This arises from the fact that an editor is believed to grind his own axes, shielding his friends and smitting his enemies. The pressure upon him to do this, Mr. White's own experience probably teaches him. Here, for instance, is editor Smith's bosom friend, the poet Brown, who has just published a little volume of fugitive verses. A review of it appeared in Smith's paper which was very severe, which even denied that Brown was a poet. Mr. Brown instantly quarreled with editor Smith, and really felt personally aggrieved. "If your friend," he said, bitterly, "won't praise your book, who will?"

It is unquestionably true that a great deal of current newspaper criticism upon every subject is regarded with great suspicion by the public. The critica, despite Jenkins, are generous and friendly men; and it is very hard for them to blight young hopes, even by a truth-telling that seems unkind. Mr. Warra says truly that the ideal editor must know neither personal friend nor enemy in his paper. But the career of a journalist upon such a condition is one of the most difficult conceivable. The root of the difficulty is in human nature. If editor Smith sincerely likes the poet Brown, and enjoys his companionship, it is plainly one of the severest acts of discipline to which he can subject himself to announce publicly that in his opinion Brown is not a poet. What man likes to tell in private his honest opinion of the performances of his friends? But to step to the front-door with a speaking-trumpet, and halloo them to the street, seems to be a very superfinity of frankness.

But, as Mr. WEITE truly says, the editor has made a contract of honor with the public. He has asked its support upon the condition that be shall tell the truth. He has invited confidence. It is dishonorable in him, therefore, to yield to personal partiality or persuasion. He must do what Washinsoron did as Presidentexpress his private regard as a man, if he has it, but add that as President he can have no private regards. There is a duty of the public, also, in this matter, which we hope Mr. WHITE will enforce in one of the articles of his series. If it is dishonorable in the editor to be influenced in his statements by personal preference, It is disreputable in individuals to appeal to him upon personal grounds. If editor Smith is dishonest when he says that Brown's poems are delightful, what is Brown, who does not ask that the truth shall be told about his book but that it shall have "a kind notice?" And

The editor, indeed, should say to his advertisers what the Philadelphia anti-davery merchant said to his Southern customers, in the good old days of darkness and shame, who told him that they would buy enormously of him if he would only hold his condemned abelition tongue—"Gentlemen, I sell my goods, not my principles." The editor sells space in his paper for an advertisement and its presentation to his thousands of readers; he doesn't sell his opinion that Tom's bitters are better than Jack's; and if Tom and Jack will not advertise in the paper unless the editor will say that he likes each better than the other, which is the substance of such praise, it is because they do not really think the paper a good medium for advertisement. The request is, therefore, an instinuation against the paper; and the editor may very truly say that, as each advertiser has an equal claim to demand a puff, to yield to any one would be to concede a principle that, in making the paper a mere advertisement-sheet which nobody would care to see, would ruin its value as an advertiser.

Mr. Whire will continue his treatment of the subject; and his views both of the duty of an editor and the necessity of a stricter general regard to it, in order to deepen and purify the influence of journalism, will certainly have the support and sympathy of every journalist who respects and comprehends his profession.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

Tun great work which has just been finished in Egypt probably takes most of the world by surprise. The long talk about the Suez Canal had become so vague that there was something almost startling in the announcement that the work was done, and that the Emperor of Austrie, the Empress of France, the Prince of Prussia, a Prince of Italy, and a multitude of smaller potentates and representatives, would take part in the ceremony of opening the canal. The real hero of the work, however, is not an emperor or king, but a French gentleman, M. Fau-DINAND DE LESSERS, who was formerly Consul of France at Alexandria, and who then became intimate with the subsequent Viceroy, MOSIAMMED SAID. M. DE LESSEPS SAW, what had been always evident, that a canal from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea was a short cut around the world. It would abolish the long voyage around the Cape of Good Hope, and bring India thousands of miles nearer to Europe. Naroleon, whose imagination was always excited by the East, and who dreamed of a vast Oriental empire, hoped that the old canal between the Red Sea and the Nile could be opened, but the report of his engineers asserted that the level of the Red Sea was thirty feet above that of the Mediterranean.

This statement remained unchallenged until the year 1840, when some English engineers working upon the isthmus discovered the mistake. Instantly measures were taken for a survey, which political events interrupted. But at last M. Dn Lassurs received authority to undertake the work, and he invited the great powers to form an International Commission to prosecute it. England, by the mouth of Lord Palmenston, resisted. That minister, Lord PALMERSTON, resisted. who was much more British than wise, sneered at the enterprise as a bubble. But a Company was organized upon a capital of $40,000,000, of which France took $10,000,000, and in April, 1859, the work began. In May, 1861, the expenses had reached $22,567,256, and there were 20,000 laborers employed. The there were 20,000 laborers employed. difficulties seemed insuperable, and the Porte offered to finish it and reimburse the previous outlay to the Company. There was a long legal discussion, which ended in the decision of Louis Napoleon to support M. De Lessers The Emperor made a grant to the Company of $16,800,000, and from that moment the work went steadily on. As fast as the canal was finished it was opened to traffic, and was used by the British Government to forward supplies during the Abyasinian war.

Through what disheartening difficulties M. DE LESSERS has pushed his way, only those who reflect upon the circumstances can imagine. But his long night of doubt ends in a splendid morning. The consequences of his success are evident, and if any event should be celebrated with pomp, it is one that tends to break down so rapidly the barriers of distance which separate nations and retard civilization. The canal is a hundred miles long, three hundred and twenty-eight feet wide, and twenty-six fact deep; and its entire cost is $55,000,000. ready Europe is preparing to pass through it. Russia, England, France, Austria, Italy, and Spain are adapting their steamers to the canal traffic, and a commercial company is organ-ised in the United States to trade with the East through the canal. The victory is great, and not its least part is that it undoubtedly abolishes Cape Horn, by securing a similar passage through the Isthmus of Panama,

ST. DOMINGO.

Mas. Toops as thought that brass knockers were handy to have in the house, and that a door-plate marked Thompson with a p would be inexpressibly convenient if a daughter should chance to marry a gentleman of that name. St. Domingo is a handy island, but what do we want of it? We are virtually plodged in honor to pay the sum stipulated by treaty for St. Thomas; and the accession to our population of the few Danes there would be inconsiderable. But why add to this the population of St. Domingo, and presently, of course, the rest of the island? The population of the half of the island which is the subject of the supposed negotiations is about 160,000, and its revenue during the last year is said to have been $800,000. The Bay of Samana, which was the object that first attracted the attention of Mr. SEWARD, is upon the Dominican coast—a historic point, for it was from the shores of this bay that Tous-SAINT L'OUVERTURE and DESSALINES SAW the French fleet that Napoleon had sent to reduce the islanders again to slavery—the movement that led to the most sanguinary struggle.

Whenever a political community in our neigherhood voluntarily proposes annexation to the United States the proposition should be most carefully considered, and if it be a truly spontaneous movement, should lead to some kind of alliance. But negotiations of the kind that must be presumed in the case of St. Domingo can not be regarded as spontaneous acts. The people of St. Domingo probably know and care nothing about annexation, and the authority of Banz to treat for any body but himself is very doubtful. There is no reason nor necessity in our own situation for enlarging the present domain of the United States; while to annex part of a foreign island, peopled by those who are aliens in every respect, and whose accession merely increases the ignorance and the incoherence of our own population, certainly can not be considered a stroke of wise statesmanship. Such an act neither enriches nor strength. ens us. And, plainly, if we are anxious for a rapid increase of the utterly foreign element in the population, the swift current of the inev-itable Chinese immigration ought to satisfy us, Whatever treaty is made must, of course, be submitted to the Senate, and will undoubtedly be thoroughly considered by it and the country in every aspect. Meanwhile, the administration of General GRANT is so entirely free from Buncomb and its foreign policy has been so sagacious, that we can very patiently await the lifting of the veil from the St. Domingo mystery. Mr. Fissi is not likely to be seduced by any chimera of manifest destiny, nor do his official fingers burn to pluck the fruit of territorial acquisition before it is fairly ripe. Still less is the Administration capable of preparing a pretext to seize a point in the West Indies to annoy or to threaten Spein. If it means war it will say war. It has no object like the extension and defense of slavery, which was the secret of the continental policy of the Democratic administrations. It s only the enlightened prosperity and peaceful progress of the country; and we await with curiosity an argument to show that those objects will be promoted by the annexation of St. Domingo.

THE GRAIN TRADE.

The vicissitudes which attend this trade are of great interest to this country, seven-tenths of whose population are engaged in agricultural industry. From the various grain outlets of the Atlantic coast, and from San Francisco on the Pacific side of the Union, there has recently been poured into the markets of Great Britain a larger amount of wheat than at any previous time. The cable telegram has been employed in the unusual service of announcing these important receipts.

The total of wheat and flour received there from all countries in September and October was 4,000,000 cwt. in excess of the quantity imported in the same mooths last year. From the United States, for September alone, Great Britain received of wheat 1,423,000 cwt., and of flour 180,843 cwt., against 184,937 of wheat; and 90,674 of flour, for September, 1868.

The British returns of imports for the nine menths ending September 30, 1869, are not less interesting or remarkable. They imported from the United States in that period 7,938,818 ew. of wheat, and 968,505 ewt. of flour, against endy 4,714,203 cwt. of wheat, and 500,182 cwt. of flour, for the equivalent period in 1868. We reversed positions with Russia, hitherto the largest exporters of grain to England. For the first nine months of 1869 Russia furnished 4,763,704 cwt. of wheat, although in 1868, for that period, she had forwarded 7,142,034.

But the unfortunate result to the United States is this, that although her most important competitors were crippled with the same drought which prevailed over England, the value of our shipments of wheat, for the first eight mouths of 1869, is stated in the foreign market at only 43,548,158, while the inferior quantity in 1868 received a valuation of £3,590,570.

Wheat has recently fallen in England, notwithstanding the need of increased imports, to a price lower than the average for several years, which is thus explained: "The flatness which has prevailed in the wheat trade of late, and the check which has recently been given to an upward movement, are due," says the Manchester Gaurdian of November 2, "to our large importations, and in a great measure to the abundance which exists in the United States."

But in the Chamber of Agriculture this reason is given: "The potatoes appear to be every where unsound, and are being forced upon the market in large quantities. This has had its invariable effect upon the grain trade, but the present depression upon the market induced by this cause will undoubtedly be followed by a reaction."

The fall in price was unquestionably due in part to the several causes mentioned; but it was also owing to the fall in gold at New York, which affected the currency price of wheat in the proportion in which gold fell. This point is beginning to be understood by those who produced their wheat at high currency prices, although they can command for the gold received from the foreigner who buys wheat only a low currency price. The principal agency for putting down the price of gold is the Treasury Department; and yet the quantity of paper currency is not diminished in the same proportion, or indeed at all. The fall in gold can not be permanent unless the paper currency is reduced to an equivalent extent—a been scarcely to be expected from Congress at the coming assession.

The circumstances were all favorable for rewarding our farming interest with remanerating prices. The Mesers Scrace of Birmingham, England, a highly respectable authority, in their grain circular of the 4th of November, say: "The accounts as to the yield of the wheat crop have become worse as threshing has progressed, and millers complain that the new wheat works weak, and that even the white sorts do not grind a good color."

The defect in potatoes and wheat is one of the effects of the drought of last year, which, although it gave to wheat some qualities which in the moist climate of England are not ordinarily imparted, yet prevented the full maturity of most vegetable products. New seed potatoes and wheat should have been used in the place of such as were immature. This caution will be more necessary next year, and particolarily as to potatoes, which probably owe their tendency to disease in part to the general use of small, and consequently defective, tubers for

But there are other difficulties which need to be taken into view. At a meeting of the Central Chamber of Agriculture, held on the 2d of November in Loudon, Mr. Garninge, of East Kent, moved "that, in the opinion of the Council, the corn averages, as at present taken, are fallacious, and that the buyers' returns should be limited to purchases from growers only." Mr. Clar, of Yorkshire, seconded the motion, and in doing so thought it right and proper for the purchasers to make the returns, "If the growers were obliged to make the returns, be was afraid that they would be more unsatisfactorily made than they were at present." The Chairman, Clark S. Ried, M.P., said that "the present averages were made up from the best samples, which frequently were published two or three times over." It may be feared if the Garetic averages are erroteous, that the estimates as to the quantity of grain produced, which are voluntarily made, have like defects.

It will thus be seen that in England the accuracy of important returns is impeached by the Central Chamber of Agriculture, composed of picked men; that this crop and that of the potato are defective as to quality—it has heretefore been shown to be so as to quantity; and that the price of wheat at Mark Lane is lower than the average, although a larger importation than usual for the grain year will be required. Before the condition of their present crop of wheat was known, it was supposed that over seventy millions of bushels of wheat would need to be imported between the late and succeeding harvests.

On looking at the situation in this country it will appear to be equally anomalous. The drought along the Atlantic coast, which commenced in June, continued until about the cocurrence of the autumnal equinox. The rains then experienced were severe in some of the Eastern States, but light over the residue of the coast, and stock had to be fed from winter stores six or seven weeks earlier than usual. This drought affected the corn crop and the pasturage in a most serious manner; and it appears also that the corn crop in the Northwest was very light, and that, by reason of severe storms occurring in harvest-time, the wheat then being gathered was severely damaged. California, instead of having the full crop at first reported, will not have, as later and reliable estimates show, more than two-thirds.

The breaks in the canal which occurred this fall checked the transfer of wheat to the seaboard, and caused it to heat during the detention of cargoes; but yet, with the certainty of an unusual foreign demand from the United States, and of a probable inability on the part of Russia and some other grain-growing States to offer their usual competition, wheat has steadily fallen in this market. On the closing of the canals for the winter—when the stock in market and its condition may be known—the price of our exportable produce will be firmer.

The demand for currency to go to the South and West, to be used in the presecution of their growing industries—which is still in progress—adds to the difficulty which speculators experience in carrying gold. And as no foreign country requires it from ns, but, on the contrary, our bonds are taken abroad for balances, it has not been difficult to lower the price of gold, especially on the eve of shipments of cotton and grain, which must go forward in large quantities.

But it is competent for our foreign creditors to change the state of things at their pleasure, and although no immediate motive for doing so is at present apparent, we are satisfied that if that portion of the farming interest which is able to do so shall cultivate what the "Country Gentleman" calls the beneficent disposition to hold on to part of their produce, they will benefit themselves and the country.

THE CLEVELAND CONVENTION.

THE Convention at Cleveland to form an American Woman's Suffrage Association is but another sign of the depth and extent of the feeling upon the subject. There has been a very general impression among the friends of the cause that it has been unnecessarily projudiced in the public mind by a thousand follier that have been associated with it, but which have no connection with it. The foolish practice of calling a convention to discuss a grave political question, and then permitting every body to discuss every thing, has retarded and turned to ridicule the most serious efforts of the most earnest persons. Undoubtedly the action of the Cleveland Convention will tend to hold the movement strictly to its purpose. That purpose is not repuliation of the national debt, nor defeat of the Fifteenth Amendment, nor an eight-hour law, nor any thing but a removal of the political disability of women.

These subjects may all be worthy of the most careful consideration, and it may be desirable to form societies and hold meetings to agitate them and to affect public opinion; but if a freetrade convention should allow the apostles of Shakerism to occupy their time, or if the meet-ings to secure an eight-hours law should surrender their platform to discussions upon temperance, nothing but confusoin would ensue. Even the old Abolitionists, who seemed to think that the right of free speech meant the right of any body to say any thing at any time and any where, could not quite hold to their own rule, and finally removed by force from their meetings Father Lamson and Anny Forsox, whose freedom of speech enslaved the speech of every body else. A movement like that for the admission of women to political equality requires the most thoughtful consideration, which it certainly will not receive so long as it is incessantly associated in the public mind with the most Indicrous vagaries of folly or insanity.

The advantage of a reasonable method in presenting the subject was seen at the late meeting in Hartford. The speakers were previously invited, and they came prepared. The intention of the meeting was not general discussion, but specific presentation; and when the work was done in the manner proposed, the meeting adjourned. Any thoughtful person who read the Hartford speeches would not deny that there was more weight and reason in them than in those of any of our ordinary political conventions. Indeed, one such meeting in which intelligent women take part is in itself a powerful argument for the cause. Already the most intelligent opponents of the movement, represented in New York by the Tribuse and the Evening Post, declare that women will have political equality whenever they wish for it, or whenever a majority of women ask for it. This shows, at least, an abandonment of any serious hostility, although it is not easy to say precisely what it means, unless it is a mere begging of the question by assuming that a majority of women never will ask.

What number of women, and where, are to be polled upon the subject, or what is to be considered an authentic expression of their wish, is nowhere stated. Meanwhile there is an equal reluctance or inability to mention why the political disability of one intelligent and competent citizen should depend upon the whim of another who may be both ignorant and incapable. We shall be disappointed it the corre-land Convention does not place the question of the political equality of women distinctly and impressively before the American people.

TWO GLIMPSES OF THE SOUTH-ERN STATES.

Tue darkest picture of the condition of the Southern States since the war is that drawn by Mr. PARKER PHASEURY, one of the original uncompromising abolitionists, who has lately made a journey in the South, and has written an account of his impressions for the Independent. Some of the Democratic papers immediately seized upon Mr. Pillsburn's testimony, as if it implied repentance of his course, and condemnation of the anti-slavery movement for disturbing the situation in the palmy days of peace and the old regime, when a seventh of the population of the country were denied every right, and reduced to brutishness, and the fundamental principles and constitutional guarantees of the government were utterly despised and outraged in half the country. But Mr. PILLABURY takes care to explain that the sad condition of the colored population at the South is directly due to slavery, and that in his opinion the Democratic party and the Church were the great bulwarks of slavery. He finds the gloomy sitnation, therefore-the present ruin, as he considers it, of the region he has seen-the most conclusive justification of all that he and his friends formerly said about slavery; and were the work of agitation to be done over again, he would speak still more strongly-and Mr. Pinnsvoice was never weak-of the accurred system that disbonored the nation, caused the war, and almost hopelessly degraded its victims. The Democratic supporters of the good old sys- | York.

tem of slavery will not be much comforted by Mr. PARKER PILLSBURY, and the same of the first of th

Bad as the situation is, and ignorant and squalid as the Southern colored people are, yet, considering the terrible tragedy of their late condition, Mr. Pillesway considers it highly complimentary to human nature that they are not worse than they are. In a word, Mr. Pillanury thinks that the old relation of the races substantially continues at the South. The Northern settlers, he says, are generally of a poor kind. They despise the colored popula-tion as much as the old slave-masters. Labor is as disreputable as ever, and the colored peo-ple are forced to work for wages that forbid the least improvement of their condition, or to starve. Drunkenness is apparently universal; and Mr. Prizanum remarks that "private vir-tue among public men is not looked for not expected, not even desired." But he adds:
"And this is as true here in Washington as farther south or farther north." Of course, all this must be taken as a very rapid and a very rough generalization. But it is useful as showing how much is to be done in the Southern States before they will be in any degree upon the general level of civilization with the rest of the country. Mr. PILLSBURY finds the one ground of hope, as every reflecting person finds it, in the schools. And it is interesting to consider, with his dismal description of the general condition, the facts just presented in the report of Mr. J. W. ALVORD, the General Superintendent of Schools among the Freedmen.

The whole number of day and night an Sabbath schools among the freedmen, either regularly reported to the Superintendent or known by him, is 4424; the total number of teachers is 9503; and of pupils of all kinds, 256,853. This is the largest result yet reached, and is a decided increase upon the corresponding six months of the last year. In the schools regularly reported the whole number of pupils is 204,253, of which 192,227 were slaves before the war. The whole number of schools regularly reported is 3314, and of these the freedmen sustained wholly or in part 1581, and are the owners of 759 of the buildings in which the schools are held; while the Bureau furnishes but 773. Most of the schools are conducted upon the most approved system, and of the advanced schools 312 are reported as graded. In Virginis, money from the PRABODY fund has assisted the colored schools; and Virginia has in the new Constitution provision for free public schools, which, in the judgment of the Commissioner, should be her safety and her peble. Within the year there has been in Virginia a gain of 50 schools, owned by the freedmen alone. In North Carolina there has been a gain of 58 schools and 25 Sabbath-schools, with 3200 pupils. In Georgia there is a gain of 105 schools and 4527 pupils. In Mississippi there is a gain of 67 schools and 2973 pupils. In Tennessee there is a gain of 65 schools and 4343 pupils. South Carolina, Florida, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas all show improvement; but Alabama lags. Kentucky has been thoroughly canvassed, and the prospects of the schools are most encournging.

This picture, if not too rosy-and there is no eason to suppose that it is so-is a very agreeble companion to that of Mr. Pillsbury. The teachers in these schools, modest, diligent, unknown, are doing more to secure the results won in the field, and to renew the Union upon eternal foundations, than any other class of persons in the country. Indeed, the free schools are the great bulwark of a popular gorerument. There is no interest so vital to the general welfare; and it is of the last importance that they be multiplied and extended every where, and diligently guarded from the fatal touch of sectarian ecclestiastical influence.

METROPOLITAN ART MUSEUM.

Twe Art Committee of the Union League Club recently invited Professor Compour, of Princeton, to deliver an address upon the general subject of Museums of Art, in the hope of so interesting the public in the subject that a metropolitan museum may be established in New York. Mr. BRYANT, always associated with humane and sesthetic movements, consented to preside at the meeting, and the selection of the orator ... especially fortunate, as Professor Compon. h .: carefully studied in Europe the subject which he was asked to discuss.

It is a little remarkable that, with the inclination of rich men among us to devote their wealth to public advantage, and to buy pictures, there has as yet been no great public gallery founded that should rank with the Astor Libra ry. It is not indeed easy to buy the pictures of the famous old masters; but a great museum contemplates not only pictures, but every form of the fine arts-sculpture, mosales, bronzes, Indeed, there is one kind of collection which is peculiarly practicable for an American gallery. If the best pictures can be but slowly procured, the finest statues in the world are accessible to us in casts, and casts are copies so perfect that they reproduce the originals. Whoever remembers the Dresden collection of casts will perceive what is possible in New

But there is another class of objects in such a museum which would be of the highest im-mediate practical value. A complete collection of the smaller remains of art, as they are called, would show us the important truth which is wholly forgotten in this country, but toward the perception of which criticism indicates a reaction, ta. 't the highest art is not truly for ornament, but 'or use. A masterly and delightful exposition . ' this fact was made by the late Cardinal WISSMAN, in England, in a lecture delivered some years ago, which has been re-cently republished here by the friendly care and interest of Miss E. P. PEABODY. The Cardinal called his discourse the Identity of the Artist and the Artisan; and in a series of historical illustrations, most folicitously drawn, he showed that the really great artists not only designed, but personally wrought their finest works, and that many of the most celebrated objects of art were strictly objects of common use. The Cardinal imagines a museum of art amply stored with the most precious remainsstatues, mosaics, urus, utensils of every kind, which we rail off and protect under glass. Let us suppose these all to have been owned by one rich man two thousand years ago in Italy, and now to be restored to him. He would scatter them all to their proper places: this to the gar-den, that to the kitchen, the other to the chamber and the dressing-room, the mosaic to the vestibule, and the whole moseum of what is to us a multitude of things to be admired would disappear into a variety of conveniences to be used.

Or again, here are exquisite objects from Herculaneum and Pompeli. They were, of course, the most common, the most familiar ar-ticles in the houses; which we infer from the fact that none others are found, and that, if there were time to escape with any treasures, the most valuable would have been taken and the most common left. They seem to us, as we look at them, so graceful, so beautiful, that we preserve them for admiration in galleries, or place them for the ornament of our noblest rooms. Suppose now that New York should be suddenly buried in the mud of the streets, as will very probably happen, and as Pompeil was lost in the ashes and lava of Vesuvins. Then suppose that, after two thousand years, curious antiquarians from the most colightened of nations then existing dig out our kitchens and closets, and are so captivated with the grace and charm of our pots and pans, and cops and glasses, that they bear them away delightednot morely as curious relics of an extinct peo-ple, but as objects of imperishable beauty. Should we not, if we were there to reflect, wonder what must be the aesthetic condition of a people who thought our kettles and tureens so beautiful that they must be preserved for ad-miration? And if so, what must the Pompeilan think of the New Yorker of to-day?

The young man who is longing to become an artist, but who does not dream that the house painter and the wall decorator are entitled to that name, should not only recall BENYENUTO CELLISI And LUCA DELLA BOSSIA, but should piously remember that the most fa-mous works of RAPHARL were painting and decoration of ceilings and wall hangings. Some of his most exquisite labor was imitation of the older and forgotten art of decoration in the Golden House of Nero. Go, young seeker, study the Stones of RAPHARL in the Vatienn, and the freecess of MICHAEL ANGELO in the Sistine Chapel, the Etruscan vases and the Pompelian lamps, and remember that art is not only a pretty patch upon daily life, but an integral part of it. If the admirable efforts of Professor Compost and the gentlemen of the Art Committee shall result in founding an ample museum which shall serve to remind us that the high office of art is to make use beautiful, they will deserve more gratitude than if they had found a new gold mine, or had annexed a foreign island to their country.

NOTES.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL HOAR has written a plain and sensible letter to Hon. E. G. SPAULDERO, whose "Financial History of the War" we recently commended; in which he says, that "we should have treated the currency as we did our armies, regarding the volunteers and the green-backs alike as necessities of war, to be dispensed ith as fast as possible on the return of p The only way to treat the subject, in his view, is a steady and persistent contraction—a painful process, but one which delay does not make less painful. In the clouds and whirlwinds of specupainful. In the clouds and whirlwinds of specu-lation upon the subject of a return to specie pay-ments one thing only is clear, that no plan will ever be generally approved in advance. The Secretary of the Treasury must proceed upon his own responsibility, and trust to the ultimate suc-cess of his policy, whatever it may be, to compel the approval of the country.

Mr. Expa Connect has given the use of some land at Ithaca for a horticultural school for girls, to be directed by Miss Manwanest, formerly Principal of the School of Industry for girls at Hamburg. Mr. Andrew S. Fullen, of New York, has also promised to give seeds and plants. The school is to be co-operative, with a capital of fifteen thousand dollars in shares of five dollars each, upon which no more than five per cent-dividend will ever be declared; all other profits dividend will ever be declared; all other profits being devoted to the school or to pay back the capital. The purpose of the school is the instruc-tion of girls in the culture of fruits, flowers, and vegetables, and perhaps the care of bees. The course of study will include botany, the propaga-tion and culture of plants, agricultural chemistry and economy, hygiene, practical drawing, one or more foreign languages, housekeeping, and nee-dle-work. In fact, it is to be a school in which the intention will be to accomplish sirks to help die-work. In fact, it is to be a school in which the intention will be to accomplish girls to help themselves. A course of two or three years will be necessary to secure a diplema. The admission-fee will be ten dollars; the instruction will be free; board to be paid by work. The work must depend, of course, upon the subscription to the moderate capital, which will be received by Mrs. Horace Mass, Cambridge; Mr. Corsell, Ithica; the Rev. James Persen, w Clarke, Boston; A. S. Fuller of A. M. Powell, New York.

Tun Duke of Gence, who is in danger of be-coming King of Spain, is a boy of fifteen, the son of the late Duke, who died in 1835, and the nephew of Victor Emanuel. He is now a pu-pil of Matthew Amoun in England, and, it is understood, has replied to the offer of the Span-ish crown that he will accept it only if the Cortes understood, has replied to the offer of the Span-ish crown that he will accept it only if the Cortes elect him by a majority of two-thirds. There is evidently some serious opposition to his election, although he has a very numerous support. If Spain must have a king, however, it is certainly foelish to choose a minor. It is a great pity that a nation which in this age wants a king should not select a mature and real one.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

The official returns from New York State show Nelson's majority to be $0,566. The total vice is only $61,194, showing a falling off of $00,194 compared with that of last year. The Hepublican decrease is 100,058; Democratic decrease, 96,476.

The Jadiclary sattle of the new Constitution of New York State was adopted by over 5000 majority in the recent election.

The Alabama Legislature has ratified the Fifteenth Amendment to the National Constitution. The vote in the Senate was—peas 24, mays none; in the Houses—peas 20, mays 18.

Both Houses of the Tennessee Legislature have rejected the Fifteenth Amendment.

The expenditures of the Freedmen's Bursen from January 1, 1860, to August 31, 1862, were $11,542,923.

The rapid increase of the army pension list is forcibly shown in the report of Treasurer Spinner just completed. The following are the actual payments for the past seven fixed years: 1862, $202, 1865 29; 1864, $450,001 of; 1862, $1,184,000 for; 1865, $23,007,469 14; 1866, $25,-633,806 4.

The gale of November 16.11 was very destructive in the November 16.

1987, $19,443,000 69; 1886, $23,067,469 fat; 1868, $28,603,500 42.

The gale of November 16.11 was very destructive in the Northwest. The crew of the schooner Arrew, eight in number, was lost in attempting to reach the shore fifteen miles north of Chicago.

A new building at St. Louis was blown flown on the marning of November 19, and thirteen workmen were buried under the ruins.

A recent fee at Fort Sully, Decotah, destroyed 51,580,000 worth of government property.

During an entertainment in the Gaiety Theatre, Milwanker, Wisconsin, on the night of November 19, the scenery was set on fire by a kerosene lamp, which was chattered by the rapier of one of the attors in a fencing stene. The fames apread so rapidly that before the autilience could escape the whole interior was in fames, and many were compelled to jump from the windows of the second story. The bodies of two persons were discorreced in the rains. Fifteen or twenty persons were hadly injured.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Iv is said that, together with M. Ollivier, two other members of the Third Party are to enter the French Ministry; but the Journal Official denies that any changes are contemplated.

The supplementary elections for the Corps Legis-latif in Paris began on November 21 without disturb-ance.

ance.

The nomination of the Duke of Genoa to the Spanish throne has received the support of 161 Departies to the Cories. It is reported that the Spanish Government is considering a proposition to establish a penal colony on one of the Spanish islands in the Pacific Ocean. The journals advocate the measure on the ground that the completion of the Pacific Stalinosd across the American continent will facilitate commercial celations between Span and her possessions in the Pacific, whose resources may be developed by colonization.

decommittee.

A constitution for Porto Rice, declaring the taland Bysashe province, permitting public meetings in the presence of the authorities, but forbidding the discus-tion of the slavery question, has been submitted to sion of the slavery question, has been submitted to the Cortes.

The international scolling match between Walter Brown, of Fortland, Maine, and J. H. Sadler, of Lon-don, took place on the Tyne, at Newcastle, on Nov-ember 12. Brown won by two lengths.

Telegrams from Ionailis, on the Bases Canal, dated November IT, amounce the arrival at that point of the procession of vessels, headed by the Empress Enginite's yealt. If Asia, after passing through the first part of the canal. At the shallowest part the depth is said to a mineteen feet, and varies generally from twenty-five to thirty feet in other portions. The entire feet salled for Sagar—the Red Sas termines. Newswhert 19 Ive to thirty see in other portions. The entire fact sailed fre Sucar-the Red Set terminis—November 19, the Asjè lending. On the evening of the 18th there were in the Issaellia station firty-even sea-going ships, with an average inomage of one thousand tone each. The largest vessel of the fleet was a Russian friguic, which drow seventeen feet and two inches of water. The buildings in Ismailia were filled with goosts and other visitors, and the currounding plains were covered with the tents of the native tribes, who were assembled in immense numbers. On that evening M. De Lessops gave a hanquet to representatives of the Chambers of Commerce, members of the press, and others. A status of M. De Lessops is to be srecoed at Fort Said.

According to the latest accounts from Paraguay peess, and others. A statue of M. De Lesseps is to be second at Part Said.

According to the latest accounts from Paraguay President Lepes had transferred his head-quarters and seat of government to San Josephin. It was reported that Lepez had killed his mother, one of his brothers, and other persons, in consequence of his suspicion that they were engaged in a conspiracy against his life. The allies had as yet made no movement, and it was supposed that active operations would be still longer deferred.

Dr. David Livingstone's recent African discoveries lead him to believe that the Nile's chief scorrest visa between ten degrees and twelve degrees south lating, or 400 miles southward of the more southern part of the Victoria Nyanas. Els fading of a chain of lakes connected by rivers for to the south of Lake Tanganyika has encouraged him in this view, the further realization of which will, as Dr. Livingstone promises, and as Sir Boderick Murchison believes, settle the question of the final sources of that mysterious river.

THE PRESBYTERIAN UNION AT PITTSBURG.

The grandest and most sublime spectacle ever witnessed in the ecclesiastical history of America transpired in Pitsburg on Friday, the 12th of this month. The disastrous division, which took place in 1837, of the Presbyte-rian Church in this country was brought to a close, and a happy re-union cemented on the day. At the meetings of the two General Assemblies held in New York last May—that of the Old School in the Brick Church on Fifth Avenue, and that of the New School in the Church of the Covenant on Park Avenue—the joint Committee of Con-ference presented simul-taneously to the two bodies a basis of union to be sent down to the various presbyteries of both Assemblies, to be acted upon before the list of November. The Assemblies then adjourned, to meet in Pitaburg November 10, to bear the result of this action; and if two thirds of the presbyteries of each Assembly should have been found to conwas found that more than two-thirds—the con-stitutional number required—had given their consent; and at each of the Assemblies in Pitts-burg the result was announced simultaneously, in the following words, viz.: "This Assembly, having received and examined the statements of the saveral prospective on the basis of the rehaving received and examined the statements of the several presbyteries on the basis of the re-union of the two bodies now claiming the name and rights of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, do hereby find and declare that the said basis of reunion has been approved by more than two-thirds of the presby-teries connected with each branch of the Church. Now, therefore, we do solemnly declare that said basis of union is of binding force."

UNION OF THE OLD AND NEW SCHOOL PRESBYTERIAN ASSEMBLIES AT PITTSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, NOVEMBER 12, 1989.—INTERIOR OF FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, SHOWING THE OLD SCHOOL ASSEMBLY IN SESSION.

Thus was healed a breach that commenced in bitterness thirty-two years ago, and the two

Thus was healed a breach that commenced in bitterness thirty-two years ago, and the two bodies, long separated, were again made one. The significance of this action may be seen by looking at the strength of each Church. The Old School branch embraces 142 presbyteries, 2737 churches, 2330 ministers, and 252,555 communicants. The New School branch, 113 presbyteries, 1500 churches, 1800 ministers, 184,687 communicants. United, as they now are, they present an ecclesiastical body having 49 synods, 255 presbyteries, 4327 churches, 4130 ministers, and 437,242 communisants. During the last year these bodies contributed, for the support of public worship, $5,782,950, and gave to various benevolent operations the amount of nearly $1,000,000, making an aggregate of oversix millions and a half.

The united Church will immediately organize six millions and a half.

The united Church will immediately organize

The united Church will immediately organize its forces anew, and use every effort to extend its work and influence. A resolution passed the united body to proceed at once to the raising of $5,000,000 as a thank-offering, to be employed in a body from the Third Presbyterian Church to the First Presbyterian Church, where the Old School Assembly had held its sessions. There the two Assemblies meand formed a procession, the two Moderators leading arm in arm, and each Old School delegate each Old School delegate walking arm in arm with one of the New School. This procession, numbering about 1000, moved down Wood Street, Fifth Avenue, Smithfield Street, and Eixth Avenue, to the Third Church. The entire city appeared to have poured forth into the streets to witness this musual witness this unusual spectacle.

The church was soon filled to its utmost ca-pacity. The Moderators —Rev. Dr. Jacones, O. S., and Rev. Dr. Fow-LER, N. S.—took their places on the centre of the platform, facing the audience, surrounded by the most eminent men meeting had never been assembled in America. Amidst the abundant pledges of affection and co-operation, old menfell into each other's arms and wept; sobs were audible all over the house; and every senti-sent to it, a union should then be ratified, and the great bodies become one. The feature of this basis of union, to which each preabytery was required prestytery was required to give a categorical re-ply, was in the following words: "Do you ap-prove of the remain of the two bodies now claiming the name and rights of the Presbyte-rian Church in the Unitrian Church in the Unitad States of America, on the following basis, viz. : The reunion shall be effected on the doctrinal and ecclesiastical basis of our common stand-ards. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments shall be ac-knowledged to be the inspired Word of God, and the only infallible rule of faith and practice; the confession of Faith shall continue to be sincerely received and adopted as containing the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures; and the govern-ment and discipline of the Presbyterian Church in the United States shall be approved as contain-ing the principles and ruses of our Polity. To this overture, sent to the presbyteries, it

CONSUMMATION OF THE UNION OF THE TWO ASSEMBLIES IN THE THIRD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

country shall be a grand unit in spirit if not in ec-clesiastical organization.

(Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by HARPEN & BROTHERS, ip the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.]

MAN AND WIFE.

By WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name,"
"The Mountone," etc., etc.

WITH ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

THE DISCOVERIES.

Bur two persons were now left in the sum-mer-bouse-Arnold Brinkworth, and Sir Patrick Landie.

Mr. Brinkworth," said the old gentleman, "I have had no opportunity of speaking to you before this; and (as I hear that you are to leave us to-day) I may find no opportunity at a later time. I want to introduce myself. Your father was one of my dearest friends—let me make a friend of your father's son."

He held out his hard, and mentioned his name.

Arnold recognized it directly. "Oh, Sir Patrick!" he said, warmly, "if my poor father had only taken your advice..."

"He would have thought twice before he gambled away his fortune on the torf; and he might have been alive here among us, instead of dying an exile in a foreign land," said Sir Patrick, finishing the sentence which the other had begun. "No more of that! Let's talk of had begun. "No more of that! Let's talk of something else. Lady Lundie wrote to me about you the other day. She told me your annt was dead, and had left you heir to her property in Scotland. Is that true?—It is ?—I congratulate you with all my heart. Why are you visiting here, instead of looking after your house and lands? Oh! it's only three-and-twenty miles from this; and you're going to look after it to-day, by the next train? Quite right, And— what? what?—coming back again the day after to-morrow? Why should you come back? Some special attraction here, I suppose? I hope it's the right sort of attraction. You're very young-you're exposed to all sorts of temptayoung—you're exposed to all sorts of tempta-tions. Have you got a solid foundation of good sense at the bottom of you? It is not inherited from your poor father, if you have. You must have been a mere boy when he ruined his chil-dren's prosperts. How have you lived from that time to this? What were you doing when your amt's will made an idle mun of you for life?"

The question was a searching one, Arnold answered it, without the elightest hesitation; speaking with an unaffected modesty and eimplicity which at once won Sir Patrick's heart.

"I was a boy at Eton, Sir," he said, "when my father's losses ruined him. I had to leave school, and get my own living—and I have got is, in a roughish way, from that time to this.
In plain English, I have followed the sex—in the merchant artice."

a merchant-service."

In plainer English still, you met adversity like a brave lad, and you have fairly earned the good lack that has fallen to you," rejoined Sir Patrick. "Give me your hand—I have taken a liking to you. You're not like the other young fellows of the present time. I shall call you 'Arnold.' You musn't return the compliment, and call me 'Patrick,' mind—I'm too old to be treated in that way. Well, and how do you get on here? What sort of a woman is my sister-in-law? and what sort of a house is this?"

Arnold house out laughing.

Arnold bars out laughing.
"Those are extraordinary questions for you to put to me," he said. "You talk, Sir, as if you were a stranger here!"

Sir Patrick touched a spring in the knob of his ivory cane. A little gold lid flew up, and disclosed the snuff-box hidden inside. He took a pinch, and chuckled satirically over some pass-ing thought, which he did not think it necessary ing thought, which he did not think it necessary to communicate to his young friend.

"I talk as if I was a stranger here, do I?" he resumed. "That's exactly what I am. Lady Lundie and I correspond on excellent terms; but we run in different grooves, and we see each other as seldom as possible. My story," continued the pleasant old man, with a charming frankness which leveled all differences of age and rank between Arnold and himself, "is not entirely unlike yours; though I as old enough entirely unlike yours; though I as old enough to be your grandfather. I was getting my living, in my way (as a crusty old Scotch lawyer), when my boother married again. His death, without leaving a son by either of his wives, gave me a lift in the world, like you. Here I am (so my own sincere regret) the present baronet. my sincere regret! All sorts of responsibilities which I never bargained for are thrust on I am the head of the family; I my shoulders. am my niece's guardian; I am compelled to appear at this lawn-party—and (between ourselves)
I am as completely out of my element as a man can be. Not a single familiar face meets we among all these fine people. Do you know any body here?"

I have one friend at Windygates," said Arnold. "He came here this morning, like you. Geoffrey Delamayn."

As he made the reply, Miss Silvester appeared at the entrance to the summer-house. A shadow of annoyance passed over her face when she saw that the place was occupied. She vanished, unsticed, and glided back to the game. Sir Patrick looked at the son of his old friend, with every appearance of being disappointed in the young man for the first time.

Your choice of a friend rather surprises me," he said.

Arnold artiestly accepted the words as an ap-peal to him for information. "I beg your pardon, Sir-there's nothing surprising in it," he returned. "We were school-fellows at Eton, in the old times. And I have fellows at Etca, in the old times. And I have met Geoffrey since, when he was yachting, and when I was with my ship. Geoffrey saved my life, Sir Patrick," he added, his voice rising and his eyes brightening with honest admiration of his friend. "But for him, I should have been drowned in a boat-accident. Isn't that a good reason for his being a friend of mise?" "It depends entirely on the value you set on your life," asid Sir Patrick. "The value I set on my life?" repeated Ar-nold. "I set a high value on it, of course!"

ld. "I set a high value on it, of course!"
"In that case, Mr. Delamayn has laid you under an obligation."

"Which I can never repay:"

"Which you will repay one of these days, with interest-if I know any thing of human nature," answered Sir Patrick.

He said the words with the emphasis of strong conviction. They were barely spoken when Mr. Delamayn appeared (exactly as Miss Silvester had appeared) at the entrance to the summer-house. He, too, vanished, unnoticed—like Miss Silvester again. But there the parallel stopped, The Honorable Geoffrey's expression, on discovering the place to be covered as a way to be the control of t covering the place to be occupied, was, unmis-takably, an expression of relief.

Arnold drew the right inference, this time, from Sir Patrick's language and Sir Patrick's unprovided with an issue for some time past.

"How hot you are over it, Sir!" he exclaimed, in irrepressible astonishment.
Sir Patrick instantly recovered himself. The genuine wonder expressed in the young man's face was irresistible. "Almost as bot," he said, "as if I was cheering at a boat-mee, or wrangling over a bettingbook-eh? Ah, we were so easily beated when I was a young man! Let's change the subject. I know nothing to the prejudice of your friend, Mr. Delamayn. It's the cant of the day," cried Sir Patrick, relapsing again, "to take these physically-wholesome men for granted as being morally wholesome men into the bargain. Time will show whether the cant of the day is right. -So you are actually coming back to Lady Lun-die's after a mere flying visit to your own property? I repeat that is a most extraordinary proceeding on the part of a landed gentleman like you. What's the attraction here—sh?" Before Arnold could reply Blanche called to him from the lawn. His color rose, and he turned eagerly to go out. Sir Patrick nodded his head with the sir of a man who had been an-awared to his own entire sarisfaction. "Oh!"

he said, "that's the attraction, is it?"

Arnold's life at sea had left him singularly ignorant of the ways of the world on shore. In-stead of mking the joke, he looked confused. A ing their best when they look at the man they When Blanche's eyes turned on Armo after her uncle had gone out, not even the hide-ous fashionable disfigurements of the inflated "chignon" and the tilted hat could destroy the triple charm of youth, hearty, and tenderness beaming in her face. Arnold looked at her-and remembered, as he had never remembered yet, that he was going by the next train, and that he was leaving her in the society of more than one admiring man of his own age. The experience of a whole fortnight passed under the same roof with her had proved Blanche to be the more charming girl in existence. It was possible that she mirror not be mortally offended possible that she might not be mortally offended with him if he told her so. He determined that he would tell her so at that auspicious moment. But who shall presume to measure the abyas that lies between the Intention and the Execution? Arnold's resolution to speak was as firm-ly settled as a resolution could be. And what came of it? Alas for human infirmity! No-thing came of it but silence.

"You don't look quite at your ease, Mr.
Brinkworth," said Blanche. "What has Sir
Patrick been saying to you? My uncle sharpens his wit on every body. He has been sharpening it on gov?"

Arnold began to see his way. At an immeas-urable distance—but still he saw it, "Sir Patrick is a terrible old man," he answered. "Just before you came in he discov-ered one of my secrets by only looking in my face." He peased, rallied his courage, pushed on at all hazards, and came beadlong to the point. "I wonder," he asked, blundly, "whether you take ofter your uncle?"

Blanche instantly understood him. With time at her disposal, she would have taken him lightly in hand, and led him, by fine gradations, to the object in view. But in two minutes or leas it would be Arnold's turn to play. "He is going to make me an offer," thought Blanche; "and But in two minutes or less he has about a minute to do it in. He shall do it!"

"What!" she exclaimed, "do you think the gift of discovery runs in the family?"
Arnold made a plunge.
"I wish it did!" he said.

Bianche looked the picture of astonishment, "Why?" she asked,

" If you could see in my face what Sir Patrick

He had only to finish the sentence, and the thing was done. But the tender passion per-versely delights in raising obstacles to itself. A sudden timidity seized on Arnold exactly at the wrong moment. He stopped short, in the most awkward manner possible.

Blanche heard from the lawn the blow of the mallet on the ball, and the laughter of the company at some blunder of Sir Patrick's. The precious seconds were slipping away. She could have boxed Arnold on both ears for being so unreasonably afraid of her.

"Well," she said, impatiently, "if I did look in your face, what should I see?"

Arnold made another plunge. He answered:
"You would see that I want a little encouragement."

"From me?"

"Yes—if you please," Blanche looked back over her shoulder. The summer-house stood on an eminence, approached by steps. The players on the lawn beneath were audible, but not visible. Any one of them might appear, mexpectedly, at a moment's notice. Blanche listened. There was no round of ap-proaching footsteps—there was a general hush, and then another bang of the mallet on the ball, and then a clapping of hands. Sir Patrick was a privileged person. He had been allowed, in all probability, to try again; and he was succeeding at the second effort. This implied a reprieve of some seconds. Blanche looked back again at Ayrold again at Amold.

"Consider yourself encouraged," she whis-pered—and instantly added, with the ineradica-ble female instinct of self-defense, "within lim-

Arnold made a last plunge-straight to the bottom, this time.

"Consider yourself loved," he burst out,

"without any limits at all."

It was all over—the words were spoken—he had got her by the hand. Again the perversity of the tender passion showed itself more strongly than ever. The confession which Blanche had been longing to hear, had barely escaped her lover's lips before Blanche protested against it! She struggled to release her hand. She it! She struggled to release her hand, formally appealed to Arnold to let her go,

"Do try to like me a little!" he pleaded.
"I am so fond of you!" Arnold only held her the tighte

Who was to resist such wooing as this?— when you were privately food of him yourself, remember! and when you were certain to be inserrupted in another moment! Blanche left off struggling, and looked up at her young sailor with a smile.

"Did you learn this method of making love the merchant-service?" she inquired, sancily.

Arnold persisted in contemplating his prosin the me

"I'll go back to the merchant-service," he said, "if I have made you segry with me." Blanche administered another dose of en-

"Anger, Mr. Brinkworth, is one of the bad passions," she answered, demurely. "A young lady who has been properly brought up has no There was a sudden ery from the players on the lawn-a ery for "Mr. Brinkworth." Blanche tried to push him out. Arnold was immovable. "Say something to encourage me before I "he plended. "One word will do. Say, Yes." Blanche shook her head. Now she had got

"THE MAN WAS GEOFFREY DELAMAYN."

"You said that rather bitterly, Sir," he remarked. "What has Geoffrey done to offend you?

"He presumes to exist-that's what he has done," retorted Sir Patrick. "Don't stare! I am speaking generally. Your friend is the model young Briton of the present time. I don't like "Don't stare! I the model young Briton. I don't see the sense of crowing over him as a superb national duction, because he is big and strong, and drinks beer with impunity, and takes a cold showerhath all the year round. There is far too much glorification in England, just now, of the mere physical qualities which an Englishman shares with the savage and the brate. And the ill re-sults are beginning to show themselves already! We are readier than we ever were to practice all that is rough in our national customs, and to excuse all that is violent and brutish in our national acts. Read the popular books; attend the popular amusements—and you will find at the bottom of them all a lessening regard for the gentler graces of civilized life, and a growing admiration for the virtues of the aboriginal Arnold listened in blank amazement. He had been the innocent means of relieving Sir Pat-rick's mind of an accumulation of social protest, tones. He eagerly took up the defense of his | deeper tinge of color reddened his dark cheeks. 'I didn't say so," he answered, a little irritably. Sir Patrick lifted two of his white, wrinkled old fingers, and good-humoredly patted the young sailor on the cheek.

"Yes you did," he said. "In red letters."

The little gold lid in the knob of the ivory cane flew up—and the old gentleman rewarded him-self for that neat retort with a pinch of snuff. At the same moment Blanche made her appearance

"Mr. Brinkworth," she said, "I shall want you directly. Uncle, it's your turn to play."

"Bless my soul!" cried Sir Patrick, "I forgot the game," He looked about him, and saw his the game. the game. He source about him, has saw he mailet and ball left waiting on the table. "Where are the modern substitutes for conversation? Oh, here they are!" He bowled the ball out before him on to the lawn, and tucked the mallet, as if it was an umbrella, under his arm. "Who was the first mistaken person," he said so himself, as he briskly hobbled out, "who discovered that human life was a serious thing? Here am I, with one foot in the grave; and the most seri-ous question before me at the present moment is, Shall I get through the Hoops?"

Arnold and Blanche were left together. Among the personal privileges which Nature has accorded to women, there are surely none more enviable than their privilege of always lookhim, the temptation to tease him was irresisti- |

ble. "Quite impossible!" she rejoined. "If you want any more encouragement, you must speak to my uncle."
"I'll speak to him," returned Arnold, "be-

There was another cry for "Mr. Brinkworth."
Blanche made another effect to pash him out.
"Go!" she said. "And mind you get through the hoop!"

She had both hands on his shoulders—her She had both hands on his shoulders—her face was close to his—she was simply irresistible. Arnold caught her round the waist and kissed her. Needless to tell him to get through the hoop. He had strely got through it already! Blanche was speechless. Arnold's last effort in the art of courtship had taken away her breath. Before she could recover herself a recovery of a proposed in the court of the sound of approaching footsteps became plainly audible. Arnold gave her a last squeeze, and

She sank on the nearest chair, and closed her eyes in a flutter of delicious confusion.

The footsteps ascending to the summer-house The footsteps ascending to the summer-house came nearer. Blanche opened her eyes, and saw Anne Silvester, standing alone, looking at her. She sprang to her foot, and threw her arms impulsively round Anne's neck.

"You don't know what has happened," she whispered. "Wish me joy, darling. He has said the words. He is mine for life!"

All the sisterly lave and citatriy confidence of said the words. He is mine for he.

All the sisterly love and sisterly confidence of many years was expressed in that embrace, and in the tone in which the words were spoken. The hearts of the mothers, in the past time, could hardly have been closer to each other—se it seemed—than the hearts of the daughters were now. And yet, if Blanche had looked up in Anne's face at that moment, she must have seen that Anne's mind was far away from her little love-story.

"You know who it is?" she went on, after waiting for a reply.

"Mr. Brinkworth?"
"Of course! Who else should it be

"And you are really happy, my love?"

"Happy?" repeated Blanche. "Mind! this is strictly between ourselves. I am ready to jump out of my skin for joy. I love him! I love him!" she cried, with a childish pleasure in repeating the words. They were choed by a heavy sigh. Blanche instantly looked up into Anne's face. "What's the matter?" she asked, with a sudden change of voice and

" Nothing."

Blanche's observation saw too plainly to be

Diametre's observation saw too plainly to be blinded in that way.

"There is something the matter," she said.
"Is is money?" she added, after a moment's consideration. "Bills to pay? I have got plenty of money, Anne. I'll lend you what you like."

"No, no, my dear!"

Blanche drew back, a little hurt. Anne was ceping her at a distance for the first time in Bianche's experience of her.

"I sell you all my secrets," she said. "Why re you all my secreta, "ne said." Why are you keeping a secret from me? Do you know that you have been looking anxious and out of spirits for some time past? Perhaps you don't like Mr. Brinkworth? No? you do like him? Is it my marrying, then? I believe it is! You fancy we shall be parted, you goose? As if I could do without you! Of course, when I am married to Arnold, you will come and live with us. That's quite understood between us—isn't is?"

Anne drew herself suddenly, almost roughly, away from Blanche, and pointed out to the sceps.

"There is somebody coming," she said.

"Leok!"
The person coming was Arnold. It was Bianche's turn to play, and he had volunteered

Blanche's attention—easily enough distracted on other occasions—remained steadily fixed on Anne.

"You are not yourself," she said, "and I must know the reason of it. I will wait till to-night—and then you will tell me when you come into my room. Don't look like that! You shall tell me. And thore's a kiss for you in the mean

She joined Arnold, and recovered her gayety the moment she looked at him.

"Well? Have you got through the boops?"

"Never mind the hoops. I have broken the ice with Sir Patrick."

ee with Sir Patrick."
"What! before all the company!"
"Of course not! I have made an appointment to speak to him here."
They went laughing down the steps, and

They went taughing down the setys, and joined the game.

Left alone, Anne Silvester walked slowly to the inner and darker part of the summer-house. A glass, in a carved wooden frame, was fixed against one of the side walls. She stopped and looked into it—looked, shuddering, at the re-looked into it—looked, shuddering, at the re-flection of herself.

"Is the time coming," she said, "when even Blanche will see what I am in my face?"

She turned aside from the glass. With a sudden cry of despair she frung up her arms and laid them heavily against the wall, and rested her head on them with her back to the light.

At the same moment a men's figure arms represen-At the same moment a man's figure appeared— standing dark in the flood of sunshine at the entrance to the summer-house. The man was Geoffrey Delamayn.

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

THE TWO.

His advanced a few steps, and stopped, wheel in herself, After failed to hear him.

"I have come, as you made a point of it," he said, sullenly. "But, mind you, it isn't safe."

At the sound of his voice, Anne turned toward him. A change of expression appeared in her face, as she slowly advanced from the back of the summer-house, which revealed a likeness to her mother, not perceivable at other times. As the mother had looked, in by-gone days, at the man who had disowned her, so the daughter looked at Geoffrey Delamayn—with the same terrible composure, and the same terrible contempt.

"Well?" he asked. "What have you got to say to me?"

Mr. Delamayn," she answered, "you are one of the fortunate people of this world. You are a nobleman's son. You are a handsome man. You are popular at your college. You are free of the best houses in England. Are you something be-sides all this? Are you a coward and a scoundrei as well?

drel as well?"

He started—opened his lips to speak—checked himself—and made an uneasy attempt to laugh it off. "Come!" he said, "keep your temper."

The suppressed passion in her began to force its way to the surface.

"Keep my temper?" she repeated. "Do you of all men expect me to control myself? What a memory yours must be! Have you forgotten the time when I was fool enough to think you were fond of me? and mad enough to believe you could keep a promise?"

you could keep a promise?"

He persisted in trying to laugh it off. "Mad is a strongish word to use, Miss Silvester!"

"Mad is the right word! I look back at my own infatuation—and I can't account for it; I can't understand myself. What was there in you," she saked, with an outbreak of contemptuous surprise, "to attract such a woman as I

His inexhaustible good-nature was proof even against this. He put his hands in his pockets, and said, "I'm sure I doe"t know."

ed said, "I'm sure I don't know." She curned away from him. The frank brushe turned away roun him. The trank cut-tality of the answer had not offended her. It forced her, cruelly forced her, to remember that she had nobody but herself to blame for the po-sition in which she stood at that moment. She was unwilling to let him see how the remem-brance hurt her—that was all. A sad, sad sto-ry; but it must be told. In her mother's time, she had been the sweeter. ry; but it must be told. In her mother's time, she had been the sweetest, the most levable of children. In later days, under the care of her mother's friend, her girlhood had passed so harmlessly and so happily—it seemed as if the sleeping passions might sleep forever! She had lived on to the prime of her womanhood—and then, when the tressure of her life was at its richest, in one fatal moment she had flung it away on the man in whose presence she now stood.

Was she without excuse? No: not utterly

She had seen him under other aspects than the sepect which he presented now. She had seen him, the hero of the river-race, the first and foremost man in a trial of strength and skill which had roused the enthusiasm of all England. She had rossed the enthusiasm of all England. She had seen him, the central object of the interest of a nation; the idol of the popular worship and the popular applanse. His were the arms whose muscle was celebrated in the newspapers. He was first among the heroes halled by ten thousand rearing threats as the pride and flower of England. A woman, in an atmosphere of red-hot enthusiasm, witnesses the apotheceis of Physical Strength. Is it reasonable—is it just—to expect her to ask herself, in cold blood, What (morally and intellectually) is all this worth?—and that, when the man who is the object of the apotheceis, notices her, is presented to her, finds her to his taste, and singles her out from the rest? No. While humanity is humanity, the woman is not utterly without excuse. utterly without excuse.

Has she escaped, without suffering for it?

Look at her as she stands there, tortured by the knowledge of her own secret—the hideous secret which she is hiding from the innocent secret which she is hiding from the innocent girl, whom she loves with a sister's love. Look at her, bowed down under a humiliation which is unutterable in words. She has seen him be-low the surface—now, when it is too late. She rates him at his true value—now, when her rep-utation is at his mercy. Ask her the question: What was there to love in a man who can speak to you as that man has spoken, who can treat you as that man is treating you now? you so clever, so cultivated, so refined—what, in Heav-on's name, could you see in him? Ask her that; and she will have no answer to give. She will not even remind you that he was once your model of manly beauty, too-that you waved your handker-chief till you could wave it no longer, when be took his seat, with the others, in the boat—that your heart was like to jump out of your bosom, on that later occasion when he leaped the last hurdle at the foot-race, and won it by a head. In the bitterness of her remorse, she will not even seek for that excuse for herself. In there no attending suffering to be seen here? Do your sympathies shrink from such a character as this? Follow her, good friends of virtue, on the pilgrimage that leads, by steep and thorny ways, to the purer atmosphere and the nobler life. Your fellow-creature, who has sinned and has repented—you have the suthority of the Divine Teacher for it—is your fellow-creature, purified and ennobled. A joy among the angels of heaven—oh, my brothers and sisters of the earth, have I not laid my hand on a fit companion for You?

There was a moment of silence in the summer-cuse. The cheerful tumult of the lawn-party house. The cheerful tumult of the lawn-party was pleasantly audible from the distance. Out-side, the hum of voices, the laughter of girls, the thump of the croquet-mallet against the ball, Jaside, nothing but a woman forcing back the bitter tears of sorrow and shame—and a man who was tired of her.

She roused herself. She was her mother's daughter; and she had a spark of her mother's spirit. Her life depended on the issue of that interview. It was nacless—without father or brother to take her part—to lose the last chance of appealing to him. She dashed away the tears --time enough to cry, is time easily found in a woman's existence—she dashed away the tears, and spoke to him again, more gently than she had spoken yet.

"You have been three weeks, Geoffrey, at "You have been three weeks, Geoffrey, at your brother Julius's place, not ten miles from here; and you have never once ridden over to see me. You would not have come to-day, if I had not written to you to insist on it. Is that the treatment I have deserved?"

She paused. There was no answer.

"Do you hear me?" she naked, advancing, and speaking in louder tones.

He was still silent. It was not in human endeavence to hear his contempt. The warming of durance to bear his contempt. The warning of a coming outbreak began to show itself in her face. He met it, beforehand, with an impenetrable front. Feeling nervous about the inter-view, while he was waiting in the rose-gardenview, while he stood committed to it, he was in full possession of himself. He was composed enough to remember that he had not put his pipe in its case—composed enough to set that little matter right before other matters went any farther. He took the case out of one pocket, and the pipe out of species.

of another.

"Go on," he said, quietly. "I hear you."

She struck the pipe out of his hand at a blow.

If she had had the strength she would have struck him down with it on the floor of the summer-

"How dare you use me in this way?" burst out, vehemently. "Your conduct is infa-mous. Defend it if you can!"

mons. Defend it if you can?"

He made no stiempt to defend it. He looked, with an expression of genuine anxiety, at the fallen pipe. It was beautifully colored—it had cost him ten shillings. "I'll pick up my pipe first," he said. His face brightened pleasantly—be looked handsomer than ever—as he examined the precious object, and put it back in the case. "All right," he said to himself. "She hasn't broken it." His attitude, as he looked at her again, was the perfection of easy grace—the grace that attends ou cultivated strength in a state of repose. "I put it to your own common-sense," he said, in the most reasonable manner, "what's the good of bullying me? You don't want them to hear you, out on the lawn there—do you? You women are all alike. There's no beating a little prudence into your heads, try how one may."

There's no beating a little prudence into your heads, try how one may."

There he waited, expecting her to speak. She waited on her side, and forced him to go on.

"Look here," he said, "there's no need to quarrel, you know. I don't want to break my promise—but what can I do? I'm not the eldest son. I'm dependent on my father for every farthing I have; and I'm on had terms with him already. Con't you see it warrend? You'm a already. Can't you see it yourself? You're a lady, and all that, I know. But you're only a governess. It's your interest as well as mise to wait till my father has provided for me. Here it is in a nut-shell: if I marry you now, I'm a

The answer came, this time,

You villain! if you don't marry me, I am s ruined woman!" "What do you mean?"

"You know what I mean. Don't look at me in that way."

"How do you expect me to look at a woman who calls me a villain to my face?"

She suddenly changed her tone. The savage element in humanity—let the modern optimists who doubt its existence look at any uncultivate who doubt its existence look at any uncultivate. who doubt its existence look at any uncultivated man (no matter how muscular), woman (no mat-ter how beautiful), or child (no matter how young)—began to show itself furtively in his eyes, to utter itself furtively in his voice. Was he to blame for the manner in which he looked at her, and spoke to her? Not he! What had these home in the twistence of his as ner, and spoke to her? Not he! What had there been in the training of his life (at school or at cellage) to soften and subdue the savage element in him? About as much as there had been in the training of his ancestors (with-out the school or the college) five hundred years

It was plain that one of them must give way. The woman had the most at stake—and the wo-man set the example of submission.

man set the example of submission.

"Don't be hard on me," she pleaded. "I don't mean to be hard on you. My temper gets the better of me. You know my temper. I am sorry I forgot myself. Geoffrey, my whole fattre is in your hands. Will you do me justice?"

The course never and hid her hard recreasively on his arm.

"Haven't you a word to say to me? No answer? Not even a look?" She waited a moewer? Not even a look?" She waited a moment more. A marked change came over her. She turned slowly to leave the summer-house. "I am sorry to have troubled you, Mr. Delamayn. I won't detain you any longer."

He looked at her. There was a tone in her voice that he had never heard before. There was a light in her eyes that he had never seen in them before. Suddenly and flercely, he reached out his hand, and stopped her.

"Where are you going?" he saked.

She answered, looking him straight in the face, "Where many a miserable woman has gone before me. Out of the world."

He drew her nearer to him, and eyed her closer nearer to him, and eyed her clos ly. Even his intelligence discovered that he had brought her to bay, and that she really meant it! "Do you mean you will destroy yourself?" he

"Yes. I mean I will destroy myself." He dropped her arm. "By Jupiter, she does mean %!"

With that conviction in him, he pushed one With that conviction in him, he pushed one of the chairs in the summer-house to her with his foot, and signed to her to take it. "Sit down!" he said, roughly. She had frightened him—and fear comes seldom to men of his type. They feel it, when it does come, with an angry distrast; they grow loud and brutal, in instinctive protest against it. "Sit down!" he repeated. She obeyed him. "Haven't you got a word to say to me?" he asked, with an each. No! she sat immovable, reckless how it end as only women can be, when women's minds are made up. He took a turn in the summer-house, and came back, and struck his hand an-grily on the rail of her chair. "What do you

"You know what I want."

He took another turn. There was nothing for it but to give way on his side, or run the risk of something happening which might cause an awk-ward scandal, and come to his father's cars.

"Look here, Anne," he began, abruptly. have got something to propose."
She looked up at him. "What do you say to a private marriage?"
Without asking a single question, without making objections, she answered him, speaking as bluntly as he had spoken himself.
"I consent to a private marriage."

He began to temporise directly.
"I own I don't see how it's to be managed-She stopped him there.

"What!" he cried out, suspiciously. "You have thought of it yourself, have you?"

"And planned for it?"

"And planned for it."

"And planned for it."

"Why didn't you tell mo so before?"

She answered haughtily; insisting on the respect which is due to women—the respect which was doubly due from him, in her position.

"Because you owed it to me, Sir, to speak first."

first." "Very well. I've spoken first. Will you ait a little?" wait a little !"
"Not a day!"

The tone was positive. There was no mistak-ing it. Her mind was made up.
"Where's the hurry?"
"Have you eyes?" she asked, vehemently.
"Have you ears? Do you see how Lady Lundie looks at me? Do you hear how Lady Lundie speaks to me? I am suspected by that woman. My shameful dismissal from this house may be a question of a few hours." Her head sunk on a question of a few hours." Her head sunk on her bosom; she wrung her clasped hands as they rested on her lap. "And, oh, Blanche!" she mouned to herself, the tears gathering again, and falling, this time, unchecked. "Blanche, who looks up to me! Blanche, who loves mé! Blanche, who told me, in this very place, that I was to live with her when she was married!" She started up from the chair; the tears dried suddenly; the hard despair settled again, wan and white, on her face. "Let me go! What is death, compared to such a life as is weiting is death, compared to such a life as is waiting for sec!" She looked him over, in one disdainful glance from head to foot; her voice rose to its loudest and firmest tones. "Why, even you would have the courage to die if you were in place!"

Geoffrey glanced round toward the lawn.
"Hush!" he said. "They will hear you!"
"Let them hear me! When I am past hearing them, what does it matter?"

He put her back by main force on the chair. In another moment they must have heard her, through all the noise and laughter of the game.
"Say what you want," he recumed, "and I'll do it. Only be reasonable. I can't marry you to day."

to-day."
You can!"

"What nonsense you talk! The house and grounds are swarming with company. It can't be!" "It can! I have been thinking about it ever since we came to this house. I have got some-thing to propose to you. Will you hear it, or not?"

""Speak lower!"
"Will you hear it, or not?"
"There's somebody coming!"
"Will you bear it, or not?"
"The devil take your obtainacy! Yes!"
The answer had been wrung from him. Still, was the answer she wanted—it opened the door to hope. The instant he had consented to hear her her mind awakened to the serious necessity of averting discovery by any third per-son who might stray idly into the summer-house. She held up her hand for silence, and listened to what was going forward on the lawn.

The duli thump of the croquet-mallet against the ball was no longer to be heard. The game had stopped.

ment more she heard her own name In a moment more she heard her own name called. An interval of another instant passed— and a familiar voice said, "I know where she is.

She turned to Geoffrey, and pointed to the

She turned to Geoffrey, and pointed to the back of the summer-bouse.

"It's my turn to play," she said. "And Blanche is coming here to look for me. Walt there—and I'll stop her on the steps."

She went out at once. It was a critical moment. Discovery, which meant moral-ruin to the woman, meant money-ruin to the man. Geoffrey had not exaggerated his position with his father. Lord Holchester had twice paid his debts—and had declined to see him since. One more outrage on his father's rigid sense of propriety, and he would be left out of the will as well as kept out of the house. He looked for a means of retreat, in one there was no escaping means of retreet, in case there was no escaping unperceived by the front entrance. A door— intended for the use of servants, when picnics and gipsy tea-parties were given in the summer-house—had been made in the back wall. It opened outward, and it was locked. With his | strength it was easy to remove that obstacle. He put his shoulder to the door. At the moment when he burst it open he felt a hand on his arm. Anne was behind him, alone.

"You may want it before long," she said, ob-

AND THE RESERVE OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERT

"You may want it before long," she said, ob-serving the open door, without expressing any surprise. "You don't want it now. Another person will play for me—I have told Blanche I am not well. Sit down. I have secured a re-spite of five minutes, and I must make the most of it. In that time, or less, Lady Landie's sus-pictions will bring her here—to see how I am. For the present, shut the door."

She seated herself, and pointed to a second chair. He took it—with his eye on the closed door.

door.
"Come to the point!" he said, impatiently. "What is it?"

You can marry me privately to-day," she wered. "Listen—and I will tell you how!" answered. "List

MY NEST.

The shadows lengthen; the twilight is falling;
The labors and cares of the day are ended;
A peace settles over the city's beswing,
Like the mirror'd glow of the sunset splendid.
And sparrow and robin, and skylark and throstis, Are silent now in leafy recesses: almly and warmly and safely they neetle In the shadowy biles of soft caresses.

On the skirts of the city my nest is waiting, Warm with a glow that is grateful and tender; And the world, with its striving, and sinning, and hating. Meits in the light of its excred splendor. What though my dovecot be poor and lowly? Low's kingly sway makes the dwelling royal? Peace, like a cheroline, pure and boly, Fills every heart with a faith life loyal?

Cory, warm nest! every bounty and blessing Linger about thee as years o'er thee gather; ye bide within thee; and mercles uncessing Rain from the bountiful hand of the Father! Hope's budding promises break without number Rich 'mong thy leafests, and burst into blossom: Sweet be thy glad waking bours, and thy slumber Calm as the sleep of a babe on the bosom!

JUDGE LYNCH IN INDIA.

"I nam say, my dear fellow, that with your British notions it does appear strange to you that any law abiding citizen of the United States should for an instant uphold the doings of Judge Lynch; but I for one have long been convinced that worse evils can beful a community then an occasional visit from the peripatetic then an occasional visit from the peripastic judge. Truly he administers but 'wild justice,' but I do not think that as many innocent men have suffered from his decrees as from those of the legally qualified common-law judges of En-gland and America. Moreover, during my trav-els throughout 'Greater Britain,' I have seen cause to regret that Judge Lynch and his effective if irregular court had not been introduced into cause to regret that Judge Lynch and his effective if irregular court had not been introduced into other English-speaking countries. For instance, bush-ranging in Australia could never have been reduced to so fine a science had the squatters taken a lesson or two from my friends in Indiana on the speediest method of freeing the country from horse-thieres and murderers.

"Yes, that is all very well, you know, for you who have become so thoroughly American in life and thought; but no Englishman—no regu-lar Englishman, I mean—would ever consent to act the part of Judge Lyuch, or the part of a juryman in his court

The last speaker was evidently what he had styled a regular Englishman; his companion was as undoubtedly of the same race, but in him the salient characteristics had been rubbed off or toned down, and he might readily be taken by a casual observer for a native of his adopted State.

The two men occupied a seat in a railroad car-riage that was harrying across the prairies of Il-linois.

There you are mistaken," replied the elder of the two persons; "and to convince you I will relate a personal experience of lynch-law, in which also figured no loss a person than your esteemed uncle, General H----.
"It is something more than a quarter of a century since your uncle, then a captain, and my-self were dining at the house of the Commander of the Bheel Corps in Khandes. Young N—, of the Engineers, was also a guest on the occa-sion referred to. We had settled ourselves well r Chin boo chairs on ti rands of the house enjoying our post-prandial che-roots, when a Government peon or messenger suddenly appeared in the inclosure of the bun-galow, and with considerably less than the usual amount of salaming, approached the master of the house, the redoubtable and dread Bheel Agent. In hurried accents the peon reported Agent. In numer access the peon reported that there were then lying, within a mile of our quarters, and on the high-road from Bombay to Indore, the dead bodies of ten men who had been attacked and killed within the last half bour.

"Our quartette had just been deploring the dullness of the sesson and the lack of all novelry at the station. Here was excitement and novelty with a vengeance!

"The Hindostance words for two and ten (do and dos) are so nearly alike in sound that we all thought the evidently frightened peon had inad-vertestly used the larger number; but on being taken into the house and sharply questioned by Major ——, the peon asserted that he had count-ed the dead bodies, and that there were ten all lying in a row; that on discovering the nature of the tragedy he had run with all speed to re-port the circumstance to the Berrah Sahib, but he could tell no more. Our horses were imme-diately ordered; and as we were all guests under the same hospitable roof, we armed ourselves and prepared to follow the Agent, whose duty it was, as a magistrate, to examine into the circumstances. Before our horses were ready the whole cantonment was ablaze with excitement; and when we set out to the scene of the tragedy the plain was made light as day by the flare of hun-is of burning pine-torches.

We found the bodies as described lying in the we found the bodies as described lying in the middle of the road at regular distances. To the experienced eye of an Indian official the whole story was told at a glance; the unfortunate men were gold carriers from Bombey to Indore, con-veying each of them a certain weight of the pre-cious metal in ingots, tied in their cumberbunds around the loins. Marching as they always do around the loins. Marching as they always do in Indian file, they must have been met by the robbers proceeding in like manner in the opposite robbers proceeding in the manner in the opposite direction, and as each came alongside his victim a blow on the bare neck from a sharp heavy tulwar ended the matter. In all probability not a cry escaped. In two instances the heads were entirely separated from the trunks. It would be the work of half a minute for the assailants to the work of half a minute for the assailants to tear the cumberbund from the corpsetund escape into the obscurity of the moonless night.

""This is professional Dacottee," said the magistrate, "and the secondrels will make for the Nizam's territory; once across the lines they will be safe. Jemadar!" calling a native officer, "pick out the twelve best mounted and lightest men in the troop, and order them to report at my house in half an hour. Captain S—, as brigademajor, you will take charge of the bodies, find out all you can about the murder, which I promise you won't be much; say duty is to catch the murderers. And now, gentlemen, who of you are inclined for a ride this dark night?"

"Of course every officer present volunteered; clined for a ride this dark night?"

"Of course every officer present volunteered; but as half of them had no horses fit for such an excursion, and the other half could not be spared from duty, the magistrate's companions were reduced to his dinner guests, with the addition of young B—— of the civil service, a noted horseman and hog hunter.

"In less than half an hour the five Europeans and the succles action to company with their com-and the twelve native troopers, with their officer at their head, were centering gently across the plain. It will be observed that no time was lost fore; indeed there was no room for hesitation or doubt. The murders were evidently the work of professional skill, and the assettly the work of professional skill, and the question as to the direction of their flight was narrowed down by direction of their flight was narrowed down by the necessities of the case to security in the do-minions of the Nisam, the independent native ruler of the Deccan. Before starting, how-ever, we had ascertained that a considerable body of horsemen had recently crossed a nul-lah or ditch in the direction we had determined upon taking.

"Luckily for both men and horses, the night was cool, and we were able to push on rapidly; no horses but Arabe could have gotten over the ground at the pace we rode. Arab horses have always a shambling, stumbling action, but they are sure-footed as males, and although by dawn we had ridden fifty miles, not an accident had

"At sunrise we halted for a couple of hours, we white men making our breakfast on crackers we write men making our breakness on creakers and brandy possures, our escort on parched grain and possures (water) without the brandy.

"We did not reach the frostier until 3 r.m., receiving then for the first time positive intelli-gence that the experience of Major — was not as fault; the robber band had passed across into native territory about an hour about of us, and were doubtless safe within the walls of

"We were terribly chagrined. As we attacked our flasks and crackers for the second time in twenty hours, we discussed the feasibility of enticing the gang back on to British soil, where we could lagally arrest them. But, to shorten we could legally acress them. But, to shorten my story, I may at once say that our delibera-tion closed by a unanimous resolve to cross the Rubicon, arrest the murderers, bring them back prisoners, and apologize to the outraged sover-eignty of his Hoyal Highmightiness, the Niafterward. "As there was no time to be lost, we soon reached the walled village of Rattowah, and were rejoiced at learning that our prey were all fast saleep in fancied security in the Duhrumsallsh, or caravansersi of the place. After con-sultation with the kotwal (headman) of the villarge, who pretended to be horrified at the dis-covery of the characters his village was shel-tering, their resting-place was surrounded, and three of us entered holding drawn swords and cocked pistols in our hands; a few lust aroused the astonished inmates. The Bheel Agent soon enlightened them as to the situation, The Bheel ordering them to the door in Indian file, where they were seized and securely bound with the heel-ropes of our horses.

"After this was almost silently accomplished, we concluded to take some refreshment before returning to Khandes. It was an unwise resolve, as we shortly discovered. We managed to purchase some fowls, rice, yams, and a coup of earthen pots, and two of us set to work prepare 'a hasty plate of soup.' We were, o course, our own cooks and scullions, for our troopers would have 'died the death' rather than contaminate their high-caste fingers by touching our food. Inexpertness made the placking and cleaning tedious work, and it was near sunset before we had managed to get the disjointed chickers late the pot. We were con-gratulating ourselves on the success of our cul-the village, by saying, 'Gentlemen, we must get out of this without delay. Some infernal rascal, I believe the ketwal himself, has sent a messenger express to a camp of the Nizam's cavalry, only eight or ten miles distant, and if the Rissaldar in command is the man I take him to be, he will be here to secure, not the prisoners—he don't care a button for them— but their golden plunder."

"This was a dilemma we had not calculated upon. We held a consultation once more, the result of which was the determination to try the ers by drum-bead court-martial or murderers by drum-bead court-martial on the spot. This, we all knew, was a serious busi-ness; for although no one gave utterance to the thought, it was evident that the result of such a trial would be the death of the prisoners. In spite of the fierce resolve in our hearts, we could not help laughing at the suggestion of our civil-ian associate that, as there was probably no draws to be found in such a place, we might bor-row a native tom-tom for the occasion.

draws to be found in such a place, we might borrow a native tom-tom for the occasion.

"The court was quickly organized, the prisoners were brought before it and interrogated as to name, ages, etc. They made no concealment of the crime or its motive; they one and all told us to attend to eur own business, as they had attended to theirs. There was no difficulty in finding a vertlict—there was more hesitation about the sentence; but, finally, it was agreed that they should all be hanged by the neck. I need not dwell upon the farther details. Lariats and trees were plenty; and after waiting ten minutes round the swaying bodies, we rode off as fast as our exhausted horses could carry us.

"The gold for which the twelve men had risked

"The gold for which the twelve men had risked and lost so much was subsequently transmitted, with a full account of the transaction, to the English Minister or Resident, as he is styled, at the Court of Holker at Indore, the city to which the murdered men were journeying when they met the Decoits.

There was, of course, a terrible row about the affair. Luckily Sir Charles Mescalfe had not then given to the newspapers a license to discuse such matters, and Major —— and your uncle, Fred, had interest enough to have the business husbed up after the Nizam had accepted a very humble apology,

"I found it convenient to resign my commit

"I found it convenient to resign my commit sion, and soon after came to the United States, and settled down as a farmer in Indiana; but although a resident there for more than thirty years, I have never again acted in the court of Judge

OUR SURVIVING EX-PRESIDENTS.

THE death of President Pierce leaves General Grant the only living representative of an elected chief magistrate of the nation. The two survivtreet magnetize of the nation. The two surviv-ing ex-Presidents, Fillmore and Johnson, were both reised to their high official position by the death of their superior associates in office. The history of these two ex-Presidents in their early stressing for the associates (in their early struggles for the necessaries of life, in their un-expected success, in their abandonment of the political party which raised them to power, is similar to a degree that would suggest that the faces worked out their destiny under the same unhappy auspices.

Mr. Johnson, made President by the death of Mr. Lincoln, in the first blush of his accidentally Mr. Lincoln, in the first blush of his accidentally acquired honces, promised to be the Moses who would bring the newly-enfranchised slave safely to the land of perfect freedom. If he has any record which is really prominent—connected with statesmanship—it is, that he forgot his mission, and affected the spirit that gave birth and vitality to the Fugitite Slave Law.

Both these ex-Fresidents were born in the most humble positions possible in American society; both struggled into eminence through the severest sacrifices and by indomitable energy. Both could, and can, remember the bitterness of the severest sacrifices and by indomitable energy. Both could, and can, remember the bitterness of their own early life; and yet both apparently forgot, while Presidents, to sympathize with the poor and enslaved toiler.

But this strange parallel does not end here; for, while Andy Johnson, as a boy, was working upon the bench as an apprentice to a tailor, Millard Fillmore, somewhat older in years, in the western wilds of New York, was sweating over the mechanical operation of dressing cloth, which could be fashioned into garments by the art which Andrew Johnson was learning in the then desolate regions of Tennessee. late regions of Tennessee.

But let these exemplare of singular history speak through the strange records that have been preserved for the enlightenment of Ameryouth and the astonishment of an admiring

"GREENWILL, TRANSPORT, No. "This is to certify that it is my desire that my son Andrew Johnson is bound an apprentice to James J. Selby to learn the Taylor's Trade, and that he is to serve bim faithfully until he is 21 years old.
"Andrew Johnson was born in the year 1908, December 29.

"MARY DADGHTNY, "Tours Dancersy."

"Buse firm.—Feeling disposed to relinquish my study, I feel anxious to pursue my occupation again. Therefore I shall take the liberty to inquire of you if you have any journeyman engaged to drose clock, and if you have not I should like to him out to you, and would work cheap, as I could possibly afford it. Please to direct a letter to me at Mootville the first opportunity, and let me know the result of your optimion of my request.

"Please accept my unfeigned respects. and opportunity, and re-tion of my request.

"Please accept my unfelgued respects, and present them to your amisable lady, and them to your amisable lady, and "Formatione to subscribe myself" "Your unworthy friend, "M. Finances.

A MODERN TOURNAMENT.

Amono the honorable exercises formerly in fashion among all persons of note in Europe who desired to gain reputation in feats of arms, from the king to the private gentleman, were tournaments, joustings, tiltings, etc. The word tour-nament is derived from towaer (to run around), and in those military exercises much agility, both of man and horse, was receiving in thing round a ring, or in wheeling with rapidity and pre-

Our illustration on page 780 is a very good Our illustration on page 780 is a very good representation of the tournament as it now exists in some of our Southern (especially the border) States. Let us imagine ourselves at one of these exercises. The knights are about to enter the lists, on either side of which are long lines of carriages filled with beautiful women, whose eyes beam with love and pleasure as their gallant favorites, clad in armor, enter the barriers and ride hither and thither on richly capazisoned steeds. A Queen of Love and Beauty has been chosen, with her Maids of Honor. The knights having retired to the end of the list, are called in order by the Herald, to contend for the prise. Every knight who successfully bears away the ring is, upon returning it to the judges as an ring is, upon returning it to the judges as an evidence of his provess, loadly greeted by the gentry, the fair ladies on either side also expressing their approbation by the waving of handlerchiefs and clapping of hands.

The general mode of procedure at a tourna-ment is as follows: A ring, from two to three ment is as follows: A ring, from two to three inches in diameter, is suspended on a hook high enough to allow the riders to peas under it, each rider or knight is armed with a long spear, and in his turn tilts the ring at full speed; the speed is 100 yards in five seconds. If he carries off the ring he scores one; if he misses it, or is not up to the required speed when he takes it, he does not score. Three tilts or courses in succession is the general number tried; the knight cession is the general number tried; the knight who takes the ring oftenest has the honor of choosing the Queen of Love and Beauty, the next best choosing the Maids of Honor. After the tilting is completed the knights are drawn up in line in front of the judges' stand, who then name the successful gallants and the honors they are entitled to. They then proceed to the ladies' stand and make choice of the Queen of Love and Beauty and her Maids of Honor; the whole cav-Beauty and her Maids of Honor; the whole cav-alcade then form in procession, the beauties in a carriage, the gallant knights on horseback, and proceed to the ball-room, where is erected a throne, to which the Queen and her maids are conducted; after which the knights, under their distinguishing names—such as Knight of Orange, Knight of Columbia, etc., etc.—are presented to the Court of Love and Beauty. This concludes the ceremony, and knights and ladies fair join in the many dance.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A camerary treated a voter to ginger-cake; where-upon the voter mildly bluted that his "brother" was around somewhere, and the candidate triged him to take another cake for his brother. This he did, and departed; and the up-for-office noted two more votes on his side of the list. But lists in the day, when a through and gathered at the botal to compare notes and guess at the returns, our wedant friend, very much to the surprise of every one, stalked into the parior, inquiring for Mr. C.—, Of course all eyes were directed to him as he approached. Drawing from his boson a four-by-six-inch cake, he said, "Mr. C.—, here's your cake. My brother had voted afters it seed him." Mr. C.—, 's embarrasement was not greater than his admiration of the failow's honesty.

"Patrick," said a pricet to an Irishman, "how much hay did you steal?" "Well," replied Pat, "I may se well conline to your revertocs for the whole stack, for my wife and I are going to take the rest of it the first dark night."

FULFILLING THE LAW. Let each one strive with all his might.

To be a decent man,
And love his brother as himself—
Upon the guiden plan;
And if his neighbor chance to be
A petty female woman,
Why, love her all the more—you see That's only acting human.

To remove freckies, out them out with a reace, and throw them away. To bring out a mustache, tid it to a strong cord, twenty feet long, to the other end of which sitach a heavy smoothing-iron, and throw the latter from a fourth-story window. To get rid of red hair, hold your head for a few moments in a strong blues of gas. To preserve your eyes, put them in a bottle filled with alcohol. To avoid corpulence, quit eating. To conceal your teeth, keep your mother shint. To keep out of debt, acquire the reputation of a reacal, and no one will trust you. These are infalmible receipts.

An Irish glasier was putting a pane of glass into a window, when a groom who was standing by begen joking him, telling him to mind and put in pienty of putty. The Irishman bore the banter for some time, but at last allenged his termentor by—" Arrah, now, be off wid ye, or size I'll put a pane in yer head with-out any putty."

"Buy a trunk, Pat?" said a dealer. "And what for should I buy a trunk?" rejoined Fat. "To put your clothes in," was the reply. "And go naked?" ex-claimed Fat; "not a bit iv it."

Awy Excess to Berven TRAN Nove.—An Irishman, having accidentally broken a pane of glass in a window, was making the best of his way to get out of sight as well as mind; but, unfortunately for Pal, the projeteor stole a march on him, and having select into by the coller, exclaimed: "Too broke my window, failow, did you not?" "To be sure I did," said Pat; "and didn't you see me ranning home for money to pay for it!"

One Saturday afternoon two well-dressed elderly gentlemen approached Schiller's bost in the Central Park, and having read the inscription, one observed to the other: "I believe Schiller was a great navi-gator, was he not?" "Yes," was the response, "I be-lieve he was."

An inveberate etammerer one day, upon a journey, stopped to dine at a hotel. On attempting to bein himself to pepper at the dinner, he found, after a violent shaking, that there was no pepper to be had. He tarned round, and, beckoning to the waiter, commenced: "Wa-wa-wa-wa-waiter! this pep-pep-p-pepper box is som-som-something like ma." Why so, Sirf" said the waiter. "Po-po-po-poor delivery!" That pepper-box was soon filled.

"I went in to bathe," said a Yankee; "but before I was long in the water I saw a huge double-lawed shark making rapidly toward me. What was to be done? When he was eithin a yard of me I faced round, dived under the shark, and, taking a knife from my pocket, ripped the monater up." "But did you hathe with your dother on I' asked an astonished factorer. "Well," answered the story-teller, representably.—"we'l, I do think you needn't be so tarnation particular."

Digitized by Google

THE CARDIFF GIANT-FULL LENGTH FRONT VIEW OF THE FIGURE .- [PROTOGRAPHED B) C. O. GOT.]

THE CARDIFF GIANT.

Ox the 16th of October there was discovered on Mr. NEWELL's farm in Onondaga County, New York, and about thirteen miles south of Syracuse, what was at first supposed to be a petrified human form—a giant of the olden time. The first reports of this discovery excited the greatest interest among all classes, and especially among scientific men. The fossil was found about three Eset below the surface while some persons were digging for a well. The soil was a sort of blui-h-clay mixed with quicksand and black loam, and organic remains were found about the body.

The figure, when first discovered, lay in a very easy and natural position, horizontal, partly on the right side, with the right hand resting over the abdomen. Its dimensions were as follow: From crown of head to hollow of foot, 10 feet 2½ inches; crown of head to tip of chin, 1 foot 9 inches; length of nose, 6 inches; width of nostrils, 3½ inches; width of mouth, 4 inches; point to point of shoulder, 3 feet; point of hip to knee joint, 3 feet; diameter of ralf of lag, 9½ inches; diameter of thigh, 1 foot; length of foot, 1 foot 7½ inches; width of palm, 7 inches; diameter of wrist, 5 inches. The veine, eyeballs, The figure, when first discovered, inches. The veins, eyeballs, muscles, tendons of the heel, and conds of the neck were all fully disclosed.

As we have said, this figure was at first supposed to be a petrified human form. But it was soon found that this theory seemed hardly plausible. Though the figure had the appearance of stone, the onier surface could be shaved off with a knife without dulling the blade. Dr. J. F. BOYNYON visited the figure, and, after a careful examination, pronounced it to be a state of a Caucasian. The features were finely out, and excellent artists have remarked the symmetry of proportions characterizing the whole figure.

Dr. BOYNYON as first supposed that this statue

Dr. BOTHTON at first supposed that this statue was carved by the Jesuits who dwelt in this valley between 1520 and 1780. After a more thorough examination he declares it to be of gypsum, and of recent origin. He says, in a recent letter to Professor SPENCER, of the Smithsonian Institute, at Washington:

"I have stated that I thought his 'origin

"I have stated that I thought his 'origin would not carry us back over three hundred years;' but I am not certain that the known principles of chemistry will justify me in asserting that the period between his burial and resurrection was over three years. Its antiquated appearance has been produced not by abrasion, as many have said, but by the dissolving action of water, which, I think, could have been accomplished in a few months. A more careful and accurate calculation, admitting the possible chance of some undiscovered error creeping into the cal-

EXERCISE.

INACTION weakens the body, work strengthens it. The first brings on premature old age, the second prolongs youth—that is to say, as in ev-ery thing else, in moderation. The structure of man and his mental nature show that he was not created for inactivity. Almost all those who are quoted for longevity led a more or less active or laborious life. Exercise accelerates assimilation, and with an accelerated assimilation, or process of loss and restoration, the body undergoes a more prompt and complete renovation. The secret of longevity, according to Dr. Noirot, lies in those who take their so-called exercise in car-riages. They obtain the benefit of fresh air and light, but they lose that reinvigoration of the organs, that stimulus to the vital forces, and that increase of warmth which is obtained by foot and horse exercise.

SLEEP, which is a kind of anticipation of death, s in lifetime a death which restores vitality. It procures the happiness of being born again every day. The better the sleep, the greater the probability of longerity. Night ought to be consecrated to sleep. This is a law of nature which can not be infringed nature which can not be infringed with impunity. Nothing is more prejudicial to longevity than devoting the nights to intellectual or bodily labors. Many literary men, learned men, and artists have died young in consequence of this practice. On the other hand, early rising, after being refreshed by sleep, is as beneficial as late work is the reverse. The amount of sleep necessary for as late work is the reverse. The amount of sleep necessary for reinvigoration depends upon the age, habits, and constitution of the individual. A new-born infant would perish if kept awake for twenty-four hoers. Sleep is even more necessary after mental than after bodily labor. A man who thinks little is always in a kied of torpor. Old age, again, requires less sleep than youth and soluit age. As the body is more accessible to deleterious influences at night than by day, the air ought also to be fresh, and the supply plentiful. The stomach should not be loaded. The bed should not be too soft, and, if possible, the head should not be too soft, and, if possible, the head should lie to the north, the feet to the south. The head should never be covered by the clothes; but there should be more outer clothing at night than in the daytime, the temperature of the body not being so high. It is a good thing, on taking off one's day clothes, to lay aside also all thoughts of the past. It is only thus that com-plete relaxation of the mind, as well as of the body, is secured, and without this unbending of the mental faculties perfect sleep is impossible.

THE CARDIPP GIANT-SHIPMENT OF THE STATUE TO SYRACUSE .- [PROTOGRAPHIO BY C. O. GOTT.]

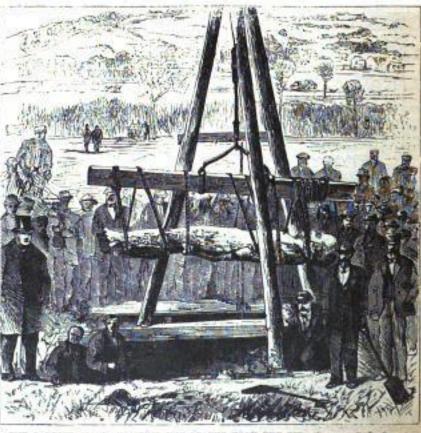

culation, may show the burial to have taken place about 870 or 871 days ago—as it may have happened between two days."

Mr. NEWELL, upon whose grounds the statue was found, is said to have-disposed of it for $40,000. The figure has been carried to Syracuse. Its weight is 2990 pounds. If it were solid stone it would not weigh so much by 500 pounds. A recent theory has been started, that it is a cast-iron figure covered with a conting of cement. The head, it is said, gives a ringing sound when struck, like that of a hollow, metallic body. But Mr. Palmen, the sculptor, states that there are marks of sculptor's tools.

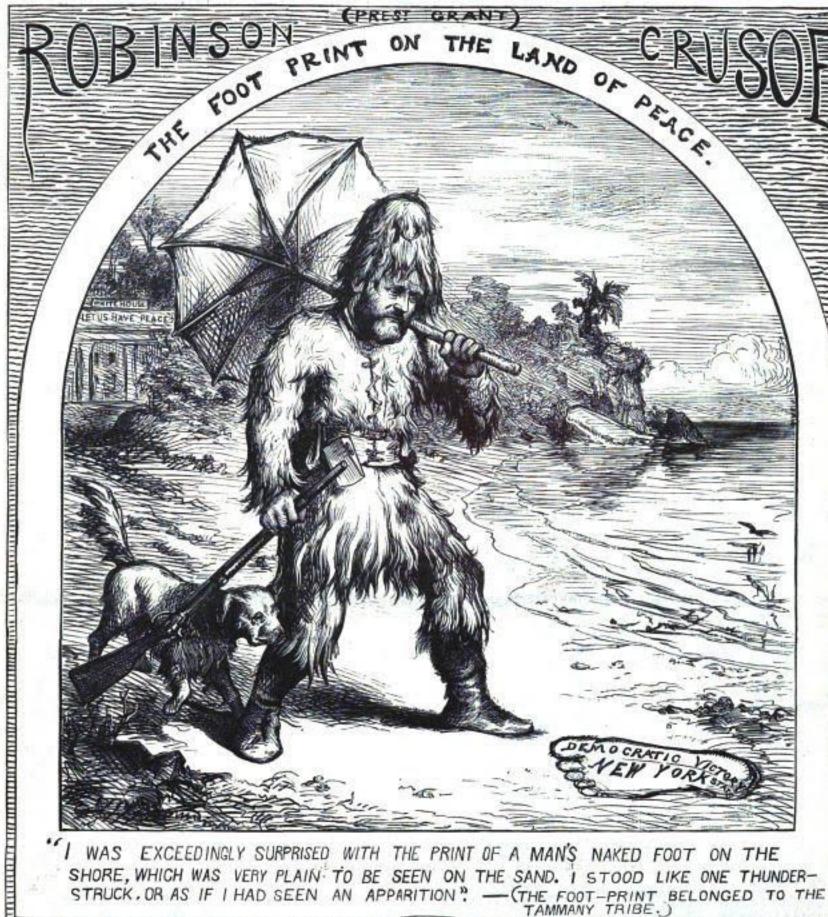

this fact. If women live to a good old age, notwithstanding their sedentary habits, Tisset says this is to be explained by the want of bodily exercise being compensated for by their talking so much. Women are, however, much more lively and cheerful than men, and the most trifling incidents abstract their attention from more serious matters — a state of mind highly conductive to longerity. The most simple, most natural, and most beneficial kind of exercise is walking on foot. Such walks should, as far as possible, be in the open air, and in the morning. Next to pedestrianism comes equitation. No one who can enjoy the use of his legs can, however, envy

THE CARDIPP GIANT-PORESHORTENED VIEW OF THE FIGURE .- (PROT. BY C. O. GOTT.)

THE CARDIFF GIANT-HOISTING THE STATUE FROM THE PIT. [Pear, or C. O. Gort.]

I WAS EXCEEDINGLY SURPRISED WITH THE PRINT OF A MAN'S NAKED FOOT ON THE SHORE, WHICH WAS VERY PLAIN TO BE SEEN ON THE SAND. I STOOD LIKE ONE THUNDER-STRUCK, OR AS IF I HAD SEEN AN APPARITION" - (THE FOOT-PRINT BELONGED TO THE

1

TOO LATE.

As the tired satior loves the welcome is On which he takes his stand, After long years of mute expectancy, Plowing the watery farrows of the So I love thes.

As looks the miser on his treasured gold, In yellow beaps unfold, Closting with bloodshot eyes upon the wealth Massed by the secretor of life and health, I look on thee.

As yearns the wanderer through the stormy night.

For that glad rosy light.

Which makers to the earliest gless of day,
Chasing the night's grim solitode away,
I yearn for thes.

I see thee through the mist of by-gone years, Though dim with unshed tears My straining eyes. Thy councy brow and hair, Rediant with nameless grace, surpassing fair,

And when the queenly night, in allence deep,
Hushes the day to alsep,
On bended knees I weary Heaven that I May nestle to thy bosom, ere I die,
At peace with thee.

And yet then comest not. My prayer is vain, Unbeeded as my pain:
And I must how me to the cruel fate
That kept me loveless till we met too late For thee and me!

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

En Ple Books .- Mook ERF.

CHAPTER L.

THE ROAD THAT LED NOWHITHER.

VERY near to Florence is the valley of the

The Ema is a small stream which strikingly contradicts the proverb, "As you make your bed, so you must lie on it," the bed the Ems ed for itself being a valley a mile or so broad in some places, reckening from hill to hill; and the little river trickling through it, nowadays, in a disproportionately small chan-nel, which may be (and is in more than one part of its course) spanned by a bridge of a single small arch. The ridge of hills dividing the valley of the Ema from that of the Arno is the valley of the Ema from that of the Arno is well known by sight to most of the many strangers who go to Florence. Few casual visitors, however, cross the ridge. The landscape seen from its summit is peculiarly Tuesan, and to the unaccustomed eye there is something drear and melancholy mingling with its beauty. After a time that impression is much softened. The peculiar delicacy of coloring; the long vistas of hills that fold like clouds one over the other, and present nearly as much variety of outline as the clouds themselves; the countless towers, villas, and churches that lie scattered over the scene, and peep forth from amidst the heary olive-trees, combine to charm the sight.

We come to learn the loveliness, as we learn the expression of a face whose stranger aspect was so different from its known and familiar one that the recollection of our first impression

The great enchantment of this Tescan land-scape lies in the atmosphere through which it is viewed. The wonderful lights and shades, the exquisite tints, the limpid clearness of the skies, are inestimable in their effect upon the scenery. are inestimable in their effect upon the scenery. In a winter afternoon at sunset, the bare, distant Apennines are touched with such ethereal hues—such likes, silvery-grays, blues, and rescolors—that they look like mother-of-pearl mountains in some fairy story. Not Hope herself can more delusively beautify the barren distance than does this southern sir.

Then, as the sun goes down, and the brief whileht degeners, there grows a solemn purple

Then, as the sun goes down, and the brief twilight deepens, there grows a solemn purple on the hills—a color that seems, in its intense bloomy depth, to fold around them like a cloud-garment. It is not that the hills grow purple, but that the great purple descends and wraps itself about the hills. Or, in the early summer days, what a fathomless ocean of dazzling blue is it that the swallows sail across! Bright, rapid, gladsome little skiffs upon that silent sea! Every projecting stone in the cottages is precious, cast-ing as it does an island of black shadow on the glare of wall or road. The springing wheat is almost too emerald-bright to be gazed upon. Beside the bursed brown tower on the hill stand the strong cypresses, writing dark char-acters against the shimmering sky—hieroglyph-ies which different eyes so differently interpret, and which to some remain dumb and unre-

It is June. Through the vale of Ema ripples the shrunken river among the parched, thirsty and. Here and there comes a stretch that seems to have absorbed the little stream. You can cross it dry-shod. But, lo! some furiougs off, it puris and gargies once more ambies the reeds. The frogs keep up an incessant cry, tremulous and guttural; and now and then one of them plashes luxuriously into the cool water beneath the shadow of the bank. The cicala, in his bronze coat of mail, sends forth a shrill sound, like the springing of an infinitely tiny rattle made of the finest steel. It seems to be to the ear what the hot quivering of the air is the eye, and to be equally suggestive of sun-ine. Swarms of colored butterflies flutter brightly around. Orange, crimson, blue, white, purple, yellow; if a rainbow could fall from the sky, and be scattered into a thousand fragments as it fell, it could shower down no bright tint these winged flowers would fail to match.

On the dry, dusty, crumbling paths that climb the hills bounding the valleys the light beats fercely. The grass is parched, and sparsely grown, and dry. Here and there glitters a bunch of glaring yellow weeds, made bold and flaunting by the munificent sun, like a course favorite of fortune. Little cold bright-eyed lisards glide in and out of the chinks in the rough stone-walls that flank the main roads. Some of the lisards are as green as emersids. Others, again, are of the same hue as the brownest of the blocks of those. Sometimes they will remain as motionthe same hoe as the brownest of the blocks of stone. Sometimes they will remain as motion-less as the stone itself, gazing with their round, unwinking, black diamonds of eyes, until the passer-by might think that they were hardened and baked stiff and stony by the heat. But sud-denly, at some sound or sight which startles it— or, it may be, from pure exprice—the little rep-tile flits away as swift and noiseless as a flash of light, and is gone. light, and is gone.

light, and is gone.

Over the top of the wall tumbles a laden branch of roses or the starry elematis. The wheat is high, and the green vines, full of leaf, hang richly on the poliard multherry-stems. The gray olive stands up to his middle in a sea of grain. The corn and wine and oil all grow together on the same fertile field. Every thing is steeped in smitght. Only the olive's silvery foliage controve a thought of coolness. It is always a moorhight tree. In the subriest summer noontide its soft gray tint, and the fantastic weirdness of its shadowy form (expension) shadowy form (especially in the older trees, which have been scooped and cut until nothing but a seemingly unsubstantial shell of trunk rebut a seemingly unsu out a seemingly insubstantial shell of trunk re-mains to them), and the trembling, feathery plume of branches recall the cold bright pallor of the moon, that makes the shuddering flowers so wan and bloomless when the night breeze

Tuffes their dewy breasts.

Drought and a sultry silence, which the cicala's ory seems but to emphasize, not break, prevail along the dusty road, as we wander along the Emas course, further and still further away From the fair city of Florence, going eastward.
Presently, with many a laboring creak and jar, comes lumbering by a clumsy country cart, drawn by two of the colossal, dove-colored Tuscan oxen. The driver—or he who should be driving, rather—lies asleep under a shady awn-ing of matting at the bottom of his rude vehicle. The cart is one which might have been copied inch for inch from a Roman bass-relief, and has been copied through a long series of models from the cart that bore home the produce of the teem-ing Italian soil in Horner's day. The docile heavy beasts that draw it turn their grand dark eyes askance upon the passenger as they meet him, and blow a fragrant breath from moist, him, and blow a fragrant breath from moist, ample nostrila.

Following the windings of the road, which now runs for a short space on the level, close to the Ema, we come to a steep ascent on the right, leading up to the summit of one of the highest eminences overlooking the valley. Instead of sloping gently down toward the river, as most of the neighboring hills do, this one terminates on the side of the Ema in an abrupt precipice. The steep ascent before mentioned leaves the main highway to climb this height. The road is narrow, strewn thickly with great smooth pebnarrow, strewn thickly with great smooth peb-ics, like the bed of a torrent, and only kept is narrow, strewn thickly with great smooth perbles, like the bed of a torrent, and only kept from crumbling bodily down into the valley in summer, or being washed away by the rain in winter, by horizontal lines of rough stone paring, placed like the rungs of a indder, which succed each other at wide intervals, and afford a foothold to any laden mule that may be driven up or down. To wheels the rood is quite inaccessible. Arrived on the summit, it turns abruptly to the left between high stone-walls, within which the soil is so much higher than the rood—a common circumstance in Tuscan farms—that the corn and wild flowers peep over the top of the wall, and the olives and fruit trees rear nearly their whole height above it. The walls and the foliage shut cert all glimpse of the view to right or left; but presently we come to an open space, a little piametts, and the wide landscape bursts upon us. It is so bright and airy and unexpected that we feel as though we had come out of a dark room into the daylight. We are on the topmost ridge of a line of hills that are on the topmost ridge of a line of hills that slope down on either hand—this way toward the Close, here in the fore ground, is a tiny church with a low campanile, or bell-tower, on its roof. It is the church of Saint John in Jerusalem. But the neighboring peasants know it by no other name than San Gersolé, that being the popular contraction of the ten syllables noces-sary to the promucciation of San Giovanni in In front of the church lies the permanename. In front of the church lies the little piazzetta, bounded on the side opposite to the church-door by a low parapet wall, and en-tirely surrounded by huge cypresses. Beyond this parapet what a dream of purple hills, veiled chickly here and the hard the purple hills, veiled this parapet what a dream of purple hills, veited elightly here and there by a silvery gause of hot mist! What a widening plain, ever widening toward the sea, that is green near at hand, and then in the distance bluish-gray, and holds Arno, sleepily flowing on his course, brighten Arms, alceptly howing on his course, prignioning it with rare gleams reflected from the skyl. What a vision of a city, whose house-roofs seem to press and throng like a holiday crowd, and of an awful dome, and soaring towers and spires, and churches and palaces, and old arched gateways, showing burned and brown as colossal fragments. ments of Etruscan pottery! What a dazzling speck of whiteness on the far horizon, that looks like a wandering chard har. like a wandering cloud, but is the jagged line of the Carrara marble mountains many a mile away! What a strange melancholy charm as the eye explores the naked Apennine, discrewned long ages of his rich regal wreath of woods, rearing parched and crumbling heights to the releatle sun, and with black gashes of shadow where a deep ravine winds its mysterious way into the central strong-hold of the hills! What a waveless sea of asure sir, into whose limpid depths the very soul seems to plunge and float as we gase! And subtly steeping all this in a flood of glory, what a divinely terrible, divine-ly beneficent, dassling, flaming, white-hot sun-shine!

Drought, and a sultry allence, shaking to the shrill song of the cicals, as we stand and gaze.
Suddenly a jangling bell breaks forth discordantly. Up in the square campanile of San Gersolé it is swinging in measy jerks—ting-tang, ting-tang, jingle-jangle jingle—without any

Out of the dark little church comes a Out of the dark little church comes a procession. Two priests; boys in white surplices swinging censers; men carrying a lofty crimson banner bearing the painted miracle of some saint; and some dozen or so of peasant men and women (the latter largely predominating) in holiday strire, carrying missals, and shouting forth a Latin hymn in a quaint, monotonous chant.
Round the little plazza they march soleunly, sending up curling clouds of incense into the leafy darkness of the cypresses, and jealously edging on to every inch of shade as they walk slowly, bare-headed, under the summer sky.
Once, twice, three times, they make the circuit of the plazza. Then the dark church-door swallows them again. The bell ceases to jangle, and the last whiff of incense floats away into the air.
Standing with San Gersele on the left, and the parapet wall on the right, and looking straight before us, whither does the road lead?

"Nowhither," answers an old contadino, who has been tending his cows in a shed close at hand.
Cows know no difference between week days and ion. Two priests; boys in white surplic

Cows know no difference between work days and feast days, but need their fodder and litter all the same, though it be the festa of the saint whose legend is commemorated on the crimson banner. Therefore the old contadino has been tending them, with a large apron made of coarse blue linen tied over his holiday clothes. And if you ask him again whither the road leads he will still answer "nowhither." You do not "come out," he says; the road leads nowhither, save—as, if you press him hard with questions, he will be driven to tell you—to the extreme edge of the precipice that overhangs the valley of the Ema.

But is there nothing, then, between San Ger-sole and the edge of the precipice, save a strip of road leading nowhither? Ah, truly, yea: there is a garden; a large garden. And there is a home; a large house: the Villa Chiari. Oh yes, as to that; yes, yes. But the road—what would you?—leads nowhither.

Proceeding along it, nevertheless, we reach a forlorn-looking, grass-grown space. The grass is burned straw-color, and a foot-path is worn across it. The foot-path shows the bare brown earth besten and baked quite hard. Across it carts testen and baked quite hard. A cross it streams an endless procession of big black anta, as sealously busy a crowd pressing importantly along the road that "leads nowhither" as you shall ever have seen along the road that "leads nowhither" as you shall ever have seen even in Fleet Street, London City. No other living thing is to be beheld, not even a butterfly; but the cicals still springs his tiny steel rattle in the sultry allence.

Before us is a high wall, whose plaster is crumbling and poeting off. There are massive iron gates, worked by some comping artism of the old Florentine time, resty and hert, and parterumiting and pounds one counting artisan of the old Florentine time, rusty and bent, and partly off their hinges. One-half of the gate stands open. It must have stood open this many a long day—many a long year, perhaps—for the grass has grown around it thickly, and one side of it is has grown around it uneary, and one size of the partly buried in the soil, and a colony of wild flowers has sprung up in the shelter of its crook-ed shadow. On either side of the gate hangs down a tangled mass of leaves and branches the shelter of the same beauthers. clothing the unsightly wall, and nearly hiding a marble tablet—moss-grown and discolored— whereon are graven the words "Villa Chiari," surmounted by an elaborate coat of arms. The ivy, dog-rose, and honey-suckle are all matted rey, tog-toe, and honey-could are all matter together, so as to form a thick screen over the tablet. But it matters the less, in that this is not the grand entrance to the house. No one enters by this old gate, save the contadini belonging to the adjacent form. On the other side is a good road, well engineered, and mounting by due good road, went organized, and mounting by the right agency to a green painted gateway, and a grav-eled sweep before the portico.

But that is a long way off, and there are some acres of garden ground between the road that "leads nowhither" and that which officially conducts to Villa Chiari.

In the old times many a lady's palfrey, and many a churchman's ambling mule, and many a rich litter borne by lackeys, and holding a lux-urious Medicean noble, may have passed along the old steep way. Then the fine scroll-work of the iron gates cast the black tracery of its shadow on fair faces and bright hair glistening in the sunshine, and made them fairer and more bright by contrast. And they, too, have gone their way along the road that "leads nowhither," and the sulptured marble is white above their tombs, ad the wild flowers twine fearlessly around the unhinged gate.

We pass the gateway and find ourselves in a neglected garden—neglected in this part of it, that is; for near the house the walks are rolled and weeded, and the flower-beds are as trim and bright as patterns in a kaleidoscope. But here are paths all overgrown with greenery, tangled thickets of laurestimum, lilac, rose, and cleander. There is a pergola, or trollis, covered with vines. And the eglantine and elematis and elinging hon-And the eglantine and elematis and elinging non-sy-suckle have usurped its support, and pushed their fragrant faces peeringly in here and there amidst the leaves and the grape blossoms. From the booky gloom of a grove of acacia and like, trees, thickly undergrown with laurel and like, comes the mellow fluting trill of a nightingale, like the perfume out of the heart of a rose. Now and again is heard the flutter of wings, as some little brooding bird stirs in his noonday dream, and then is still again. Onward we wander beneath the freshness of the pergola, then out again into the flery air. Still onward, past a broken marble basin, once a fountain, where a tiny stream drips out of a crevice and makes a green track in the parched berbage, and where a harmless make is sunning himself asleep. And we come to a deep blot of shadow that shows against the glare of the ground, like a black mountain turn amidst snow. The shadow is thrown from an ancient cypross that stands, lonely as a sentinel, upon the brink of the precipice, at the end of the road that "leads nowhither." And in the shadow sits a lady, young and beautiful, looking out at the far-away Apennine, and quite alone.

CHAPTER IL VILLA CHIARL

Tun lady sitting in the shadow was Veronica, brim, such as the possent women wear. And beneath it her eyes gleamed and her checks glowed brighter than ever. She had wrapped a white burnous as fine as gossamer around her shoulders, and set huddled together under the cypress, with her elbows resting on her knees and her cheeks resting on her hands. It was shady beneath the cypress, but it was not cool. No spot to which the hot sun-impregneted air had free access could be cool. Still, Veronica sat there looking out at the far-away barren Apennine, with her elbows resting on her kno and her cheeks resting on her hands.

A man came through the garden toward her, a short, thick-set, gray-haired man, staid and re-spectful, who hared his head in the sunshine as he addressed her.

"Signoral" said the gray-haired man, and then stood still and waited.

Veronica neither turned her head nor her eyes toward him. But her color rose a very little, and through her parted lips the breath came "Miladi!" said the gray-haired man. No shade of difference could be discovered in his tone. It was the same to him whether he used the one title or the other. If this lady preferred the English one, why should she not have it? He had learned that she liked it best; but he was very far indeed from understanding why.

"What is it, Paul?"
"Pardon, miliadi, but Sir John, on awaking from his seests, demanded to know where you were; and when I told him that I supposed you were beneath the accustomed cypress, pray you to come in."

pray you to come in."

Paul spoke in Italian.—which was nearly as much a foreign language as English to his Pie'smontees tongue—and addressed her with perfect respect, but with an indefinable air of taking it for granted that she would comply with any expressed wish of Sir John's, which graced on the sensitive screness of her haughty spirit.

"I am very well here, and shall remain," said Veronica, briefly. Then she turned her eyes away (she had never relinquished her careless attitude) and seemed to dismiss him from her thoughts.

thoughts.

"It is bad to stay here in the heat, miledi," returned Paul. He spoke with the same caim, imperturbable air of knowing his duty and doing it which he had assumed toward Sir John Gale in the most irritable moments of his ill-

"I am in the shade," said Veronica. And when she had said it she bit her lip at having been betrayed into what seemed an excuse or spology.

Paul gravely unfurled a huge yellow sun-shade, lined with purple, which he had brought with him. It was characteristic of the man, and of the perfect sense he had of his own po-sition, that, albeit his bars head was scorching in the glare, he had never thought of unfurling the sunshade for his own use.

It came into the month's wages to endure personal inconvenience of some sort. A little personal meconvenience of some sort. A note reasting, a little freezing, a little wetting—what mattered? There was that village up in the Alpa, and there were the two boys waiting to be educated to a point that would make them independent of such disagreeable exertions and sacrifices.

Paul put up the yellow umbrella, and held it over Verenica's head; he seemed so absolutely cortain that she would get up off the ground and come with him into the house that she rose as though some spell were moving her limbs. Sud-denly the willful, spoiled-child mood came upon her, and she threw herself down again beneath her, and she threw herself down again beneath the tree, saying, "Go and get me some cush-ious and a shawl. I shall stay here. I am enjoying the view."

"In the evening, signora—miladi—it is very fine here. Now, the sun will burn your skin, and spoil your eyes. It is not like in England, miladi; at this hour in the summer, even up on a height like this, it is not good to be out in the sunshine. It makes the women look old soon. our contadine!"

With this masterly stroke Paul gravely bent down, hat in hand, and held his arm out for Veronica to lean on when she should rise—and

Paul walked a pace behind her holding the umbrella, and they proceeded toward the house.

Instead of passing beneath the pergola they turned on reaching the old fountain—where their footsteps disturbed the snake, that slid away at their approach into the dry grass-the left, and entered a path leading through shrubbery. Here the walks were nest, the grass clipped, and the flowers duly tended. The grounds had not the fresh perfection of an En-glish garden. There was a want of finish about all the details—the finish that comes from doing thoroughly whatever is done—but nature had filled the place with light, and color, and per-fume, and it was very lovely. At a turn in the path the house came in view. Villa Chiari was an old and vass building, solid, heavy, and with few windows in proportion to the great extent of wall-space. This circumstance, which would make a house gloomy in a northern climate, is suggestive only of grateful shade and coolness to a dweller beneath Italian skies. Wealth had been unsparingly employed within the villa to make it a comfortable and luxurious residence, in accordance with modern English ideas of what is comfortable and luxurious; but without, Villa Chiari remained much as it had been any time these three hundred years. It was covered with yellowish plaster. Situated as the cred with yellowish plaster. Situated as the house was, on a height, and fronting to the north, it had become much stained by wind and weather. The plaster was discolored, cracked, and, in some places, had pesied off altogether, revealing a rough solid wall constructed of min-gled brick and stone, after the Tuscan fushion. To each window were double wooden shutters To each window were double wooden shutters or jalousies, painted green. These were open on the side of the house that was in shadow, and were carefully closed whenever the sun's rays beat against them like a flight of burning arrows. All the windows on the besement story were protected against more earthly assailants by massive wrought-irou bars.

Digitized by Google

Immediately beneath each of the lower windows was a trong bench the and gray color of Immediately beneath each of the lower windows was a stone bench, the sad, gray color of which was diversified by bright lichens. A large archway, closed by double doors, in the centre of the façade, gave access to a paved court-yard open to the sky. Around the court-yard ran an open arcade—called here a loggia—and from it opened various doors leading to the interior of the dwelling. The roof was covered with ancient tiles, mellowed into a rich sembre become sellowed into a rich sombre brow cient tiles, mellowed into a rich sombre brown by time and sunshine. And from it, at one end of the building, rose a square tower, also tiled, and with overhanging pent-house caves. There was something melancholy and forlorn in the exterior aspect of the boose. The crum-bing plaster, the shut jalouises, the moss-grown uneven pavement before the door, the brooding stillness that hung over the whole place—a still-ness that seemed of death rather than sleep— were all decremains.

vere all depressing.

Paul held open a low door beneath the loggis

Paul held open a low door beneaus me sogga-for Verenica to pass.

She entered a shady corridor, whose marble pavement seemed icy cold to one coming from without. A moutent ago she had longed for shade and coolness. Now the air of the house struck chill, and she shuddered, drawing the clock around her.

At the end of the corridor was a large saloon.

The floor was still covered with a rich an thick carpet, contrary to Italian usage, which re-quires that all carpets be removed from the ma-ble or painted brick floors in summer. There were luxurious chairs, and sofas, and ottomans; were luxurious chairs, and sofse, and ottomans; cabinets of rare workmanship and costly materials; silken hangings and gold-framed mirrors in the saloon. It had a lofty, vaulted ceiling, adorned with colorsal stucco garlands, white on a blue ground. The air was faint with the rich perfume of flowers disposed in massive groups about the room; and only a dim sen-green twilight filtered in through the closed jalousies. Sir John Gale was lying on a couch when Veronica entered. He rose when she appeared, took her hand, and led her to a chair. He was more high-shouldered than ever, and lean; and in the greenish light his face looked ghastly. Paul had followed Veronica to his master's presence, and had waited an instant; but at a wave ence, and had waited an instant; but at a wave of Sir John's hand he had withdrawn, closing the door noiselessly after him. Veronica tossed her broad-brimmed hat on to an ottoman near her, and threw herself back in her chair with an air of consummate languor. Sir John's eyes were accustomed to the dim-ness. He could see her better than she could see him, and he watched her with a half-admiring, half-savage glance.

"You have been out," he said, after a silence

She slightly bent her head.

"I thought that you had been taking a siesta in your own apartments." She made a negative sign without speaking.

"Am I not deemed worthy of the honor of a word?" asked Sir John; and though his mouth smiled as he said it, his eyebrows frowned. smiled as he said it, his opened Veronica.
"Too hot to talk!" murmared Veronica.

"If you had remained indoors, as I have so frequently advised, at this hour, you would not now have been overcome by the heat, which is, of course, my first consideration; and I should have enjoyed the pleasure of your conversation."

Veronics shrugged her shoulders, and smiled distainfully.

Contract to the second

Veronics annuages diadainfully.
"Well, perhaps you are right," said Sir John, answering the smile with a enser Mephistopheles might have owned. "Perhaps you would not made yourself agreeable if you and staid in. But at all events you would have done more wisely for yourself. You positively run the risk of getting a cosp-de-social by running out in this

Veronica sighod a little impatient sigh, and pulling down a rich plait of her hair, drew its glossy length languidly across and across her lips. "Magnificent!" said Sir John, softly, after "Magnificent!" said Sir John, softly, after contemplating her for some time. She looked up inquiringly.

"Magnificent hair! Quantity, quality, and hue, all superb! I never knew but one other woman with such an abundance of hair as you have. And hers was blonde, which I don't ad-mirs."

mire."

The expression of his admiration had not lost its power to charm her. Indeed, it may be said that to hear her beauty praised by any lipe, however false and coarse, was now the one delight of her life. That the flattery was poisoned she knew, as the drunkard knows what have he awallows in each fiery draught. But she turned from it no more than he refrains from the fatal wine-cup. Her face brightened, and she coquettiably released all the coils of her hair with a sudden turn of her hand. It fell in plaits, or loose rip-pling tresses, all around her. Sir John looked on complacently with a sense of ownership. "Will you drive this evening?" asked Veronics. "Drive? I don't know. Where? There are no drives. "I want to go to Florence."

"To Florence!"

"You know you said I should do so some day. I have never seen it. When we passed through from the railway station it was dark. It is so dull here. Besides, "she added, as if angry with herself for having assumed a pleading tone, "I

"There can be no necessity, Veronica. The ervants will procure you any thing you want."
"But I wish to see the city! Why should

"What is the use of making me recapitulate my reasons? I am known there. You would be exposed to—to—disagreeable rencontres; in short, it is better not to go into Florence at

He spoke in an imperious tone of masterhood, and then sank back on his couch as though the discussion were closed. Versaica sat quite still for a minute or so. The minute seemed very long to her. She was trying to school herself to be politic, and to answer calmly. But self-control is not to be acquired in an instant.

Her own impulse of the moment, her own likes and dislikes, exprices and whims, had been para-mount with Veronica all her life. Now, after telling berself sternly that it would not do to be telling herself sternly that it would not do to be hasty, and that every thing depended on her power of self-command, she broke out on a sud-den with childish vehemence; declaring that she was moped to death; that she was dull, wretched, bored, all day long; that if there were any rea-son for Sir John's shrinking from being seen in Florence it rested with himself to remove that that she was sick and weary of the delays and disappointments; finally, that she second go to the city that evening. At first Sir John listened to her petulant,

At live cir John instead to her petsiant, broken speech with the detectable enjoyment of a cruel school-boy, who watches his newly-caged bird fluttering in terror and impotent anger against the wires. But some word she said touched on a theme which threatened to give him trouble

That prospect was not amusing. Besides, Veronica looked very handsome so long as she was merely passionate and angry. But after the first outburst symptoms of rising team became apparent, and that prospect also was not amasing.

"Good Heavens, Veronica!" exclaimed Sir John, "how can you be such a baby? Go, go, if you like. If you care about it so much, order the carriage at any hour you please. Only let me suggest that it be not before the sun has begun to lose some of his power. It will be hot enough in any case in those narrow stuffy streets. Out!"

And you?" said Veronics, standing looking at him is at him irresolutely.

"Oh, I shall not go. You can take your maid, and Paul will attend you."

"I don't want Paul," muttered Veronica, but in so low and indistinct a tone that Sir John might plausibly affect not to hear it if he chose. And he did choose.

"Of course Paul will attend you," he repeated, quietly. "You will find Paul indispensable. That lost of a Tuscan coachman would get you into some acrane. to a certainty."

That lost of a Tuscan coachman would get you into some scrape, to a certainty."

All Sir John Gale's servants, with the exception of Paul and the cook, were Tuscans: not town-bred Florentines, but country people. Their service was clumsily rendered, but Sir John had known what he was about when he charged Paul to see that no servant accustomed to write on furnishers, and to file from house to to wait on foreigners, and to flit from house to house gossip-laden, was engaged among his do-

When the carriage was announced there stood Paul, bare-headed, to hand "miladi" in. Her maid placed herself on the back seat, and Paul maid placed herself on the back seat, and Paul climbed up to the box beside the coachman.

"Where to, miladl?" asked Paul, leaning down, hat in hand,

"To Florence. Any where. I don't know. Stay; I want to buy a—a fan. Drive first to a place where they sell fans."

The carriage had not gone a quarter of a mile down the steep incline that led from Villa Chiari—it was down hill thence in every direction—when she called to Paul, and bade him make the coachman stop.

coschmen stop.
"I think," said she, with a not quite successful assumption of being an independent agent— "I think I will take a drive in the park—the Cascine they call it, don't they? Go there first."

Paul bent down lower into the carriage, and said, in English, "At the hour when we should arrive there, miladi, the Cascine would be terribly unwholesome. Sunset is a bad time, or even bly unwholesome. Sunset is a bad time, or even the hour before sunset. There is a mist. It is damp. You get colds—oh, very dangerous colds. Does miladi care which fan-shop she goes to?"

Veronica drew from her pocket a delicate gold watch incrusted with jewels, and looked at it with a meditative air while Paul was speaking. "It is later than I thought," she said, slowly. "Tell the coachman to drive straight into town. I must buy my fan by daylight. Never mind the Cascine. Go on."

She looked very imperial and grand, leaning

I must buy my fan by daylight. Never mind the Cascine. Go on.

She looked very imperial and grand, leaning back in the handsome carriage, and folded in a soft cloud of black lace. Peasant women passed and stared at her. Peasant children shouted. Working-men, returning from their daily labor, shaded their eyes to look at her dashing by.

Paul ass, square shouldered and steady, beside the coachman. And the pleasure of her weak, selfish vanity, and the petty delight of being admired and envied by poor ignorant passers was dashed with a bitter drop—the consciousness that that man was invested with power to control her movements, and that, brave it out as might, she was a slave, and Paul her keeper.

SQUIRRELS.

Squinners, black, gray, red, striped, spotted, and brindled, are immensely numerous in the United States. They are tree-planters every where. They bury nuts universally, and thus contribute to the spread both of fruit and nut-bearing trees A little mischierously inclined when partially do mesticated, but in a state of freedom the squirrel performs a valuable service on four continents. A few years ago a colony of them animated Bosto common, to the great pleasure of visitors to that enchanting ground; but they were perse-cuted by the ignorant, misrepresented by those who knew nothing of their habits, till they have finally disappeared. Alsa, for the civilination and science of a city that persecuted those cheer-ful, playful little animals, whose gambols were delightful exhibitions for youth and old age!

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Lavrens, papers, and packages are soon to be borne on the wings of the wind from one end of our city to on the wings of the wind from one end of our city to the other. A couple of years ago some experiments were tried at the American Institute Fair, which proved that not only leiters and parcels, but passengers also, could be safely propelled through a tube by a powerful current of air. The Presumatic Dispatch Company does not propose to carry passengers just at present, but already the work of timneling Broadway for the purpose of laying dispatch to be for letters and parcels has been commenced. The general plan is to carry a tube about three feet in disancter from the Post-office up Broadway to Forty-second or Fifty-sinth street, having various ramifications leading to important business points. And as soon as possible it is proposed to extend the lines to the nearest important cities. The successful operation of such a project as this will be of immence advantage to business men. At least a year's boring will be required to lay the tubes as far as Fourteenth Street. A possumatic dispatch tube is a novelty for New York; but in London one has been in successful operation for some time. operation for some time.

The salesmen in the large drapers' shops of Parts are insufficiently paid, and work fifteen hours a day. They desired to reduce the hours, not by closing the shops, which would be nearly impossible, but by the establishment of relays. This being refused, and also a demand for a free Sunday, eight thousand sesistants. a demand for a free Standay, eight thousand assistants streek, and are now endeavoring to organise co-operative "Magnaina." An English review, commenting on this fact, remarks: "It is curious to watch the rapid spread of the dislike for very hard labor. Has it really become harder of late years, or is education creating a thirst for leisure, or is it a result of the extinction of small shope? Formerly a shopman expected after, say, ten years' work, to become a shop-keeper; now he remains a shopman for life, and must therefore strive for shorter hours."

Near Bergen, Germany, there is a rare novelty—a papier-maché church, capable of accommedating about one thousand persons. It is circular within, and co-tagonal without. Every part is made of papier-ma-ché, residered water-proof by a saturation in vitriol, lime-water, and some albuminous substance.

There may be exceptions, but, as a rule, a gentle man should be sufficiently acquainted with the lady be desires to marry to know her full name before he applies for a marriage license! A would-be bridegroom in Iowa could only remember the christened groom in lows could only remember the christened name of his lady-love when he asked for a license, and a friend was appealed to be the proper surname. But during the ceremony, when called by the name which the friend had gives, the lady interrupted by eaying that that was not her name. The ceremony was stopped, the parents of the bride were sent for, and they having resided to the actual man, of the and they having testified to the actual name of the lady, the marriage was concluded.

Borks availed himself of a simple but singular rem-edy for every indisposition. Whenever he felt ill he would order a kettle of water to be kept boiling, of which he drank large quantities as hot as he could bear. He alpped it with a spoon, as if it had been soup. Het water, he used to say, was the finest stim-ulant and most powerful restorative in the world.

The centennial anniversary of Beethoven's birthday The centennial anniversary of Beethoven's birthday is a matter of much interest among many of our citizens. Preliminary meetings have already been held for the purpose of maturing plans. It has been suggested that the exection of a commodious and elegant music hall in this city would be an appropriate tribute of respect to the memory of one whose name is identified with the history and art of music. A further suggestion is, that the Central Park would be a most action along the memory are not believed. enggestion is, that the Central Par fitting place for such a music hall.

One hundred and twenty-five workmen are now em-ployed on the new mint at San Francisco. The outer foundation walls are of solid granite, and five feet wide; the inner walls are of brick, and vary in width from three to five fe These walls will vary in heigh from two and a half feet to five feet, according to the

An English gentleman, Mr. Powell, who was making some explorations in Abyesinia for pleasure, was mur-dered, with his wife and children, by a Shangalia tribe. No radrass being expected from the govern-ment, two brothers of the murdered man landed in Abyesinia with rifee and followers, obtained aid from Prince Kassel, attacked the trib, killed eight mes. ce Kassai, attacked the tribe, killed eight men, and destroyed all their bouses.

"A good percentage of inventions," remarks an Ho-glish journal, "are of American origin. In that coun-try of geniuses every body invents." It is estimated that not far from fourteen thousand patents will be granted by the United States office this year. To be eure, some marvelous things are proposed. One man claimed protection for the application of the Lord's Prayer, repeated in a loud voice, to cure stammering. Another archited for the envisor parchasent on behalf Prayer, repeated in a loud voice, to cure stammering. Another applied for the envied parchment on behalf of a new and useful attachment of a weight to a cow's tail, to prevent her switching it during the milking operation. A lady patented a hair-orimping pin, which she specified might also be used as a paper-cutter, as a skirt-supporter, a child's pin, a houped-holder, a shawl-dastener, or as a book-mark. A "horse-refresher" is a beliew bit perferated with holes, and connected by a flexible tabe with a water reservoir in the vehicle, so that the driver can give his soincal a drink without stopping. The "anorers' friend" is a incurious contrivance to be attached to church pew-backs, so that one may sleep through a dell sermon in peace and comfort.

John G. Saxe uttered his latest witziciem at a Westers botel the other day. He undertook to carve a piece of beef which was so tough that the carving-knile made little impression upon it. The post laid down knile and fork, glanced around, and spoke. "Gentlemen," said be, "that's an infringement on Gentlemen," and be, "that's an infringement on Goodyear's patent?"

The London Electrated Pieces gives travelers a hint in regard to water-proofs. Good Scottish tweed can be made entirely impervious to rain, so it says, by soaking it in a solution made with a couple of gailons of soft water, half a pound of sugar of lead, and half a pound of powdered alum. Stir this mixt-ure at intervals until it becomes clear, then pour it off into another vessel, and put the garment into it for twenty-four hours. Hang it up to dry without Venice is beift upon several low islands of sand which lie in the sea, and might be a few inches above the water at low tide, but they form no resting-piece for a city, except to hold the spiles, which are driven down closely together, and upon which foundation Venice now and must ever rest. All the city is trav-Venice now and must ever rest. All the city is traversed by canals, through which the tide ebbs and flows, and these canals are the streets of Venice; the houses are built flush to the water's edge, with etairs descending from the entrance down into the water. There is no occasion for horses and carriages in this city of the sea, but gondoins are all-important, and every private family that can afford it keeps one moored in front of the house. The gondois is a boat peculiar to Venica. It is very long and narrow, with both ends pointed sharp. It is always painted black, and has a low cabin, with cushioned seals, which can be removed in fair weather, and an awaing substituted.

It was formerly supposed that night-air was very injurious. Now many regard that belief as a mere projudice, excepting in certain special circumstances or conditions of the atmosphere. In large cities, when the commotion which causes the air to be loaded with particles of dust and smoke is comparatively quelted, the night-air is in many respects purer than that of the day. Hence there is no occasion to exclude it by Manufacturing imitations of gold is quite an extensive business in some parts of our country, and sometimes attempts are made to sell these alloys for the genuine article. But not unfrequently it is front easier to cleast in a different way. A few months ago a willy traveler imposed on a New York shop-keeper after this fishion: He confided to him the fact that he had discovered how to manufacture gold from base metals, and that with a capital of about five hundred dollars they could both make an immense fortane. Accordingly a day was fixed for the experiment. The man was on hand at the proper time with a cracible and a number of singular-looking tools, and having closeted himself for nearly two hours in the midst of smoke, he at length called the merchant to him, and revealed a small har of gold, which he declared had resulted from his labors. The latter took the gold to a jeweler, and had it tested. He was informed that it was the real article, and, having returned to his friend in reptures at the prospect of acquiring a fortune, was easily induced to advance five hundred dollars as capital on which to proceed with the work. The swindler, having pocketed his greenbacks, repaired to another field of enterprise. The gold he had given to be tested was pure, but the manufacturing was all a cham. Manufacturing imitations of gold is quite an what becomes of the numerous journals, native and foceign, which are every day confiscated by the French politics? One might suppose they would be made to pay the penalty of their various offenses by being employed to kindle the free in all the imperial palaces, harracks, and police-offices of the empire. But no. When the store-room is full the papers are transferred to the Receiveur du Domaine, and carted away under his surveillance to a closed spot beyond the barrières, where they are thrown pell-mell into caldrons of hot water and prosaically boiled down to pulp. This operation is called is rote on piles, and is performed in the presence of a squad of gene d'armes, who are careful to see that not a single one of the doesned journals escapes. The pulp is then sold to paper manufacturers. At the last boiling 165,000 of Hanri Rochefort's Lonisrasa, red covers and all, were stewed in company with about half a million copies of the Indipendence Beige, the Ganetic de Fransfort, the Gazette de Kocces, and the Kindderndistoknion papers which, from so often finding themselves in bot water ingether, must by this time have got used to each other's society.

Among the curious stories told of Paristan beggars

Among the curious stories told of Parisian beggars Among the curious stories told of Parisian beggars is one concerning a blind man—really blind—who is always to be found near a cartain galeway on the Boulevard Sebastopol. A parser-by who was in the habit of giving him a couple of scor one day deopped a double Louis is the follow's hat by mistake. On discovering his mistake, some time after, he returned to reclaim his gold. The billed man was gone, but a cripple in the gateway directed him to the Rue all Potii Carresn, where he said "Moneleur Benjamin" lived. The inquirer went to the address indicated. A viscoled-reased ascrupt tame to gone it. "Moneleur Reclaims and the story of the country in the second servent came to gone it. "Moneleur nicely-dressed servant came to open it. "Monstear Benjamin in ?" "Yes, Sir." Our friend is shown into an elegant ante-room, through which one could see into a dining-room, where there was a table ad-mirably appointed with fine white lines, crystal, and silver. The maid came to say that Monstear Benja-min would be glad to see his victor, and at the same interest and counted the floor of an experiment from min would be glad to see his visitor, and at the same instant she opened the door of an apariment family, and in the Turkish faction, in which the blind man was seen seated on a diran. "You which the blind man me," he said. "Yes, indeed, file," replied our friend, rather embarrassed. "I am very seery to trouble you, but the fact is—I believe—I rather think—that in passing along the Boulevard Schestopol this morning I gave you by mistaks two Louis for two cone." The blind man said, with the utmost coolness, "That is quite possible—I haven't looked at the cash yet; and if there is a mistake, nothing is easier than to receipt; it." He rung a bell, which was answered by the maid. "Ask M. Bruest," he said, "if in the receipts of this morning he has found a piece of forty france." The piece was there; the maid fetched it, and at the bidding of her reaster presented it on a tray of Chimaid fetched it; and at the esented it on a tray of Chihe visitor pounced upon his do proceeded to take leave, led man, "you furget someto return me."

Digitized by Google The place was there; the main recess in; and in the bidding of her master presented it on a tray of Chi-ness lac to his visitor. The visitor pounced upon his celn, and without more ado proceeded to take leave. "Pardon, Sir," said the billed man, "you forget something—there are two sous to return me."

A MODERN TOURNAMENT. - Duaws st W. S. L. JEWETT. - [SEE PAGS 775.]

A CONTRACTOR OF D

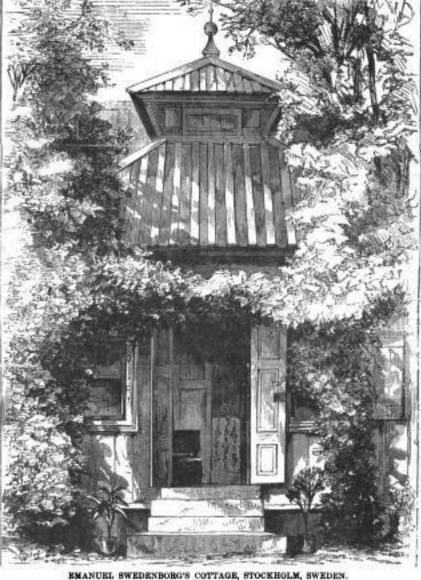

EMANUEL SWEDENBORG.

EMANUEL SWEDENBORG.

EMANUEL SWEDENBORG.

Frw men ever exercised so large an influence over the religious opinions of the race as Emanuel. Swedenborg. He was born in Stockholm, Sweden, Jainnary 29, 1688, and died in London, March 29, 1772, in his eighty-fifth year. His father, Jespen Swedenborg, was the Bishop of Skara, in West Gottland, and had charge of the Swedish Church in England and its American Colonies. Emanuel belonged to the nobility, and received the most liberal education. He received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy at the University of Upsal, in 1709, and afterward traveled in foreign countries. Though a poet by nature, he devoted a large portion of his leisure time to the study of mathematics and mechanics. It was through his preficiency in these sciences that he came to be introduced to the special notice of Charless XII., by whom, in 1716, he was appointed assessor of the royal mines. He availed himself of his mechanical skill in the siege of Frederickshald, where he, by means of machines of his own invention, contrived to trans-port several large vessels, over hills and valleys, a distance of about fourteen miles. About this time he published several small works, among time be published several small works, among which was a treatise on the earth and the planets. In 1721 he published in Latin, at Amsterdam, six small philosophical treatises, one of which was entitled "A Fractical Method of finding the Longitude of Places on Land and at Sea by Lunar Observationa." In 1722 he published scene scientific works, principally relating to minerals. In 1733 he published, at Dresden and Leipsic, his "Principia, or the First Principles of Natural Things, being New Attempts toward a Philosophical Explanation of the Elementary World." In 1740, at Amsterdam, he published "The Philosophy of the Animal Kingdom;" and in 1744-45 "The Animal Kingdom," and "The Worship and Love of God."

These various works established Sweden-These various works established Swedennouse's reputation as a profound thinker. In 1724 he was invited to accept the professorship of Pure Mathematics in the University of Upsal, but declined the office. His portrait hangs in the hall of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Stockholm, of which he was once President, near that of Languages, one of the first founders of the institution. It is asserted that a number of important discoveries which have made other names illustrious were anticipated in Swedensons's works.

works.
In early life Swinnishons was the subject of deep religious impressions, and his writings are all characterized by a devotional spirit. He oft-en read and meditated on the Word of God. Every thing, however trivial, he submitted to the will of Divine Providence. In his fifty-seventh year, when, as he assures us, he "was relied to a new and holy office by the Lord himself, who manifested himself to him in person, and opened his sight to a view of the spiritual world, and granted him the privilege of conversing with spirits and angels," he resigned his office as assersor, one-half of his salary being continued to him in his retirement. After four years of preparation, during which Swedennoso sincerely believed that he was acting under the Divine gaidance, he published his "Heavenly Arcana." Like his former works, this was in Latin. The entire work, in eight volumes, was published in London, 1749-56. This, the largest of Sweden.

"THE FIERY CROSS."-FROM A PAINTING BY J. LAMONT BRODIE.-[SEE PAGE 782.]

nong's theological works, is characterized by a remarkable method and consistency. Among the most prominent of his works of this churthe most prominent of his works of this character afterward published may be mentioned "Heaven and Hell," "The New Jerusslem," "Divine Love and Wisdom," "The Apocalyse Revealed," and "Conjugal Love." Besides these he left a large number of manuscripts, many of which have been edited and published by Dr. J. F. I. Tayas, professor and librarian in the University of Tübingen. On Christmas-eve, 1771, he was struck with apoplexy, from which he partially recovered, and remained in the full possession of his mental faculties till the time of his death.

During his life Swanganone had few followers, but the number of those who now believe in his system and in the importance of his mission is by no means inconsiderable. The symbolism of his theology is its most fascinating feature. There is nothing in Swapanaoso's system that is not elevating in its tendency.

LAST WORDS.

Let the sweet air receive my dying moan, Now that the setting sun inspires its breath; And though the white moon find thee, love, alone, member where my spirit wandereth . Yield me to Death

Look not upon the shadow at thy feet, The blighted, feetied witness of my wor Turn from it, and forget the struggling best Of the worn heart that thou hast loved so.

Do not recall the drooping of mine eye,
When my last glance has fainted on thy brow;
Do not recall the quiver of the sigh,
Which from my parting agony must grow.
O kies me now!

Only I bid thee hold my quiet hand Till all is ever; fix. am afraid
To be quite lonely on that border land
Whence earth is mist, and the Beyond a shade.
O let me fade!

I know thee near, but can not feel thy touch Thick gloom defeats my sight, nor hear I thee. Parewell! Remember that I loved much; Pray for one gleam of light to set me free-O free! O free!

"THE FIERY CROSS."

We have soldom seen a picture more appro-priate in conception than "The Fiery Cross," by Mr. J. Lamour Banden, the President of the Manchester Academy of Fine Arts. The subject will at once suggest itself as Vicit Az-risu's summons to his clain, described in Scorr's "Lady of the Lake." The passage more par-ticularly illustrated occurs in the third canto, where Roderick, having consigned the terrible symbol of war and danger to his swift henchman, MALISE-

"Like heathbird the hawks purses,
A barge across Lock Katrine flew;
High stood the hersthann on the prow,
So rapidly the hargemen row,
The bubbles, where they launched the boat,
Were all unbroken and affect,
Dancing in foam and ripple, still,
When it had near'd the main land hill."

The Celtic character and energy are capitally rendered in every figure. The landscape, too, rendered in every again. The landscape, one, indicating a coming storm, lends itself to the poetry of the incident. But the best commentary on the subject of the picture we can offer will be the note by Scorr himself on "The Fiery Cross." "When," says the poet, "a chieftain designed to summon his class upon any sudden or important emergency, he siew a goat, and, making a cross of any light wood, seared its extremities in the fire, and extinguished them in the blood of the animal. This was called the Fiery Cross: also Creun Terigh, or the Cross of Stame, because disobedience to what the ermbol implied inferred infamy. It was deliv-ered to a swift and trusty messenger, who run full speed with it to the next hamlet, where he presented it to the principal person with a single word, implying the place of rendezvous. He who received the symbol was bound to send it forward with equal dispatch to the next vil-lage; and thus it passed with incredible colority through all the district which owed allegiance to the chief, and also among his allies and neighbors if the danger was common to them. At sight of the Fiery Cross, every man, from six-teen years old to sixty, capable of bearing arms, was obliged instantly to repair in his best arms and accontrements to the place of rendezvous He who failed to appear suffered the extremize of fire and sword, which were emblematically denounced to the disobedient by the bloody and burned marks upon this warbke signal." As a remarkable instance of the rapidity with which this system of telegraphy—once common to the Scardinavian as well as the Celtic nations—was Scardinavian as well as the Cente handle—was carried out, Scorr adds that during the civil war of 1745-46, when the Fiery Cross often made its circuit, it upon one occasion passed through the whole district of Breadalbane, a tract of thirty-two miles, in three hours.

Charren Haves and Pace, Seen Lees, &c., cored at once by the use of Hayeston's Charpher for with (Sportine, It knows the hands soft in the coldest weather. See that you get the gernine. Sold by Druggiats. Prior to cents per box. Sent by mall ou receipt of 60 cents.—Hedranas & Co., New York.

The Consert Course's Pressuration. — Mr. Naturation. Wealth, failed of N. P. William, started a Youth's paper in flaviors in 1977, called the FoodWa Companion. It has been pt Missled weekly from that year taskif the present time in pearst, and is to-day our of the final vigorous and anterprising sheets in the redshift.— [Con.]

TARR AVER'S SARSAVARILLA to purify the blood and purge out the humors, pimples, bells, and sores which are merely emblems of the rotteuness within.—(Cost.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

$10, $12, $15, $20, $25.

Watches and Imitation Brazilian and Australian Diamond Jewelry. New Styles Ocolde Gold Chains, 85 to $99 each. Call or send for Price-List.

JOHN POGGAN, No. 79 Nassau St., N. V.

ALL DOUBT VANISHES

Fre WOLCOTTS PAIN PAINT is tested free at 181 Clastham Square, N. Y. A pint sent, free of Experse charges, on receipt of $5; or a gallon for $50, double strength.

FURNITURE.

WARREN WARD & CO., Nos. 75 and 77 Spring St., corner Croeby, HETABLISHED 1980.

Wholesale and retail manufacturers of the latest styles of REDECOM, PARLOR, PINING, and LI-BRARY FURNITURE, MATTRENSES, SPRING-BEIR, &c., &c., suitable for city and country rest-

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.

This is sciencesisdeed to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the United States. For Sale by all describes Hardware Besieus. Mode by the LIVENSSTON MANUPACTURING CO., SEESEMAN ST., N. Y.

S. W. GEERY,

DEPORTER,
Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Teas, Wines, Cipasa, and CHOSCE FAMILY GROCERIES,
Formacty I. & W. Geery, No. 719 Broadway,
Established in 1804. New York.
The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has been the special basiness of the bouse for years.
My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquors in
the country.

the country,
Constantly on hand, a full assertment of every thing appertaining to the Geocery Trade. Catalogues sent by used. Orders will be called for (in the city) every morning, if desired. y main.

Oroning, if desired.

Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

A GENTS WANTED for our new work sells to all classes, without regard to politics, religion, or occupation. Now Ready:

Our Home Physician.

A new Handy-Scok of Family Medicine. By Gausses M. Brann, A.M., M.D., of the University of the City of New York. This is new work, written up to date. Quarkery, Borehoggery, and Old-Fogy Dogmas erposed. Send for 16-page circular.

R. TERAT & Co., Publishers, 656 Stradbway, N.Y.; TERAT & LILLEY, 117 So. Clark St., Chicago, Hi.

THE LEADING CHURCH MUSIC BOOK OF THE SEASON!

The Choral Tribute. By L. O. EMERSON.

The best Secred Music Book ever written by the author. Entirely new. Choirs and Congregations are delighted with it. Price $1.50; $13.50 per doorn. Sample copies sent postpaid on receipt of price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston:

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO, New York.

SOMETHING NEW!

Two Million Copies of the Annual SHAKESPE-RIAN ALMANAC for 1810 will be given away, and in order that the distribution may be made as rapidly as possible, I should deem it a favor to send, prepaid, ten or fifteen copies to any person who will judiciously distribute them in his locality. One of its features are the "Seven Ages of Man's Life," Innertated in a met-terly manner. Address Dr. O. PHELFS BROWN, No. 11 Grand Street, Jersey City, New Jersey.

AGENTS WANTED for Willson's School and Pamily Charts. To carrens every state in the Union. Men of ability, and self recommended, can realize hundrouse profits. For particulars and terms, address

HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square, N. T. SEND ONE DOLLAR, and get by reinra in racil the prottlest Present you can give a Lady this Christman-Loring's Son of Prevent Note Paper, with her Initial. Address LORING, Publisher, Socion.

PENEW 11 RENEW 111-Either Harrie's Weiner, Mowhen, or Baran, $4, and The Pres-secondar Jornac, $3, cent to one address for $5, by 8. R. WELLS, $20 Broadway, New York.

©7 SEWING MACHINE.—Elegant and sim-D7 pic. Will rev the heaviest Bewer Uoth, Leath-er, or Lines. Address State Service Manners Co. 111 Broadway, NewYork. Liberal discount to agents.

THE GREATEST ROMANCE OF THE AGE!

WILL BE READY, NEXT WERE,

in the columns of

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY,

a New and

DEEPLY-EXCITING ROMANCE, from the pen of the famous

E.Z.C.JUDSON,

the greatest of living romance writers, and well known as a temperance lecturer of great shillty, and who will be readily recognized under his world-renowned non-

NED BUNDLINE.

under which name he has written over one hundred

NED BUNTLINE

has been engaged to write exclusively for

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY.

In engaging this writer, we are aware of possessing the only man in America whose life, from boyhood to the present date, has been literally an almost constant scene of living adventure. His travel has been literally world-wide; his stories, therefore, are descriptively nearer life, perhaps, than those of any other

The first one of LAND ADVENTURE, to be commenced next week in our columns, will be

BUFFALO BILL,

THE KING OF BORDER-MEN.

The author has written this con genere, for the hero is one of his warmest, chosen friends, by whose side he has ridden many a mile in chase of buffalo and antelope on our great Western plains, as also in the more exciting and startling work of reducing the red warriors of the West to the laws of the pale face,

"BUFFALO BILL"

is known, especially among our army officers, as the MOST DARING SCOUT,

THE BEST HORSEMAN.

THE BEST-INFORMED GUIDS. AND THE GREATEST HUNTER

of the present day. From his childhood on, even now engaged as chief of scoots with a daring band under his leadership, his life has been a wild, thrilling ro-

A part of this, including pictures of other noted, and some most lovely characters, has been woven into a common that can not fall to thrill, to please, and to deeply interest every reader. In parts it is HUMOR-OUS, in others PATRETIC; but as a whole it is life as life IS, and not as it is functed by those who have honted in cities and freight their battles in drawing-

For the last two years

NED BUNTLINE

has been preparing, by travel, for a new series of works calculated to excet any of his previous efforts to please the people, and we are proud in having suc. ceeded, against all competition, in securing his pen excinsively for has been expressly photographed for the story; and when the author, who was intimate with Kit Carson, Beo McCullough, and many other notable hunters and ecous, tells us that Mr. Cody, the real name of his hero, is the handsomest man he ever saw on the Pisins, we may fancy an Apolio in the saddle.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY.

Buffalo Bill's Picture

His female pictures in the story are also sketched from life, and are so pure and beautiful that one would simost think them fancy-drawn.

We will say no more, but let our readers feel assured that we are happy in making an announce which will add to their pleasure and our profit.

EF SPECIMEN COPIES SENT FREE

THE TERMS TO SUBSCRIBERS

Those sending $30 for a club of eight, all sent at one time, will be entitled to a copy FREE. Gettersup of cinbs can afterward add single copies at $8.50

All letters must be directed to

STREET & SMITH,

Office, 55 Pulton St. Box 4396, N.Y.

"A valuable paper for our farming population." This is the vertict of the Communationalist, and we feel confident that the subscribers of the

NEW ENGLAND FARMER will fully endorse this conclusion.

Trans: $250 a year for the Weekly, or $150 for the fontbly. Bend stamp for specimens and premium

R. P. EATON & CO., Boston Mass.

MRS. WHITNEY'S New Novel, "Either-from LORING, "costs 53 00 by mail, from LORING, Fublisher, Seaton.

PUBLISH ARE ALMOST IDEALLY WELL EDITED. - The Notion, N. Y.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Harper's Weekly.

Harran's Weekly.

Harran's Weekly.

Harran's Weekly.

Harran's Weekly is an illustrated record of, and a commentary upon all the important events of the time. Due sciention is also given to topice of especial and local interest. The best artists in the country are constantly engaged in the department of illustration, and the publishers are also largely indebted to photographers in all the large cities of America, Europe, and the Rauf for prempt and whisable contributions. As a Literary Journal, Harran's Weekly is excluded in establishing and maintaining a ciaim to pre-embrence.

The Reliantal matter of Harran's Weekly articles upon National Politics, Pinance, Commence, and Miscellaneous topics.

In No. 421, for November 21, was commenced the new story "MAN AND WIFE," by Wigger Couling, the Author of "The Winger Couling, the Author of The Winger Couling, the Author of the Sections will be firmland with the Westly from the commencement of this story to the close of 1810 for 54 66.

Published Weekly, with profuse Illustrations.

The young lady who buys a single number of Han-FER's HARAR in made a subscriber for life. - N. Y. Huening Post.

Harper's Bazar.

Harrar's Baras has gained a success the most repti and wonderful ever known to the sunals of journallem, and is recognized as the best and most airractive family paper ever issued. As an illustrated chromoler of Fanishon it is without a rival in this country. By a special arrangement, involving great expense, with the publishers of the Berlin Ranz—the leading journal of fashion is Burope—to fashion-philes are published in New York simultaneously with their appearance in Berlin and Paris.

A large portion of the Baran is every week devated to instructive and emertaining reading-matter—Stories, Foems, Biographical Skotches, and Gossip. The Editorial articles are airways spicy, and cover every loyic of sectes interest. No effort and no expense with be sparred to permanently secure for this journal the rictory which it has won so rapidly, and which it so well deserve.

ProMithel Reckip, with praftus Illustrations.

Published Feekly, with profuse Illustrations.

The most popular Monthly in the world .- N. Y. Ob-

Harper's Magazine.

Harper

Published Honthly, with profuse Illustrations.

TERMS for HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, and BAZAR.

HARPEN'S MAGAZINE, One Year $4 00

poetage.

The Volumes of the Massauxy commence with the Numbers for Jene and December of each year. SubNumbers When Numbers for Jene and December of such year. Subscriptions have commence with any Namber. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the correct Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wassaw and Banan commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.
Subscribers to the Mananess, Wassaw, or Hanan will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription appires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remaiting by mail, a Four-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of Hannan & Baouness is perferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be best or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

EF New Subscribers to either of Harper's Periodicals furnished from the present time to the close of 1800 for Four Bollars.

TRESS FOR ADVERSIONS IN HARPER'S PERSONICALS. Harper's Manarise.—Whole Page, 2000; Half Page, 2105; Quarter Page, 270—auch insertion; or, for a less spaces, 21 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Wastle.—Inside Pages, 21 50 per Line; Outside Page, 21 50 per Line—each Insertion.

Harper's Basar—21 60 per Line—each Insertion.

21 50 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

A.T. STEWART & CO.

HAVE FOR SALE,

in quantities to suit customers,

ASTRAKHAN, SEALSKIN, BEAVER, and PLUSH

CLOTHS and CLOAKINGS, EXTRA QUALITY.

Also,

ENGLISH AND DOMESTIC REPELLANTS.

IN PLAID AND MIXED COLORS. FOR SUITS:

HABIT CLOTHS, in Desirable Shades;

THE FINEST QUALITY

West of England Broadcloths, in Black and Blue, suitable for Men's wear;

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CASSIMERES. BEDFORD CORDS, &c., &c., At Greatly Reduced Prices.

BROADWAY, 4TH AVE., and 10TH ST.

CATARRH.

RELIEF AT ONCE !- A PERFECT CURE! NORTON'S NEW REMEDY FOR CATARRY AND MODE OF TREATMENT

AND MODE OF TREATMENT Les in improvement, and a perfection never before attained. It consists of the alternated inhalation of harmless liquids—they are painless, cleanaing, decodoring, and powerful curatives. Belief and comfact follow from the first day's use, and a permanent cure in due course of time. It practices through the absorbedts to the very seat of the disease—breaks it up at its fountain least—centower all the wretched symptoms, such as pain in the temples, noises in the head, obstruction of the air passages, offensive discharges from the noetrils, and dropping of mucus line that the threat, "cold in the head," smeeting, distrinces, loss of memory, dismess of vision, and restores the sense of testory, dismess of vision, and restores the sense of testory, dismess of vision, and restores the sense of testory, dismess of vision, and restores the sense of testo and smed, It literally extinguishes this loats-some mailady in all its forms forwer, and cures the most hopeless case known. Send a Stamp for Panphet to GERRIT MOSTUN, office II Am St., R. Y.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Bronne is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been deceived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only railed forth the eulogiums of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well fin-at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time heapers.

Further details will be found in my pamphiet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Exposes, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. HUGUHNIN VUILLEMIN,
No. 44 Names Street, New York.

"ECONOMY IS WEALTH." - FRANKLIN. "ECONOMY IS WEALTH." — FRANKLIN.
Why do people pay $50 to $100 for a Bravine Macoura, when $21 will buy a better one for all practical purposes? The "Frankrin" and "Drasons" Machines can be had in any quantity as usual, regardless the false reports of rival dealers, who compelited customers to pay a profit of over 100 per cent, on inferior machines. Our legion of friends showe that we format a first-class estandard machine of established merit, double thread, complict, with Table, at reasonable prices, and thousands of pairons and one certain all others, for simplicity and gesuine perfection. They are constructed upon entirely new and improved principles, and run without band or gearing. Warranted for 10 years. We desire to do more good by finding new enteners, and take this method to extend asies. All competition defect, and prices lower than others can furnish the unfollehed stock. IF Acares Waarran. Machines send on irial and steen mean to farmish the unfollehed stock. IF Acares Waarran. Machines send on irial and steen mean to farmish the unfollehed stock. IF Acares Waarran dealers of the price list, address J. C. O'T-TIB'S & Oo., Machine Brokers, Box Sri, Boston, Ma.

NETHING A. M. A. C. A. D. D. D. M. S.

NEWMAN & CAPRON'S

Betablishment for the sale of HOUSE FURNISHING and Plated Ware, in great variety, is still located at 1172 Broadway, cor. 28th Street.

Also, Builders' Hardware, Locks, Electro-Brouned and Finish Work of their own manufacture. Old household articles requiring Replating dose on short notice. They are also prepared to contract for Hell Work and Speaking Tubes in Hotels and Private Dwellings.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To agents to sell the criebrated Wilsom Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world, Stude side or bat side. First machine on trial. For fur-ther particulars, address her particulars, address

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

WATERS' NEW SCALE PIANOS.

With Iron Frame, Operatings from and Agrafe Bridge.

Melodeous and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured. Warranted for 6 years.

Planos, Melodeous, and Organs. Friest presidy relief for Cash. New 1-course Flanos, 2010 and opward. New Cabinet Organs, 35 and apward. Second-hand instruments, 5th and apward. Menthly installments received. Warrooms. 481 Broadway, N. Y. THE CELEBRATED

IMITATION GOLD HUNTING WATCHES,

"COLLINS METAL,"

Improved Oroide.

These justly celebrated Watches have been so thoroughly tested during the last four years, and their requisation for time and as imitations of Gold Watches is so well established, as to require no recommendations. Prince:— Revisional Watches, $10, equal in appearance and for time to Gold Watches worth $100: Full-Jeweled Levens, $18, equal to $150 Gold once: Full-Jeweled Levens, extra fine and superior finish, $20, equal to $2000 Gold once.

We have just commenced making a very fine American Watch. full jeweled, Patent Leven, chromometer balance, adjusted to heat, cold, and position, 43/ ounces down weight, equal in appearance and for time to a Gold Watch coading $250.

We charge only $25 for these magnificent Watches, All our watches are in hunting chies, gends and ladler sizes. Chalas, Course Metal, $2 to $2. Also, all kinds of Jewelry, equal to gold, at one-tenth the price.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

We are now making Jeweiry of the California Diamonds. These are real stones of great brilliancy and hardness, and can not be distinguished from the genuine stones, even by good judges. They are particularly brilliant at night by artificial light, do not scratch or become duil by use, and retain their brilliancy for an indefinite time. The following are the prices:

Ladier and Gentr Finger Rings, single stones, one carst w't $6 each.

Oentr Fins, single stone, according to the size of the stone $5 to 25.

Ladier Chatter Pins. $1 50.

Ladier Chatter Barrings. $1 50.

TO CLUBS...—Where Six watches are ordered at one time, we send a Seventh watch free. Goods sent by Express to be paid for on delivery.

C. E. COLLINS & CO., No. 335 Broadway, New York.

We Live in Three Climates.

In this country we have at different seasons of the year the temperature of three climates. Our Springs and Automas have a softness and mildness that belong only to the Temperate Zones; our Mid-summers are torrid, and our Mid-winters almost arctic in their frigulity. These changes, involving a variation of from ninety to one hundred degrees of Fahrenheit during the year, are upon the whole conductve to heath and long life, but they tend to entail upon us some distressing complaints which can only be escaped by the exercise of due care and the nas of a proper antidots when the system is pre-disposed to contract them. The chief and most annoying of these disorders is dyspeptia, once supposed to be incurable, but which, since the introduction of now about twenty years ago, has proved to be a per-fectly manageable disease.

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS,

Sorily manageable disease.

In the Spring and Fall, but more especially in the Pall, the symptoms of dyspepsia are generally aggravated. The profuse expenditure of the animal finide under the burning sun of Summer is apt to leave the stomach weak and indoised, and incompetent to the task of perfect digestion. It requires a toole which will rouse it from its lethargy and brace and invigorate without intributing or infaming it. This touch has been provided in the wooderful vegetable preparation which has replaced, in a great measure, all the old patienties formerly prescribed by physicians, under the false idea that the disorder could not be radically cured. The success of HOSTETTERS BITTERS in all the varieties of dyspepsia, anits or chronic, has effectually suretics of dyspepsis, acute or chronic, has effectually ex-ploded this fallacy, and it is now recommended as a specific for indignation by some of the most eminent members of the medical profession.

TO THE WORKING CLARE.—We see now prepared to función his classes with constant employment at home, the whole of the time or for the space moments. Besides new, tight and problems. Fermion of either or a savily ware from the 10-10 if per problems. Fermion of either ser analy ware from the 10-10 into the function. Berefaced even by the revelop their whole time to the functions. Berefaced even by the revelop their whole time to the functions. Berefaced even by the revelop their whole time to the functions. The section of the function of the saving of the function of the saving of the function of the temperature of temperature of the temperature of tempera

THE BOLLAR WATCH, -- A perfect time THE BOLLAH WATCH.—A perfect uncleeper, with superior compase attachment.
Cased in pure Cooled of Gold, enameted dial, giase crystal, steet and brass works. Usual watch size, Made restrely of metal, and in elegantly-finished Oroide case. Entirely new—patented. A perfect "genof ingenuity." This is no usedes compass. Warranted rive years. Batisfaction guaranteed. Single exuple, in nest case, mailed prepaid for only $1, three for $2, by addressing the sole insunfacturers, MAGNETIC WATCH CO., Hinsdale, N. H.

TWO NICE NEW GAMES: "Words Within Words" and "Blowing Cotton."

Pleasing and entertaining for Old and Young. They are sure to be favorites in every family circle. The two games, in a neat box, for 50 cents. Sent postpaid on recents of price, by the publishers, G. M. WHIPPLE & A. A. SHITH, Salem, Mass.

£ 28,000,000. Engiand According to the opinion of the best invyers, I am the beir to this Estate. I will sell a few shares at a sacrides to obtain money to prosecute my claim in Engiand. For particulars, address JASUEL LAWRENCE, New York.

HORRIBLE !—I suffered with CATABRH
Thirty Years !—was cured in six weeks by a sim-ple remedy, and will send the receipt, postage free, to all afflicted. Address Ray. T.J. MEAD, Drawer 116, Syracuse, New York.

6.75 to $200 per North to Apents, salary or com-5/10 mission, to sell our Patent White West Clother Lines. Address Hudson River West Works, 13 William St., S. Y., Chicago, St., Richmond, Fa., or Memphis, Tenn.

A GENTS wanted every where. Brown's Patent Dou-ble-Cone Ventilating Damper gives the most best with the least fiel. No Express charges. Send for Oir-culars. O.R.BRIGGS & CO., 184 Washington St., N.Y.

SALESMEN.—Wanted, a few reliable, energetic salesmen, to sell by sample standard goods. Address H. H. RICHARDS & CO., 412 Chestrot St., Philadelphia, Pa. A GENTS can make $900 per month by selling our Silver-Plating Field. $3 per dozen. RICHMOND & HOSTER, Seneca Falls, N. Y.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

BRONZES,

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co., No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-rieties to be found in the city, and are offered at Low Prices.

to Sign of Gold Telegraph. .et

USEPUL INFORMATION for RAIL-WAY MEN.—Compiled by W.G. HARLING, Engineer. Second edition, revised and enlarged. 529 pages, 35mo, Morocco Gill, 22. D. VAN NOSTERAND, Publisher, 23 Murray St., and IT Warren St., New York.

Copies sent free by mail on receipt of price.

"THE BEST IN THE COUNTRY," SO SATS THE "PREDOKIA ADVESTIGES" OF THE NEW YORK OBSERVER.

$1 50 PER ANNUA. SAMPLE COPIES FREE. SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO.,

27 Pane Row, Naw Your. MAPLE LEAVES, enlarged and improved.

The best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magazine published. It will be sent from new to the end of 1870 for 80 cents. Send in your subscriptions without delay

O. A. BOORBACH, 102 Nassan St., New York.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR PRIEST and NUN.

Apply at once to CRITTENDEN & McKINNEY,

BOOSET'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.
A Complete Catalogue now ready. Seat free.
Secony's "Saliad Singer," the new Half-Dime Series of the Best Souge. Sold every where, or specimen number mailed for Five Centa.—646 Broadway, N. Y.

"ROUGH AND READY; cc, Life with the New York Newsboys," the fourth "Ragged Dick" Book, costs $1 25 by mail, from LORING, Publisher, Boston.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, 28, 218, 216. Offices, 218, 226, 230. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

VINEGAR - HOW MADE FROM CIDER, 10 hours, without using drugs. For circulars, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Coun.

THE MAGIC COMB will change my colored hair or Theard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb-sont by mail for $1. For east by Merchants & Druggists generally. Address Magic Comb Co., Springfeld, Mass.

HOWE'S Never-Falling Agus Ours and Tonic Staters.

House's Opnomizated Syrup cares invible diseases.

Incipient Consemption, Onlineth, Career, &c., seryitims. $1 cach. C. Bown, M.D., Seneca Falls, N. Y.

MAGIC PHOTOGRAPHS, wonderful and amusing, 25 cents a package. Lennar or Love, 50 cents. Sept to W. C. Wasves, 5 Astor Place, N.Y.

TOOL Chesis and Lathes, Are elegant, nesh, and instructive, Suitable for boys, amateurs, and mechanics. Hinstructed catalogue free.

Address GEORGE PARR, Buffalo, New York.

Collements and Commercial Institute (General Puse II's School, New Haven, Ct. Winter term begins Jan. 11. Stammering cured by Bates' Appliances. For descriptive pumphlet address Simpson & Co., Box 5008, N. Y.

$20 A DAY: Business new. Samples and Circu-$20 lars froe. J. C. RAND & CO., Biddeford, Mc. $1140 sample mailed free. A. J. Palism, N. Y.

HAYDN'S DICTIONARY OF DATES, relating to all Ages and Nations. For Universal Reference. Edited by Bussams Vinceur, Assessant Secretary and Recept of the Library of the Royal Institution of Great Britain; and Revised for the Use of American Readers. Sec. Cloth, $5.00.

The New Books of the Season

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

See Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on recognist the price.

WILD SPORTS OF THE WORLD: a Book of Natural History and Adventure. By Jasis Gazzawooe, Author of "The Adventures of Reuben Davidger," "The True History of a Little Regenum, "The Beven Cares of London," St. With 141 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, Cloth, $2.00.

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. By From McCapeur, Author of "The Waterdale Neighborn." Hustrated. 8ro, Paper, 18 cents.

oro, Paper, 18 cents.

THE POLAR WORLD: a Popular Description of Man and Nature in the Arctic and Antarctic Regions of the Globe. By Dr. G. Hawrens, Author of "The Sea and its Living Wonders." "The Harmonies of Nature," and "The Tropical World." With Additional Chapters and 160 Illustrations. Svo, Cloth, 38 18.

THE ROMANCE OF SPANISH HISTORY. By Joses S. C. Assort, Author of "The French Revolution," "The History of Napoleon Bonsparts," &c. With Bustrations. 12mc, Cloth, $2.00.

WRECKED IN PORT. A Novel. By Engeren Tayes, Author of "Kiesing the Rod," "Land at Last," "Black Steep," &c. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, King of Napies and of Italy. By Jose S. C. Assert, Author of "The History of Napoleon Bonaparte," "The French Revolution," &c. 18mo, Cloth, $1 %. Uniform with ABBOTTS ILLUSTRATED HISTORIES.

16mo, Cloth, $1 50 per volume. Heno, Cloth, $1 80 per volume.

Cybes the Geray, Dabios ver Geray, Kenner, Alexander the Geray, Robeller, Harringe, Perrusa, Johnson, Chopatha, Need, Alexander, Perrusa, Johnson, Coloratha, Need, Alexander I., Brossand III., Mary Queers of Socies, Queers Burganette, Charles II., Charles II., Johnson, Maria Antonicette, Mariame Rolling, Henry IV., Peyer the Geray, Gerouis Elian, Ring Philip, Hermand Courter, Mariame Rolling, Johnson Bonaparte, BBGGAR ON HORSEBACK; or, A County Pamily. A Novel. By the Author of "One of the Pamily." "Cartyon's Year," "Found Dead," &c. 8vo, Paper, 30 cents.

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Fen and Penent, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relics, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Bassaco J. Lossiwa, Anthor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 881 Illustrations, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Barritt, chiefy from Original Skatches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1824 pages, large 890. Price, in Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $3.00; Full Roan, $9.00; Half Calf or Half Moreocco extra, $36.00.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE. A Novel. By Mrs. Our-reasy, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," "Perpetual Corate," "Life of Edward Living," "Brownlows," "Agnes," &c. 8vo, Paper, 15 cents.

UPHAM'S MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. Mental Phi-kasophy: embracing the Three Departments of the Intellect, Sensibilities, and Will. By Trousas, C. Uresas, D.D., Professor of Mental and Moral Phi-losophy in Bowdoin College. In Two Volumes, Vol. L: Intellect, Language; Vol. II.: Sensibilities, Will. 12ma, Cloth, $1 15 per volume.

19. IN SILE ATTIRE. A Novel. By William Black, Author of "Love or Marriage?" Sto, Paper, 50 cts.

COUNTESS GISELA. A Novel. By R. Manuere. Translated by A. Nahmer. Svo, Paper, 85 centa.

A GREEK GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS. By WILLIAM HENRY WADDRLL, Professor of Ancient Languages in the University of Georgia. 18mo, Cloth, §1 60. 18.

POUND DEAD. A Novel. By the Author of "Carly-on's Year," "One of the Family," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

PALSE COLORS. A Novel. By ANNIE TROMAS. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

MOORE'S LETTERS AND JOURNALS OF LORD BYHON. The Letters and Journals of Lord Byron, With Notices of his Life. By Tannas Moore. New Edition. 2 vols., 8ro, Cloth, $4 06.

GUICCIOLI'S LORD BYRON. My Recollections of Lord Byron, and these of Eye-Witnesses of his Life. By the Courses Guescout. Translated by House E. H. Jessingson. Portrait. 16ms, Cloth, $1 15.

10. MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. New Edition. Svo, Paper, $1 25.

GRORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS, Complete. Harper's Hinstrated Library Edition, Complete in 5 vols., 17mo, Morocco Cloth, 15 cents per volume. The set complete, in a neat case, 50 fs.

Anan Bane.—Tax Milli or ver Floss.—Frisz Hour.—Screens or Curricul Live and Schas Mannes.—

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

THACKERAT S NOVALLY AND PAPER, NO CESTA.

- PENDERSIA. 137 Hinstrations. See, Paper, 75 etc.

- Tex Vindentiase. 150 Hinstrations. See, Paper, 75 etc.

- Tex Vindentiase. 150 Hinstrations. See, Paper, 15 eccus. — Tus Navonaux. 152 Hinstrations. See, Paper, 15 cents. — Tus Anvancuaux or Passur. 44 Hinstrations and Portrait of Author. See, Paper, 50 eccus. — Havan Besons and Loval van Windense.

15 Hinstrations. See, Paper, 50 cents.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

CHARLES HEADERS NOVELS!

HARD CASH, Blustraied, Svo, Paper, 85 centa.—Guirsive Garry, or, Jealmay. Illustraced. Svo, Paper, 15 cents.—Leve Me Level. Nove, Svo, Paper, 15 cents.—Leve Me Level. Love Me Level.
16 cents.—Verl. Harl. Svo, Paper, 85 cents.—Fac.
Worth Lord. Svo, Paper, 85 cents.—Fac.
Worthousever, Casseria Jouwerous, and Other Biorice. 8vo, Paper, 90 cents.—Tas Chousers and The Hearth. 8vo, Paper, 90 cents.

AN EPISODE OF THE CENTRAL PARK

STORT GUARDIAN OF THE PARE. "Hey, there! Scop! I arrest you for Fast Driving! You must go with me!" Young America. "Oh, new you've got a going, you might as well keep right along with me."

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Planos is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tone, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Plano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fail to sult any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information sent on application to HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York, Or to Sertin & Nixon, Chicago, Illa.; H. N. Henrestran, Milweaker, Wis.; Louis, Louis, Ry.; J. A. McCauss, Nashville, Tenn.; Kuncari, Broa, St. Louis, Me.; C. M. Merce, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. R. Jaceson, Sandusky, Ohio; Brainain & Sons, Cleveland, Ohio; H. D. Mondon, Zanesville, Ohio; J. E. Goule, Philadelphia, Pa.; C. Bluer, Pittsburgh, Pa.; L. B. Pewell, Stranton, Pa.; Clubry & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Harmion, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; H. S. Macche, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Utley, Beffalo, N. Y.; Brensotton & Howe, Systemse, N. Y.; Weiser, Smith, & Perry, Boston, Mass.; Court Bros., Providence, R. L.; C. M. Looms, New Haven, Court.; Matters Gray, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordumbers, Toronto, C. W.; E. Perry & Bros, St. John, N. B.

EXTREMELY LOW PRICES

UNION ADAMS & CO.

For Ladies.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Merino Hosiery, Kid and Castor Gloves.

For Misses.

Patent Merino Vests. Patent Merino Drawers, Patent Union Dresses, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Cashmere Hosiery, Roman and Fancy Sashes.

No. 637 Broadway.

Holiday Presents.—A suitable Present is a Mosrechaum Pipe or Holder, Plain or Carved, of the best material; a large variety, at manufacturers' prices, at Endemberg's, 6 John St., next Ströw, y. & Ti Nassan eer. John. Formerly 18

Wall. Send for Circular & Price-List, P.O. Box 6724.

Hatter and Furrier. DANIEL D. YOUMANS, 717 BROADWAY, offers at low prices: LADIES' PINE PURS in every variety; SEAL and ASTRAKHAN SACQUES AND TURBANS; WHITE POX MUPPS AND BOAS; CRILDREN'S PURS, GENTS' PURS, &c. Importer of ENGLISH HATS for Gentlemen's Wear.

A MERITED TRIBUTE.

Waters Heron, Esq., 187 Broadway, New York, after having been hald for neward of ten years, used RARRY'S TRICOPIEROUS for eight months, and has now a thick histories head of real black hair.

MAGIC LANTERNS, for Sunday-Schools, Public Ex-Mabilitons, and Parlor Entertainments. EF Cata-logues and free.—MICROSCOPES, for Scientific and Popular Investigations. EF Price-List and free. T. H. McALLISTER, Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

C. A. STEVENS & CO., 40 East 14th Street, Union Square, New York,

are offering

A choice selection of Diamonde, Pearls, Sapphires, and other Gems, mounted in the most artistic manner.

Also, Fine Jewelry of every variety. Watches from the best American and European manufacturees.

Silver and Plated Ware, a choice selection con-stautly on hand.

Particular attention given to the Resetting of Dia-monds, and the manufacture of Silver Ware for Testi-monds and Weddings, from original designs.

AGENTS for the SALE OF WATCHES manu-cured by the UNITED STATES WATCH CO. of MARION, New Jersey. Send for Circular.

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

Qepot, 211 Washington Street, New York. FISHERMEN!

TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md. Send for Price-List.)

IMPORTANT!—Health and pleasure in the nee of Reid's Pat. Potato Eaber. Testimonisis and de-scription sent by Dunasy & Rocawata, Buffalo, N.Y.

E DWARD SEARS.

BESSMAN STREET, New York.

C. G. Gunther's Sons,

502-504 BROADWAY,

Offer a very Elegant Assortment of Novelties in

SEAL AND ASTRAKHAN SACQUES,

TURBANS.

Boas, Ties, &c.

Freeman & Burr, MERCHANT

138 & 140 FULTON St., NEW YORK, invite attention to their magnifbent stock of Men's and Boye' Clothing. It is of unparalleled extent and variety, made up in strict accordance with prevailing styles from the most fashtonable materials, and for nov elty of design and excell workmanship can not be sur-

OVERCOATS for all seasons, $8 to $50.

SUITS for all occasions and occupations, $12 to $60.

BOYS' SUITS for all ages, $6 to $20.

COUNTRY ORDERS,—Rules for self-mens-Unwarm and samples of goods free. Freeman-there mail free, on application, their saw rules for self-sensawrement, patterns of goods, and prica-lais, which eachie gentlemen in any part of the country to order clothing direct from them with the certainty of receiv-ing perfect-fitting germents.

Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co.,

IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE,

PURE SILVER.

The experience of FORTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpson, and the use of new and ingenious labor-raving machinery, enable us to offer to the trade a line of goods in ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS. which, for BEAUTY, FINISH, and DURABILITY, Can not be Excelled.

All goods bearing our trade-mark,

"Improved Electro Treble Plate,"

ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED; and, if found defective or not as represented, can be returned, and the money will be refunded.

OFFICE AND FACTORY, WALLINGFORD, CONK. SAMPLE AND SALES ROOM, 19 JOHN ST., N. Y.

COODALL'S PLAYING CARDS New patterne. Victor E. Manger, Sole Ag't, 110 Reade St.

"VITALIA;" Salvation for the Hair.

For Restoring to Grow Hair its Original Color

A NEW DISCOVERY !!

PHALON'S

PHALON'S "VITAMA" differs utterly from all the "dyes," "colorers," and "restorers"
(?) in use. It acts on a totally different principle. It is limpid, fragrant, and per-fectly innocuous, precipitates no muddy or flacturent matter, requires no shaking up, and communicates no stain to the skin or the liner. No paper curtain is necessary to conceal its turbid appearance, for the simple reason that it is not turbid. It is, to all intents and purposes, A NEW DISCOVERY in Toiler Chemistry.

"Pharen's "VITALIA" is warranted to effect a change in the color of the hair within 10 days after the first application, the direction being carefully observed

IT IS AS CLEAR AS WATER! AND WAS NO SEDIMENT.

Price, One Dollar per Box, CONTAINING TWO BOTTLES.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

If your Druggis has not "Vitalia" on hand write, enclosing $1.00 and we will forward it immediately.

> Phaldn & Son, 517 Broadway, N. Y.

> > Two Months

FREE! FREE!!

The Most Popular Juvenile Magazine in America.

LITTLE CORPORAL

Entirely Original and Piret Class.

All new subscribers for THE LITTLE CORPORAL during November and December, will receive the November and December, will receive the November and December Nos. of 1969 Filled. THE LITTLE CORPORAL Assa Larger Circulation than any other Jurenile Magazine in the world, and is better worth the price than any other magazine published.

Because of its immense circulation, we are enabled to furnish it at the low price of OSE DOLLAR a YEAR. Single number, 12 cents, or free to any one who will try to raise a cinb. Beautiful premiums for clubs. Subscribe NOW. Back numbers can always be

ALFRED L. SEWELL & CO., PUBLISHERS, CHICAGO, ILL.

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This one Bell, located in the g sleeping-room, rings upon the opening of each window and thousands who are using it tesSend for a Pumphlet.
E. HOLMES, T Murray St., N. Y.

CATALOGUES, by Mail, 10 cents each.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 12 pages.
MAGIC LA STERNS and STREEDPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 94 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 994 Chestant St., Philadelphia, Pa.

TO THE LADIES.—One week's time, pleas-anily employed, will pay for a first-rate Sawisa Maonisa. Address COREY D. KELSEY. 130 Lazington Ava., New York.

Send for terms of 'Linden Hall,' Littz, Lancaster Co., Pa.

THE REISSUE OF

Evid

JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 676.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1800, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE NEW YORK YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

THE LIBRARY.

THE READING-ROOM.

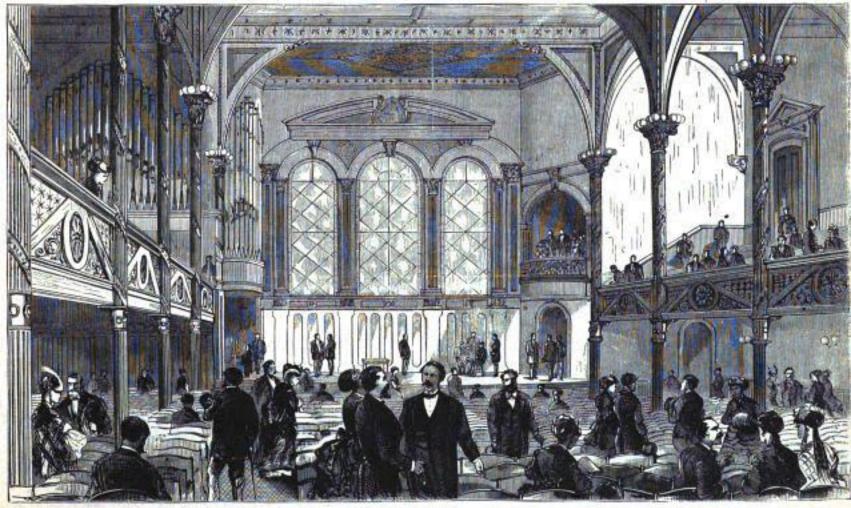

It was a noble conception, that of him who first formed the idea of employing the instrumentality of a club in the work of Christ. It has been thus far, nobly restized in the new building of the New York Young Men's Christian Association. Association.

For years this Association has been carrying on its work without any adequate means. It has undertaken to provide for the moral, intellectual, and social improvement of the young men of the great metropolis. To this work it has strictly fined itself. Other similar organizations have confined itself. Other similar organizations have added to the sphere of their labors. They have organized mission-schools, tonement-house prayer meetings, temporal charities. That in New York has found as much as it could do in its single self-chosen mission. It has had between one and two hundred thousand young men to provide for. Over seventy-five thousand of these, as nearly as can be ascertained, are homeless and almost friendless. Some are penniless. Those who have money are more to be pitied than those who have not. Their danger is just in the ratio of their means. The allurements to vice are numerous and attractive. Without discussing the much-vexed question of amusements, it is certain that the theatre, the billiard-room, the cafe, are in a large majority of instances, and to a large majority of young men, open doors to ruin. The dance is little or no better. We speak not of what they might be, but of what they pow actually are. Until the recent excise-law Broadway was lined with brightly-lighted halls, where women employed their arts to add to the enticements of music, drink, and dancing. Attention to business does by no means always serve to counterest the influences of vice, which serve to counteract the influences of vice, which are erroneously supposed to captivate only the idle. Business often demands of the young salesman, as a part of his professional duties, that he accompany his customer to these dens of iniquity, and show him the pollutions of the great city. Every now and then some great defalcation, some atrocious smindle, startling the community by its grandeur, has given them some hint of operations which, on a smaller scale unnoticed, occur continually, transpire only occa-

THE LECTURE-ROOM .- [SERTCHED BY STANLEY FOX.]

It was against this current that the Young Men's Christian Association have undertaken to make their way. Into this vortex they plunged to save at least some. They are wreckers on a most dangerous coast. But hitherto they have had no adequate means for their work. A sinhad no adequate means for their work. A single room has served them alternately as library goe room has served them ameriancy as interry and reading room, and as a hall for social and religious meetings. It has possessed no attrac-tions except for those for whom the printed page was more attractive than music, games, and so-cial converse. If the social element has been neglected, it has been because there were no adequate means for its culture. Its intellectual advantages were inferior to those of the Mercanadvantages were inferior to those of the Mercan-tile Library or the Cooper Union. One can hard-ly expect to find the young men who most need such an institution leaving the case for a prayer-meeting. It is not strange that while the rooms of the Association have usually, except on spe-cial occasions, enjoyed the presence of not over a score of members, the brightly-lighted billiard-rooms opposite have been nightly crowded. Considering its insidewate instruments, the Considering its inadequate instruments, the Association has done a very creditable work. It Association has done a very creditable work. It has well earned the recognition it has at last received. It has gathered a membership of about three thousand. It has opened several branches in different parts of the city. It has maintained a monthly meeting which has been always well attended, generally overcrowded. It has successfully established prayer-meetings and Bible-classes. It has found employment for the unemployed by accurs and handreds; and a church-home for multitudes who, accustomed to the observance of the Sabbath in their native village, wandered in the great city from church to church, finding no rest fur the sole of their feet. It has maintained successfully street-proaching, lay and maintained successfully street-preaching, lay and clerical, in the streets and squares, on the Sabbath during the summer. At last, to the managers of this institution, the time seemed to have come when they were en-titled to ask of New York the means to do what ought to have been done long ago, build a house quate to compete in its attractions with the attractiveness of resorts of a doubtful or perniattractiveness of resorts or a doubtus or parac-cious character. They were without means. Their membership does not, generally, represent wealth. But the idea, proposed to a few men of large means, was eagerly responded to by them. They even insisted that the scope of the institution, and the capacity and facilities of its building, should be better and larger than the building, should be better and larger than the managers had dared to ask. A board of trust-ees was organized. Their incorporation ex-pressed the object for which they were created —the erection and maintenance of a building for the purposes of the Association. Six evangelical churches are by the law required to be represented in this board. In it we note such names as W. K. Dauge, Jun., C. C. Colgate, Jonatian Stunges, Rosser Lennox Kennery, Romert L. Steart, Stewart Brown. The former is President of the Association. It is no secret that it is largely due to his influence that this project has been carried so successfully to its consummation. Without any public ap-peal, nearly $300,000 have been raised. The to its consummation. Without any public ap-peal, nearly $300,000 have been raised. The building, with the land, will cost nearly half a million. It is hoped, by further subscriptions, to reduce the debt to $150,000. The rentals of to reduce the debt to $150,000. The rentals of the stores on the first-floor, and of the offices-mainly occupied as studios—on the fourth and fifth floors, will pay the interest on this debt, and leave a handsome annual surples in the treasury toward the work of the Association. The statement of a contemporary that this will make the Association independent of the church-es is a mistake. It would do so if the Associes is a mistake. It would do so if the Associ-stion had no work to do. But its work is il-limitable. How much it will do will depend almost entirely upon its income. Surely in New York city no more worthy object of sympathy can commend itself to the churches.

The public will look with interest to see the what must, after all, be conced in some sense an experiment. The Christian benevolence of New York has constructed for the young men of New York what we may per-hape describe as a most perfect and complete club-hose... It occupies the second and third stories or the large and handsome ediffee, on the corner of Twenty-third Street and Fourth Ave-me. With its lecture-room for public meetings, espable of scating fifteen hundred, with its taste-ful pariors, its cheerful and brightly lighted ng-room, its bijou of a library, its attractive prayer-meeting room, its gymnasium and bowl-ing-alley, and with the additional attractions which the artists' studies above afford, it may be safely said that it is not surpassed by any similar institution on the continent, if indeed it has any where its superior for the purposes for which it was constructed. The public will look with interest, not wholly unmingled with anxiety, to see what they will do with it.

We trust to see the management, in entering upon their new abode, throwing open its doors to both sexes. There are hundreds of girls and women who need the benefits of such a building quite as much as their brethren. Their presence in the reading-room and the social parlors could not impair, but would enhance, the usefulness of There is, indeed, no adequate reason why the privileges of the gymnasium and the bowling-alley should not be theirs at certain hours and under proper restrictions. The Cooper Union and the Mercantile Library have demonstrated the advantages of an intermingling of the sexes in such an institution. We hope to see the directors of the Young Men's Christian Association availing themselves of the lessons which the experience of these pioneer institutions af-

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1869.

THE SPANISH GUN-BOATS.

THE Spanish gun-boats have again become L conspicuous, and nothing could be more bewildering than the different positive and ap-parently authentic statements of the policy of the Administration. The journals which prob-ably have the least knowledge of the intentions and views of the Government have published the most elaborate letters upon the subject, and the general reader has been compelled to fall back upon the proved sagacity and good sense of the President and his advisers, if he would have any satisfactory con-ception of the situation. The Spanish Government contracted for the building of gun-boats at New York. When they were nearly ready, the Peruvian Minister complained that they were designed for war upon Peru-a state with which we are at peace—and they were detained by order of the Government; but the work upon them was continued. When they were ready for sea, crews arrived for them from Spain, and their armaments were shipped to Cuba. That the questions involved might be legally settled, the gun-boats were turned over to the civil anthorities, and were held by the United States Marshal: and this is the situation as we write.

It is alleged that the Spanish Minister denies that the boats are intended for service against Peru ; and, on the other hand, that the Perurian Minister is acting under the advice of the Cuban Junta. If, as is probable, the Peruvian Minister is unable to prove his assertion of the purpose for which the boats are designed, there would seem to be no valid reason for further detention of the property of Spain honestly ac-quired. But at this point it is stated that the Administration is in sympathy with Cuba, and that to release the gun-boats is to send a formi-dable fleet against that island, and probably to secure the Spanish ascendency over the Cubans. It has been urged, therefore, that the boats bould be released, but at the same time that the United States should acknowledge the belligerent rights of the Cubans; and it is stated that such being the intention of the Government, and war with Spain being anticipated in consequence, we have already a sufficient force in the Gulf, and have already acquired a hold upon St. Domingo.

We doubt if the Administration would res to so stupid and clumsy a method of doing so simple a thing. Our duty is perfectly plain. If we believe that the Cuban insurgents are fighting for liberty, and assume that we ought, in the interests of civilization, to take part with all our neighbors who are engaged in such a strug-gle, let us at once say so. Indeed, if this were our duty, we ought to have said so long ago when the Cuban prospects were more promising than they now are. But if it be our duty as a civilized state not to acknowledge the belligerent rights of any revolutionary party until its movement has acquired such form and coherence as to show a fair chance of success, certainly we have no right to choose the moment when that chance is slightest as the time for such a recognition.

It is true that the Cuban movement is for independence, and that we believe American states should be independent of European control. It is true that the revolutionary leaders have proclaimed emancipation, and that we believe in the liberty of all men. But would liberty and civilization be the gainers if we should take up arms for every party every where upon this continent that demanded independence or announced emancipation? Is it desirable that the United States should establish a precedent by which nations may interfere with the internal dissensions of other nations? Is it not palpubly a step backward, a policy that restores the ancient regime of predatory warfare and conquest? The great political crimes have always been committed in the name of honor and liberty and order. What are treaties of amity, what is international law, clumsy and obscure as it often is, but the defenses of civilization against the whims of brute force?

Should the Spanish gun-boats be released, it is declared that they will be used against Cuba, and that we ought not to permit it. Has Spain, then, no right to attempt the subjugation of a revolted colony? If we think not, why have we not protested before fourteen months have sed away? Or will any honest man, in view of General Jonnan's letter, and his reported anxiety to leave the Cuban service, say that Spain's chance is more hopeless because of the addition of a fleet of thirty gun-boats to the Spanish force against the island? The Cubans have no port; they have no really acknowledged government under which the various functions of a state are fulfilled. They have neither arms nor food. The revolutionary forces are a wandering multitude, sometimes skirmishing with the Spanish outposts. No people, indeed, are to be despised because they are poor and suffering; no body of brave men are to be contemned because they are not a powerful and well-appointed army. But have the Cabans, however beave and enlightened, yet impressed the world with the conviction that they have fairly earned recognition as an independent state? Have they really done more than elude, in the interior of the island, the efforts of Spain to subdue them? Is not their attitude wholly negative? and is that the kind of attitude which ought to command the active interference of governments?

Moreover, if the case were exactly as it is and Cuba were three thousand miles away, would it be urged upon the United States as a duty to acknowledge its belligerence or its endence? Is not this flowing rhetoric about Spain, as a "hard-hearted speculator in human liberty," a kind of palimpsest— and underneath it do we not plainly read annexation? Now the simple way is the best way. If the United States wish to take Coba from Spain, they will be quite as much respected if they do it openly and immediately, as if they take it under cover of acknowledging a condition of affairs in the island which does not exist and which their own arms must maintain. To call the last of aggrandisement the love of liberty, deceives nobody. If Cube has honeatly carned the recognition of belligerent rights, we are in favor of the recognition. But we de-mand the facts, and national honor requires that they be something more than the desire of annexation.

AN OLD MASK STRIPPED OFF.

CHIRF JUSTICE CHASE, who is stated to have expressed surprise that any late rebels should be expected to repent, and to deny that it is desirable they should, ought to be elected perpetual Grand President of the new Confederate Survivors' Association in South Carolina. General Wade Hampton is the most conspicuous person in the movement, and the sentiment of General Jones S. Paueron, as expressed in a letter, are unquestionably those of the asso-ciation, and indicate a form of mind which does not tend in the least degree toward repentance. The call of the meeting for organization sets forth that the memories of the late war between the Confederate and United States of America are still fresh, and many records are likely to perish which would place its history in a true light. Justice to those "who fought and died for their country" demands that the truth be told, in order that the rising generation may learn "that their parents were not the vile traitors that the common school histories, now prepared \(\frac{1}{r}\) our enemies, assert."

General Jose S. Passton was unable to at tend the meeting, but he sent an ardent letter of sympathy; "We are all survivors of our brothers and sons who died gloriously for their country and for liberty, and we have survived that liberty and that country for which they died." General Paxaron adds, that it is a duty of Confederates, very near to their duties to God, with when the justified souls of their comrades are living, to preserve the memory of the great deeds of the Southern soldiers and of the cause for which they died. Indeed, to have been a soldier of the Southern Confederacy seems to have been, in General Pars-TON's estimation, the choicest boon that Providence has latterly vouchsafed to man. And as he undoubtedly expresses the general feeling of his class, it is not surprising that the visitors to the Georg's State Fair, at Macon, return profoundly impressed with the fact that public sentiment is not friendly to the Union; and that they are reported to assert that the United States flag was not displayed during the festival; a story which, however, is not likely to be

As often as such proceedings take place among the late Confederates the truth must be repeated, that history and the public mind may not be deceived. Chief Justice Chasn is reported to have said, "What have the rebels done that they should repent?" and the World is of opinion that to speak of any moral principle as involved in the late war was "a good enough Morgan" five years ago, but is lament ably out of date now. To Judge Chase's ques-tion there is a very short and simple answer. The rebels, under the plea of State sovereignty, attempted the bloody overthrow of the United States government for the perpetuation and extension of human slavery. It was a govern-ment which had not harmed them, and which they had always controlled. It was a government which abridged none of their liberties. It was a government against which no kind of oppression was urged. The rebels demand that they should be suffered to secode for the most inhuman of purposes, and when the demand, from the very nature of the national life and of the government, was merely Shylock's demand for the pound of fiesh. They were re-fused, and they began the terrible war that fol-

In Judge Chase's opinion, is a bloody revolution to overthrow a government which was never even charged with oppression, and which, as he knows, oppressed only those slaves who did not rebel against it—is such a revolution a matter of mere difference of opinion, is it justifi-able, is it moral, or is it something for which the actors should repent? But if this effort to destroy a government which is not oppressive is a mere subterfuge for the purpose of establishing one that shall hopelessly oppress, then does Judge CHASE, an old anti-slavery leader, think that it is honorable and commendable, or to be re-pented of as the horrors of the middle passage might have been deplored even by slave-traders, when the trade was abolished?

The character of the rebellion is not to be ought in its political plea, but in its moral purose. Suppose even that State sovereignty had been distinctly guaranteed in the Constitution -although it certainly is not-and that the lapse of time and the development of the country had so inextricably welded its real interests and permanence together that the sovereignty could not be asserted without a bloody struggle, was the perpetuity of slavery a justification of such a struggle? The Southern talk about liberty and country was always the merest gaseonade. What "liberty" did Mr. Jone S. Passeros fight for? The liberty of selling other men's wives and children. What country does be talk about? The State of South Carolina. He and his friends will find that their wrestle with History is m desperate than that with the Unitory sees already that they fought not because they were oppressed, but because they feared to lose the power of oppression. The contest is decided, and they are vanquished.

We have no wish to remind them of it. But we shall take care that whenever the plea is made that the rebellion was a mere political difference, its moral character shall be plainly stated.

THE GRAIN TRADE.

Tun failures in Liverpool among the grain dealers with American connections, announced by the telegram of the 28d November, has secured attention at the Corn Exchange and in financial circles. This misfortune, which private telegrams only partially confirm, could not well be avoided in view of the fact that the price of average English wheat in the spring of 1868, in London and Liverpool, was quote at seventy-four shillings per quarter of eight bushels, and in November, 1869, No. 2 red Western had fallen to forty shillings per quarter. The price of wheat has been rarely higher or lower at these points, and in reaching the minimum a few dealers have been worn out by repeated losses occurring on a falling market.

The causes of the most recent decline in wheat in English markets, as we lately stated on the authority of the Manchester Guardian and the "Chamber of Agriculture," were large imports, the expectation that the United States would be able to supply all their present wants, and the unusual consumption of po due to the tendency to rot which had been widely developed. As it is the last ounce which breaks the camel's back, to this unexpected change in food the happening of some

The estimated annual consumption of wheat in Great Britain, made in the spring of 1868 by Mr. CAIRD, was 20, 800,000 quarters, of which he supposed 9,600,000 would need to be imported between the harvest of 1867-reported as the worst-and that of 1868, which occurred during the great drought. As the price of the quartern loaf of bread had been carried up from 54d, in 1864, to 9d, in March, 1867, it was fair to infer that the drought of 1868, and the defective crop of this year, would make the trade in breadstuffs active and profitable. But the cir-cumstances in England have been so peculiar as to have defeated the most sagacious plans. The price of bread had been carried up simultaneously with the great impulse which the scheme of limited liability gave to the industry of England, and when wheat ruled high the failure which broke down that system had not fully reached the laboring classes, who long after remained overbearing and uncompromising in their contests with manufacturers. As soon, however, as the financial depression reached the laborer in full force, economy became the order of the day; emigration was re-sorted to by the Trades Unions; meat was thrown upon the market in unusual quantities to prevent the consumption of grain, and the severity of the drought was followed by a winter which, as it partook of the mildness of spring, contributed unusual supplies.

As England is the largest consumer in the world of imported wheat, the London and Liverpool markets may be said, in ordinary years, to control the quotations in all wheat-exp countries. But the price there is fixed according to the situation in the countries of supply, the object being, as wheat must be had whatever the price, to adjust it at the lowest amount which will be certain to furnish from six to nine hundred thousand quarters of imported wheat

The waters of every sea are vexed with ships loaded with grain, their prows turned toward England; and if every port in the world capable of selling wheat were not carefully tried, it would be impossible to manage this important business so as to furnish the requisite quantity at reasonable prices. Happy are we to be ex-empt from this necessity, which sends the British merchant to every grain-producing country, and teaches the skill which enables Mark Lane to control the trade wherever grain is exported. In the United States our dealers are ever at the mercy of those who can thus m ure the exact capacity of other markets; who buy ever where grain is cheap, and abstain from buying where it is above their inflexible limits, and use in the mean time their vast financial power to compel acquiescence in their terms. The fall in the price of all exporta-ble commodities, which has accompanied the downward turn in gold, has doubtless produced a corresponding change in the quotations at Mark Lane, as it is stated in their press that they rely chiefly on the United States to furnish year their requisite supplies. The happening of the failures in Liverpool is consequently due in part to the policy now being pursued by the Treasury Department in Secring gold. If the Government shall take such measures as will make the fall permanent, which can be done only by contraction, it will have rendered a great service in lowering prices; but if the fall shall be succeeded by an upward turn, as it must if the credit circulation remains undiminished in volume, the failures which must occur at home from a forced contraction of prices will be repeated hereafter, as gold may be forced up and then down through the forbearance or the direct action of the Treasury.

Our credit circulation was made excessive in order to float the loan of 1864, and high prices followed and have since been generally maintained; but the excess of issues becomes less apparent from year to year in the proportion in which our industry and wealth are augmented; and in time from the growth of population the amount of our paper issues may not be disproportioned to our enlarged trade. Whether this policy shall be chosen, which is equivalent to contraction by slow degrees, or we shall suddealy be plunged into contraction with its inevitable result of low prices-fatal to all who are embarrassed with debts-can not be known until the temper of Congress shall be developed.

It would appear to be the part of wisdom, as prices have already fallen, to adapt the currency to them, which can be done only by lopping off an equal proportion of the latter. would involve a diminution in the quantity of both legal-tenders and national bank-notes, inasmuch as the latter are made redeemable in the former, which might be difficult if their present relative proportions to each other were changed. But in lieu of this, plans for new national banks to answer the demand of the West and South, and of new banks on the basis of coin, are proposed and supported by newspapers ordinarily regarded as indicators of com-ing events. The country is confused by these differences, as to which no light is shown by the recent utterances of the Attorney-General and others high in authority.

Their expressions in favor of a return to specie payments are not of the character to show that any matured plan had been arrived at or was in contemplation, and it may be inferred, therefore, that the subject will be referred to the wisdom of Congress, which, as its constitu-ents are composed of the debtor and creditor classes, and as the proportions of the one to the other are well understood, it is feared that no legislation will take place injurious to those of them who constitute the majority.

GEORGE PEABODY'S MONUMENT.

WHEN OLIVER GOLDSHITH lay dead in his humble lodgings, the poor people whom he had befriended sat weeping upon the stairs. And when, reading his biography, you come to that point, your own eyes are very likely to moisten; for GOLDSMITH is one of the few authors whom we all personally love. No tribute to him is nobler to our imaginations to-day, and none could have been dearer to his own childlike and honest heart, than the silent tears of his poor neighbors. And as we all read the other day, in that graphic and touch-ing letter to the Tribuse, the description of Guorgos Prancov's funeral, who tild not feel that more grateful to him than to be buried in the ancient Abbey, and to lie in the vault of kings, and to be officially mourned by queens and princes and prime ministers, would have been the respectful presence and tears of the crowds of poor people who thronged about the gates of the Abbey and bought cheap mourningcards and likenesses and a little elegiac ballad?

How many rich men, dying in New York to-day, would be followed to their graves to-morrow with the grateful tears of the poor? Can you help contrasting the story of the throng at the gates of the Abbey and the simple ballad with certain performances at the brazen dedication in St. John's Square the other day? Turn back to the newspaper files of that morning. Listen to the editorial chorus, and reflect upon it. If they had been celebrating a life and powers consecrated to the noblest purposes, what more could the papers have said? Do we really profoundly honor great riches, or the qualities that amass great riches-or the manner in which the powers and the riches are used? It seems very easy to do as Mr. Pranopy did. He was a bachelor. He had made a great fortune. He gave away millions of dollars, but he did not abridge a single personal comfort. Who could not do this? says every body who reads the story. And echo answers, How many do it? The praise of Mr. PRANODY is that, having a great opportunity, he used it greatly. As the Tribune correspondent says, here was one rich man who "had found the needle's eye," As Mr. GLAD-STORE said, "He has shown us how a man can be master of his wealth instead of its slave.

the water

From his stately funeral in the Abbey-funeral too cerementous, because the sincerest mourners, the poor people, were not admitted— from the royal vanit and the official mourning of a nation his body returns in a British ship of war, and probably with a funeral fleet attending, across the ocean. Boston will receive it with a fitting pomp of grief, and then it will be borne to its grave in Danvers. "Danvers, re-member; not a cemetery here—Danvers," were his final words, as he remembered his mother, says one who repeats them. But his more ment will be not only the houses he built for the poor, the education he has given to the ignorant, the libraries and colleges he has endowed, nor only the noble example of beneficence, nor the statues and shafts of marble that will arise, but a certain finer view of human nature -a feeling invaluable at this time in this country—that great riches need not harden a man's heart, nor make him conspicuous merely for selfishness, unscrapulousness, and valgarity.

ENGLAND IN INDIA.

THE debate upon annexation of foreign territory which is constantly proceeding in this country naturally invites consideration of the presence of England in India, and suggests the question whether, upon the whole, it has been an advantage to civilization and the world. If the history of the beginning of the British occupation is full of cruckies and tragedies, we may wisely remember the story of our own set-tlement in America, and the Indian wars and Quaker persecutions and witchcraft deviltries of our ancestors two hundred years ago. The opening of the Suez Canal again turns the attention of the world to India, and it is worth while to reflect upon a few facts in regard to England in India

The English first appeared in India as ped-dlers with their packs, bowing humbly at Mus-nuds, and licking the dust from the feet of Omrahs and of Rajahs. But when they drew the sword that has never since been long sheathed it was to defend their factories, erected under the plighted protection of the Imperial Government at Delhi, from the attacks of the Nahob of Bengal, a revolted feudatory of the Great Mogal, who, capturing the settlement at Calcutts, perpetrated the massacre of the Black At this time the Emperor of Delhi, the Great Mogul, was an emperor only in name, his great foudal chiefs, the Peishwa, the Nawaub of Oude, Holkar, and Scindia, always despising, frequently dared his power and authority. The whole country over which he nominally ruled was the prey of the wild Mahrattas, a Hindu clan, who, originally driven by the persecutions of AURUNGZERE to take refuge in the Western Ghauts, founded a state at Sutterah, from which they issued in clouds of light-horse to levy lost or tribute on every territory they could reach. They were, in effect, professed freebooters; and to talk of inhumanity in rescuing the population of India out of hands like these is indeed very much like accusing the Good Samaritan of man-stealing for bearing away to his inn the exhausted victim of thieves and assassins; although, of course, we are not denying that it was capidity, and not humanity, that sent England to India.

Bombay, the principal sea-port of Hindostan, was coded to the British by the Portuguese, as dower with the Infants when she married Channes II. of England. In our own day the principal acquisitions of territory have been Science, Oude, and the Panjab. The firstnamed country was selzed under the flimsters of pretexts, in fact it was a shameless, cowardly robbery. As for Oude, any one who has read the "Life of an Eastern King," published some fifteen years since, will agree with us that any civilized rule must confer blessings on the inhabitants of that fertile region, who had so long suffered under their own cruel, licentious, and despotic sovereigns. The Sikhs, who, under their able and astute Maharajah, RUNJERT SINGH, had been stanch allies of the British, so long as he lived to restrain their audacity, poured across the Sutlej on his death, invading English territory, and after the usual routine of defeat, treaty, breach of faith, re-newed hostilities, and final conquest, have since enjoyed the greatest prosperity under the Chris-tian Raj, and were, as is well known, the mainstay of British ascendency in the darkest hour of the mutiny of 1857.

We are apt to speak of the natives of India from Peshawur to Cape Comorin as ethnically and physically one people, just as Spain or Hol-land are populated by one race, whereas the two hundred millions of Hindostan are composed of races as diversified and distinct as the nations of Europe : indeed more so. There are the aboriginal inhabitants, the Tamuls, first invaders of the country, the Aryans, and the Mohammedans-these last the descendants of those warriors who built up the throne of Delhi, and for a time made of Hindostan an empire for their Mogul. But among the aborigines there are many tribes which are ethnically and philologically divided. There are tribes closely related to the Malay and the Chinese races, and there are others that are wholly unconnected with those branches of the human race. The number of aboriginal dialects spoken throughout India has been computed to exceed two hundred, and none of these has any marked affinity to any other.

The Mohammedans, numbering some twenty millions, are scattered all over the country, the Aryans, by which title we refer to the Hindus following some form or other of the Brahminical faith, number one hundred and twenty millions. If the British were to retire from Hindostan to-morrow, would the greater num-ber submit again to be enthralled by the bigoted minority? To whom are the Britis to resign their hard-won sovereignty? To whom are the British asked

England has given India the blessing of a stable government. She has built railroads, dug canals, covered the great rivers with fleets of steamers, and, above all, has insured to the humblest of her subjects the peaceable posses-sion of his ancestral vine and fig-tree. That the material prosperity of the country has made rapid strides is shown by the value of her exports, which, in 1834, the last year of the ex-clusive trading charter of the old East India Company, amounted to only £8,000,000 sterling, but which had increased in 1865 to no less than £68,000,000 sterling, or three hundred and forty millions of dollars.

It is sometimes asserted as a reproach, that England does not attempt to Christianize her heathen subjects. Good reason has she for caution in this particular; and wisely does the Government speak when it says, "We can not, we will not interfere with the religion of the people,2 Any other policy would set the land in a blaze from Cape Comorin to the Himaleys. The Government must stand aloof. There must not be even a suspicion of partiality shown to the convert applicant for public employment, no public favor bestowed on the Christian procelyte as such, unless it desires the bloody scenes of Cawapore and Delhi to be re-enacted as a warning to each successive

THE REASON WHY.

In the course of some remarks upon the late Convention at Cleveland to form a National Woman's Suffrage Association, the New York Times remarks; "The vast majority of men are really indifferent to the whole matter, and very willingly stand aside to leave women to settle it among themselves." The article is an amplification of this amusing statement, and its moral is, that if women do not rote it is because they do not wish to. But, if the Times really supposes that this is the fact, it should inform itself a little. If it imagines that some women do not vote because other women do not wish to, it would perhaps be useful for the Times as a public teacher, to know that the rea-son no woman votes is that men will not permit The fundamental law of the State is made by men, and it restricts the political franchise to men. It is merely absurd to say that they would carefully establish so immense an exclusion if they were wholly indifferent to it.

The Times repeats the old remark, that when the majority of women wish to vote they will be admitted to the suffrage, as a matter of course. But this is not the manner in which such changes of fundamental laws are made. Were the newly admitted voters in England polled upon the subject before the Reform hill Were the majority of the colored citizens in the Southern States asked to express a wish before the suffrage was given them? And is it also to be gravely urged that when the majority of women wish that the women who have a genius for any profession or art should devote themselves to it, they will of course be allowed to do so? The question must be decided upon quite other considerations. In there be no objection to the voting of those women who wish to vote except that certain other women do not wish to, the argument is suddenly shifted, and it becomes the duty of those who make the assertion to show why the disinclination of one person should disqualify another,

If, as is alleged in the article of which we speak, the present voters, who are men, "stand aside to leave women to settle it among themselves," why do they not remove the restriction? It is idle to speak of awaiting the demand of a majority of women, not only because it is ridiculous that an intelligent woman should be deprived of such a power by the whim of a possibly indifferent and foolish woman, but b there is no way of ascertaining the wishes of such a majority. The only sensible and practicable policy upon the subject-since even the Times concedes that men are indifferent, and that there is no serious objection—is to remove the barrier and let women decide for themselves. If nature, as Dr. BURHNELL argues, protests against their sharing political power-if considerations of sex, family, taste, ridicule, forbid such action upon their part, let us have those truthe made manifest,

The Times indeed asserts that ninety-nine women out of every hundred are opposed to their own admission to the suffrage. But it offers no proof that its assertion is tree; and if it were true, it is of no more importance as an argument than the assertion of the British Government in 1775 that the American revolutionists were a mere faction, and not the people of of the Colonies. Mr. WERSTER, the Times may remember, was fond of saying that the Revolution was fought upon a preamble; and a few resolute and sagacious man with a just preamble carried the independence of the Colonies. If the claim made by some thoughtful women is in itself reasonable, what has the indifference of even a greater number of women to do with the question? If it is not desirable that women should share political power, how can it become desirable because more or less of them wish it?

THE attention of those of our renders seeking safe and remunerative investments is invited to the advertisement of Mossrs. FISE & HATCH on the last page of this Number of the Weekly. The mere fact that these gentlemen recommend a "security" is evidence of its soundness,

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Tax Secretary of State has informed Hon, John Lynch, Chairman of the Special Committee on Navi-gation interests, that he has instructed all our Consuls, including those in the Canadian Dominion, to notice and furnish the Committee with the information de-sired by them relative to shipteriiding in the countries where they are located.

sired by them relative to shipbatiding in the countries where they are located.

In accordance with instructions received from the President, United States Diacrict-Actorney Pierreport, on Nevember 84, "libeled" the thirty Spanish gambonis which the Spanish Government have had furth this country, and which are now nearly ready for sea. It is reported that the occasion of this proceeding was the Sear lest sympathicers with the Cuban came might attempt their destruction. The ground of the libel of information issued by the District-Atterney is, that the vessels are to be used against the Parusian Government. The case course before the District-Court December 14.

Albert B. Richardson, a well-known journalist, was shot by Daniel M'Farland in the Tribuxe counting-room, on the sweming of November 8. Jeakony is supposed to have been the motive of the set.

An attempt was made on the morning of November 21 to blow up the Hodson County Jell, at Hodson City, New Jersey. An explosion occurred which made a long break in the south wall, but none of the prisoness secaped.

The new Hostice Michales was formed to oners secaped.

The new Haytien Minister was formally presented to President Grant November 22, and the usual court-

The new Haytien Minister was formally presented to President Grant November II, and the usual courtessies were exchanged.

A petition is to be presented to Congress early in the next session praying that beligneest rights be accorded to Cote, and her independence recognized. This petition has already received 18,000 eignatures, and will, it is expected, have 48,000 before the assembling of Congress.

The completion of the "New York, Finshing, and North Blide Bailroad" to Whitestone, on Long Island Sound, was celebrated, November II, with great enthalsam by the people living on the line of the road, who timed not an unuse to welcome the first tributat passed over the road from Finshing to Whitestone, bearing an excursion party, numbering a hundred gontlemen or more, from this city. The completion of this read opens up the thriving manufacturing villages of College Points and Whitestone to case and rapid communication with New York, readering them more convenient of accoss than Nowark and other cities in New Jersey of far less material advantages, which have grown to be large manufacturing towns by means of railroid facilities. The credit of this new esterprise is due entirely to the citizens of Finshing, who have built the railroad without any conside assistance, at a cost of nearly a million of dollars. Chief among the promotion of the road. Mr. Orange Judd, and Mr. John D. Lacke. Loughridge's patent carchesias are attached to every engine, and every thing connected with the road is as perfect as the means afforded by modern inventive genius would permit. The result is, that it is beyond question the safest and the easiest riding railway that runs out of New York.

FOREIGN NEWS.

This Republican Deputies who recently absented themselves from the Spanish Coetes returned in a body November St. The Spanish Government amnounces its intention to restore the constitutional guarantees lately abrogated on account of the insurgection. On the 57th the Republicans moved a vote of consure against the Government for arbitrary use of power, which was rejected 348 to 18.

The Spanish Cortes has passed a vote of thanks to M. De Lessays, the President-Director of the flows Canal. A draft of a Constitution for Porto Rice was read in the Cortes on November 34. Forbidding the discussion of separation, and excluding above from all rights until enzancipated.

Within three weeks recently 34,000 volunteers were shipped from Spain to Cuba.
General Duloa, fermorily Captain-General of Cuba, deed November 38, agrel 49.

Dispatches from Home state that the members of the Geomesical Council will meet at the Vatican on the 8th of December, and, at the conclusion of the preliminary coremosiles, the Pope will amounce the opening of the Council.

The completion of the Sear Canal, it seems, has already affected the rate of freights to and from Indianal California and Policy and Archive and Archive Council Conf.

The completion of the Sucz Canal, it seems, has a ready affected the rate of freights to and from Ind and China around the Cape of Good Hope. A serior and China around the Cape of Good Hope. A serious decline has taken place.

M. De Leeseps, the chief engineer of the Sour Canal, has publicly denied the unfavorable reports which have been recently circulated about that great enterprise. He calle attention to the fact that in ten chays no less than 6fty vessels salled safely through the canal and back.

The Walton protests against the act of the Viceroy of Egypt in proclaiming the neutrality of the Baca Canal as a tempes on his coversignity.

The most notable result of the recent supplementary elections in Paris was the return of M. Hochafort from the First Chromneription. There was no disturbance.

Mr. Bartingame and the Chinese Embasey are at

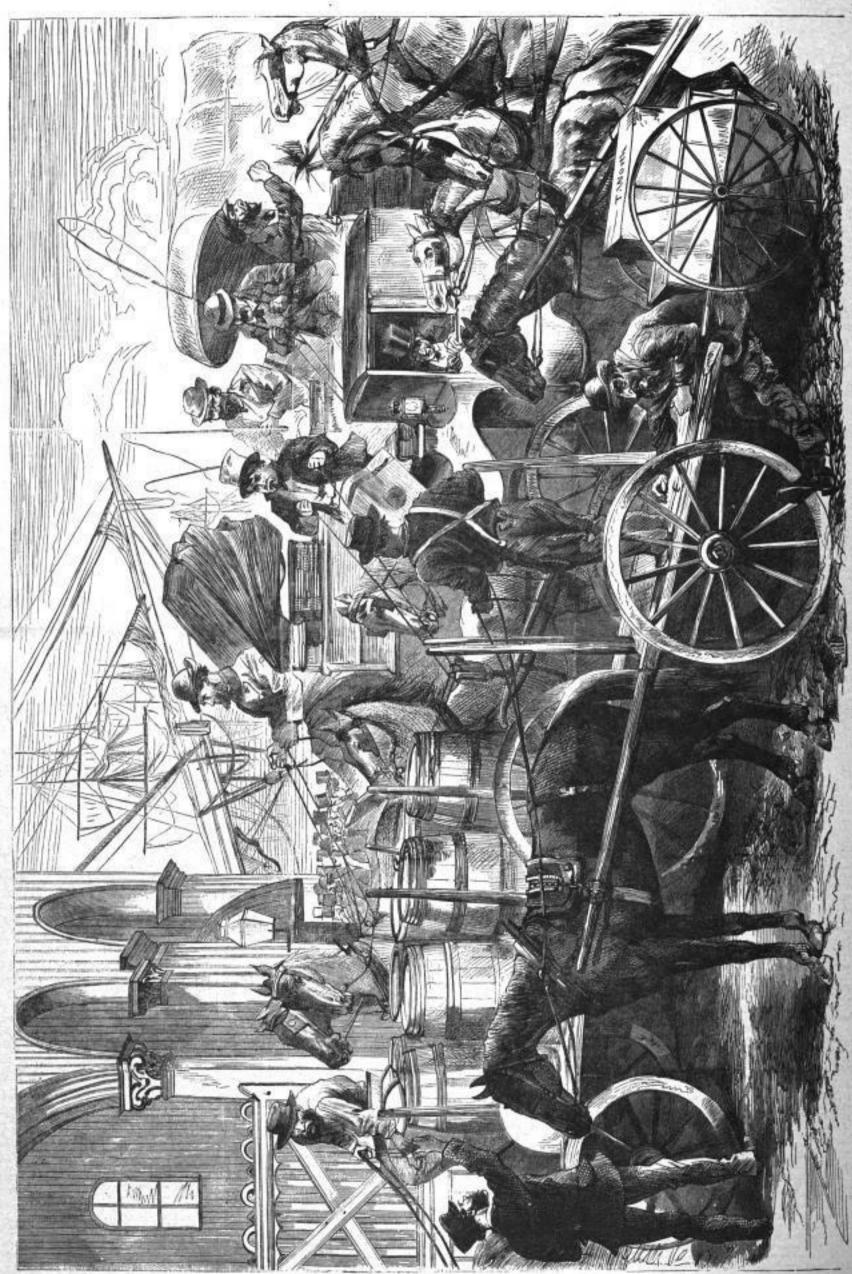

Mr. Burlingame and the Chinese Embassy are at Berlin. United States Consul-General Plumb, at Havans, has resigned.

The members of the Italian Cabinet have resigned, and a new Ministry has been organized under General Members. and a new minimal and the following and the series of the carthquake at that port which extended through the Philippine group of minima. At Manila eight lives were lost.

The recent election in Newfoundland has resulted successfully for the opponents of Cantederation. The racessfully for the opponents of Confederation. The full returns show that twenty-one Anti-Confederates and nine Confederates have been elected.

JAM AT THE PERRY GATE. - [SERFCRED BY THOMAS WORTE.]

[Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1860, by HARRER & BROTHERS, in the Ulark's Office of the Detrict Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.]

MAN AND WIFE.

By WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "The Mooustone," etc., etc.

WITH ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

THE PLAN.

Sun took his hand, and began with all the art of persuasion that she possessed.

"One question, Geoffrey, before I say what I want to say. Lady Lundie has invited you to stay at Windygates. Do you accept her invitation? or do you go back to your brother's in the evening?"

"I can't go back in the evening—they've put a visitor into my room. I'm obliged to stay here. my brother has done it on purpose. Julius helps me when I'm hard up—and bullies me afterward. He has sent me here, on duty for the family. Somebody must be civil to Lady Lundie—and I'm the sacrifice.'

She took him up at his last word. "Don't make the sacrifice," she said. "Apologize to Lady Lundie, and say you are obliged to go

"Because we must both leave this place today."

There was a double objection to that. If he left Lady Lundie's, he would fail to establish a left Lady Lundie's, he would fail to establish a left Lady Lundie's in leasther's indulfuture pecuniary claim on his brother's indul-gence. And if he left with Anne, the eyes of gence. And if he left with Anne, the eyes of the world would see them, and the whispers of the world might come to his father's ears.

"If we go away together," he said, "good-by to my prospects, and yours too."

"I don't mean that we shall leave together," she explained. "We will leave soparately—and I will go first."

"There will be a hue and cry after you, when you are missed."

when you are missed."
"There will be a dance when the croquet is "There will be a dance when the croquet is over. I don't dance—and I shall not be missed. There will be time, and opportunity, to get to my own room. I shall leave a letter there for Lady Lundle, and a letter"—her voice trembled for a moment—"and a letter for Blanche. Don't interrupt me! I have thought of this, as I have thought of this, as I have thought of every thing else. The confession I shall make will be the truth in a few hours, if it's not the truth now. My letters will say I am privately married, and called now unexpectedly to join my hasband. There will be a scandial in the homse, I know. But there will be no excuse for sending after me, when I am under my husband's precection. So far as you are personally concerned there are no discoveries to fear—and nothing which it is not perfectly safe and perfectly easy to do. Wait here an hour after I have gone to save appearances; and then follow me. gone to save appearances; and then follow me."
"Follow you?" interposed Geoffrey. "Where?"

She drew her chair nearer to him, and whis-pered the next words in her car.

"To a lonely little mountain inn-four miles from this.

"An inn!"
"Why not?"

"An inn is a public place." A movement of natural impatience escaped -but she controlled herself, and went on as her—but she cont quietly as before:

"The place I mean is the loneliest place in the neighborhood. You have no prying eyes to dread there. I have picked it out expressly for that reason. It's away from the railway; it's away from the high-road; it's kept by a decent, respectable Scotchwoman—" respectable Scotchwoman—Decent, respectable Scotchwomen who keep inns, "interposed Geoffrey, "don't cotton to young ladies who are traveling alone. The landlady won't receive you."

It was a well-aimed objection—but it missed the mark. A woman bent on her marriage is a woman who can meet the objections of the whole world, single-handed, and refute them all. "I have provided for every thing," she said; "and I have provided for that. I shall tell the landlady I am on my wedding-trip. I shall say my husband is sight-seeing, on foot, among the mountains in the neighborhood—"

"She is sure to believe that!" said Geoffrey.

"She is sure to disbelieve it, if you like. Let You have only to appear, and to ask for yeur wife—and there is my story proved to be true! She may be the most suspicious woman living, as long as I am alone with her. The moment you join me, you set her suspicious at rest. Leave me to do my part. My part is the hard one. Will you do yours?" It was impossible to say No: she had fairly cut the ground from under his feet. He shifted his ground. Any thing rather than say Yes!

his ground. Any many how we are to be mar"I suppose you know how we are to be married?" he asked. "All I can say is—I don't."
Ton know that "You do!" she retorted. "You know that we are in Scotland. You know that there are neither forms, ceremonies, nor delays in marriage, here. The plan I have proposed to you secures my being received at the ism, and makes it easy and natural for you to join me there afterward. The rest is in our own hands. A manned a woman who will be a becaused in the contract of t and a woman who wish to be married (in Secand) have only to socure the necessary witnesses and the thing is done. If the landledy chooses to resent the deception practiced on her, after that, the landledy may do as she pleases. We shall have gained our object in spite of her—and, what is more, we shall have gained it without risk to yea."

"Don't lay it all on my shoulders," Geoffrey rejoined. "You women go headlong at every thing. Say we are married. We must separate afterward—or how are we to keep it a secret?"

"Certainly. You will go back, of course, to your brother's house, as if nothing had hap-

"And what is to become of you?
"I shall go to London."

"I shall go to London."

"What are you to do in London?"

"Haven't I already told you that I have thought of every thing? When I get to London I shall apply to some of my mother's old friends—friends of hers in the time when she was a musician. Every body tells me I have a voice—if I had only cultivated it. I will cultivate it! I can live, and live respectably, as a concert incer. I have saved money enough to support singer. I have saved money enough to support me, while I am learning—and my mother's friends will help me, for her sake."

So, in the new life that she was marking out, was she now unconsciously reflecting in herself the life of her mother before her. Here was the mother's career as a public singer, chosen (in spite of all efforts to prevent is) by the child! Here (though with other motives, and under other circumstances) was the mother's irregular mar-riage in Ireland, on the point of being followed by the daughter's irregular marriage in Scotland! And here, stranger still, was the man who was answerable for it—the son of the man who had answerable for is—the son of the main who had found the flaw in the Irish marriage, and had shown the way by which her mother was thrown on the world! "My Anne is my second self. She is not called by her father's name; she is called by mine. She is Anne Silvester as I was. Will she end like Me?"—The answer to those words—the last words that had trembled on the driver mother's line—was coming fast. Through dying mother's lips—was coming fast. Through the chances and changes of many years, the fu-ture was pressing near—and Anne Silvester stood on the brink of it.

Well?" she resumed. "Are you at the end of your objections? Can you give me a plain answer at last?" Mrs., instead of Miss, Silvester. But I shall do my best to avoid giving any name. And you will do your best to avoid making a mistake, by only asking for me as your wife. Is there any thing else you want to know?"
"Yes."

"Be quick about it! What is it?"

"How am I to know you have got away from here?"

"If you don't hear from me in half an hour
"If you don't hear from me in half an hour

"If you don't hear from me in half an hour from the time when I have left you, you may be sure I have got nway. Hush!"

Two voices, in conversation, were and the at the bottom of the steps—Lady Lundie's voice and Sir Patrick's. Anne pointed to the door in the back wall of the summer-house. She had just pulled it to again, after Geoffrey had passed through it, when Lady Lundie and Sir Patrick appeared at the top of the steps.

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

Lady Lewest pointed significantly to the door, and addressed herself to Sir Patrick's pri-

"Observe!" she said. "Miss Silvester has just got rid of somebody." Sir Patrick deliberately looked in the wrong direction, and (in the politest possible manner observed—nothing.

Lady Lundle advanced into the summerhouse. Suspicious histred of the governess was written legibly in every line of her face. Suspicious distrust of the governess's illness spoke plainly in every tone of her voice.

"May I inquire, Miss Silvester, if your sufferings are relieved?"

"I am no better, Lady Lundie."

"I beg your perdon?"
"I said I was no better."

"You appear to be able to stand up. When I am ill, I am not so fortunate. I am compelled to lie down."

"HE TOUCHED THE KNOB OF HIS CANE, AND HELPED HIMSELP, WITH INFINITE KEST AND ENJOYMENT, TO A PINCH OF SNUFF.

No! He had another objection ready as the words passed her lips.

words passed her lips.

"Suppose the witnesses at the inn happen to know me?" he said. "Suppose it comes to my finther's ears in that way?"

"Suppose you drive me to my death?" she retorted, starting to her feet. "Your father shall know the truth, in that case—I swear it?"

He rose, on his side, and drew back from her. She followed him up. There was a clapping of hands at the same moment, on the lawn. Some-hands, at the same moment, on the lawn. Some-body had evidently made a brilliant stroke which promised to decide the game. There was no se-curity now that Blanche might not return again. There was every prospect, the game being over, that Lady Lundie would be free. Ame brought the interview to its crisis, without wasting a moment more. "Mr. Geoffrey Delamayn," she said. "You have bargained for a private marriage, and I have consented. Are you, or are you not, ready to marry me on your own terms?

"Give me a minute to think! " Not an instant. Once for all, is it Yes, or

He couldn't say "Yes," even then. But he and what was equivalent to it. He asked, sav-agely, "Where is the inn?"

She put her arm in his, and whispered, rapidly,
"Pass the road on the right that leads to the railway. Follow the path over the moor, and the sheep-track up the hill. The first house you come to after that is the inn. You understand!"

He nodded his head, with a sullen frown, and took his pipe out of his pocket again.

"Let it alone this time," he said, meeting her eye. "My mind's upset. When a man's mind's upset, a man must brooke. What's the name of the place?"

"Craig Fernie."

"Who am I to ask for at the door?"
"For your wife."

"Suppose they want you to give your name when you get there?"
"If I must give a name, I shall call myself

"I will follow your example, Lady Lundie.

"I will follow your example, Lady Lundie. If you will be so good as to excuse me, I will leave you, and lie down in my own room."

She could say no more. The interview with Geoffrey had wern her out; there was no spirit left in her to resist the petty malice of the woman, after bearing, as she had borne it, the brutish indifference of the man. In snother moment the hysterical suffering which she was keeping down would have forced its way outward in tears. Without waiting to know whether she was ex-Without waiting to know whether she was ex-ensed or not, without stopping to hear a word more, she left the summer-bosse.

Lady Lundie's magnificent black eyes opened to their utmost width, and blazed with their most dazsling brightness. She appealed to Sir Patrick, poised easily on his ivery cane, and look-ing out at the lawn party, the picture of venerable innocence.

"After what I have already told you, Sir Patrick, of Miss Silvester's conduct, may whether you consider that proceeding at all extraordinary?

The old gentleman touched the spring in the knob of his care, and answered, in the courtly manner of the old school: "I consider no proceeding extraordinary, Lady Lundie, which emanates from your enchanting

He bowed, and took his pinch. With a little jaunty flourish of the hand, he dusted the stray of snuff off his finger and thumb, as looked back again at the lawn party, and became more absorbed in the diversions of his young friends than ever,

Lady Lundie stood her ground, plainly determined to force a serious expression of opinion from her brother-in-law. Before she could speak again, Arnold and Blanche appeared together at the bottom of the steps, "And when does the dancing begin?" inquired Sir Patrick, hobbling out to meet them, and looking as if he felt the deepest interest in a speedy settlement of the

"The very thing I was going to ask mamms," returned Blanche. "Is she in there with Anne? Is Anne better?

Lady Lundie forthwith appeared, and took the answer to that inquiry on herself.

"Miss Silvester has retired to her room. Miss Silvester persists in being ill. Have you noticed, Sir Patrick, that these half-bred sort of people Sir Patrick, that these half-bred sort of people are almost invariably rude when they are ill?"

Blanche's bright face flushed up. "If you think Anne a half-bred person, Lady Lundie, you stand alone in your equaion. My uncle doesn't agree with yos, I'm sure."

Sir Patrick's interest in the first quadrille became almost painful to see. "Lb tell me, my dear, when is the dancing going to bogin?"

"The sooner the better," interposed Lady Lundie; "before Blanche picks another quarrel with me on the subject of Miss Silvester."

Blanche looked at her uncle. "Begin! begin! Don's lose time!" cried the ardent Sir Pairrick, pointing toward the house with his cane. "Certainly, uncle! Any thing that you wish!"

With that parting shot at, her step mother, Blanche withdrew. Amold, who had thus far waited in silence at the foot of the steps, looked appealingly at Sir Patrick. The train which was to take him to his newly inherited property would stept in less than an hour; and had not a desired. appearingly at Set Patrick. The train which was to take him to his newly inherited property would start in less than an hour; and he had not pre-sented himself to Blanche's guardian in the char-acter of Blanche's suitor yet! Set Patrick's in-difference to all domestic claims on him—claims of persons who loved, and claims of persons who hated, it didn't matter which—remained perfect-ly unassailable. There he stood, poised on his ly unassailable. There he stood, poised on his cone, humming an old Scotch air. And there was Lady Landie, resolute not to leave him till he had seen the governess with Acr eyes and judged the governess with Acr mind. She returned to the charge—in spite of Sir Patrick, humaning at the top of the steps, and of Arnold, waiting at the bottom. (Her enemies said, "No wonder poor Sir Thomas died in a few months after his marriage!" And, oh dear me, our enemies are sometimes right!)

"I must once more remind yon, Sir Patrick, that I have serious reason to doubt whether Miss Silvester is a fit companion for Blanche. My Silvester is a fit companion for Blanche. My governess has something on her mind. She has fits of crying in private. She is up and walking about her room when she ought to be asleep. She posts her own letters—and, she has lately been excessively insolent to Me. There is something wrong. I must take some steps in the matter—and it is only proper that I should do so with your sanction, as head of the family."

"Consider me as abdicating my position, Lady Lundie, in your favor."

"Sir Patrick, I beg you to observe that I am speaking seriously, and that I expect a serious My good lady, ask me for any thing else and

"My good lady, ask me for any thing else and it is at your service. I have not made 'a serious reply since I gave up practice at the Scettish Bar. At my age," added Sir Patrick, cunningly drifting into generalities, "nothing is serious—except Indigestion. I say, with the philosopher, 'Life is a comedy to those who think, and a tragedy to those who feel." He took his sister-in-law's hand, and kissed it. "Dear Lady Lundie, why feel?"

Lady Lundie, who had never "felt" in her life, appeared perversely determined to fiel. on appeared perversely determined to feel, on occasion. She was offended—and she showed it plainly.

"When you are next called on, Sir Patrick, to judge of Miss Silvester's conduct," she said, "unless I am entirely mistaken, you will find yourself cospelled to consider it as something beyond a joke." With those words, she walked out of the summer-house—and so forwarded Ar-nold's interests by leaving Blanche's guardian elone at last.

ejone at last.

It was an excellent opportunity. The guests were safe in the house—there was no interruption to be feared. Arnold showed himself. Sir Patrick (perfectly undisturbed by Lady Lundie's parting speech) sat down in the summer-house, without noticing his young friend, and asked himself a question founded on profunnd observation of the female sex. "Were there ever two women yet with a quarrel between them," thought the cld gentleman, "who didn't want to drag a man into it? Let them drag see is, if they can t" the old gentleman, "who didn't want to drag a man into it? Let them drag me in, if they can !

Arnold advanced a step, and modestly an-sounced himself. "I hope I am not in the way,

"In the way? of course not! Bless my soul, how serious the boy looks! Are you going to appeal to me as the head of the family mext?" It was exactly what Arnold was about to do.

But it was plain that if he admitted it just then Sir Patrick (for some unintelligible reason) would decline to listen to him. He answered cantiously, "I asked leave to consult you in private, Sir; and you kindly said you would give me the op-portunity before I left Windygates?"

"Ay! ay! to be sure. I remember. We were both engaged in the serious business of cro-quet at the time—and it was doubtful which of us did that business most clumsily. Well, here is the opportunity; and here am I, with all my worldly experience, at your service. I have only one caution to give you. Don't appeal to me as the head of the family. My resignation is in My resignation is in Lady Landie's hands.

He was, as usual, helf in jest, half in earnest. The wry twist of humor showed itself at the cor-ners of his lips. Arnold was at a loss how to approach Sir Patrick on the subject of his niece without reminding him of his domestic responsi-bilities on the one hand, nod without setting himbilities on the one hand, and without setting himself up as a target for the shafts of Sir Patrick's wit on the other. In this difficulty, he committed a mistake at the outset. He hesitated.

"Don't hurry yourself," said Sir Patrick.
"Collect your ideas. I ban wait! I can wait!"
Amold collected his ideas—and committed a second mistake. He determined on feeling his way cautiously at first. Under the circumstances

(and with such a man as he had now to deal with), it was perhaps the rashest resolution at which he could possibly have arrived—it was the mouse attempting to outmaneuvre the cat.

"You have been very kind, Sir, in offering me the benefit of your experience," he began. "I want a word of advice."

"Suppose you take it sitting?" suggested Sir Patrick. "Get a chair." His sharp eyes fol-lowed Arnold with an expression of malicious enjoyment. "Wants my advice?" he thought. "The young humbur wars methics of the enjoyment. "Wants my advice?" he thought.
"The young humbug wants nothing of the sort he wants my niece." Arnold sat down under Sir Patrick's eye, with a well-founded suspicion that he was destined to suffer, before he got up again, under Sir Patrick's

"I am only a young man," he went on, mov-ing uneasily in his chair; "and I am beginning

"Any thing wrong with the chair?" saked Sir Patrick. "Begin your new life comfortably, and get another."

There's nothing wrong with the chair, Sir.

"Would I keep the chair, in that case? Cer-

"I mean, would you advise me

"My good fellow, I'm waiting to advise you.

(I'm sure there's something wrong with that chair. Why be obstinate about it? Why not get another?)"

Please don't notice the chair, Sir Patrickyou put me out. I want—in short—perhaps it's you put me out. I want—in short—perhaps it's a curious question—"

"I can't say till I have heard it," remarked Sir Patrick. "However, we will admit it, for form's take, if you like. Say it's a curious question. Or let us express it more strongly, if that will help you. Say it's the most extraordinary question that ever was put, since the beginning of the world, from one human being to another."

"It's this!" Arnold burst out, desperately.
"I want to be married!"

" Want to be married!"
"That isn't a question," objected Sir Patrick.
"It's an assertion. You say, I want to be married. And I say, Just so! And there's an end of it." "I want to be married!"

Arnold's head began to whirl. "Would you advise me to get married, Sir?" he said, pitcously. "That's what I meant."

ir. "That's what I means.
"Oh! That's the object of the present interview, is it? Would I advise you to marry, ch?" view, is it? Would I advise you to marry, enr (Having caught the mouse by this time, the cat lifted his paw and let the luckless little creat-Sir Patrick's manner suddenly freed itself from any slight signs of impa-tionce which it might have hitherto shown, and became as pleasantly easy and confidential as a manner could be. He touched the knob of his tane, and helped himself, with infinite rest and enjoyment, to a pinch of snuff.)

whent, to a pinch of suum.)
Would I advise you to marry?" repeated Patrick. "Two courses are open to us, Mr.
old, in treating that question. We may put Arrised, in returng time questions y it briefly, or we may put it at great length. I am for putting it briefly. What do you say?"
"What you say, Sir Patrick."
"Very good. May I begin by making an inquiry relating to your past life?"
"Certainly!"

ertainly

"Very good again. When you were in the merchant service, did you ever have any experience in buying provisions ashere?"

Arnold stared. If any relation existed between that question and the subject in hand it was an impeneurable relation to him. He answered, in unconcealed bewilderment,

"Plenty of experience, Sir."

"I'm coming to the point," pursued Sir Patrick. "Don't be astonished. I'm coming to the point. What did you think of your moist angar when you bought it at the grocer's?"
"Think?" repeated Arnold. "Why, I thought it was moist sugar, to be sure!"

"Marry, by all means!" cried Sir Patrick.

"You are one of the few men who can try that

The suddenness of the answer fairly took away
Arnold's breath. There was something perfectjr electric in the brevity of his venerable friend.
He stared harder than ever.

"Don't you understand me?" asked Sir Pat

"I don't understand what the moist sugar has got to do with it, Sir.

"You don't see that?"
"Not a bit!"

"Then I'll show you," said Sir Patrick, crossing his legs, and setting in comfortably for a good talk. "You go to the tea-shop, and get your moist sugar. You take it on the understanding that it t any thing of se most tager. But it said any taking or second. It's a compound of adulterations made up to look like sugar. You shut your eyes to that awkward fact, and swallow your adulterated mess in various articles of food; and you and t sugar. But i mess in various articles of food; and you and your sugar got on together in that way as well as you can. Do you follow me, so far?"

Yes. Arnold (quite in the dark) followed, so far, "Very good," pursued Sir Patrick. "You "Very good," pursued Sir Patrick. "You go to the marriage-shop, and get a wife. You take her on the understanding—let us say—that she has lovely yellow hair, that she has an exquisite complexion, that her figure is the perfection of plumpness, and that the is just tall enough to carry the plumpness off. You bring her home, and you discover that it's the old story of the marriage or main. Your wife is on edd story of the sugar over again. Your wife is an adul-terated article. Her lovely yellow hair is—dve. Her exquisite skin is—pearl powder. Her plumpness is—padding. And three inches of her height are—in the boot-maker's beels. Shut your eyes, and swallow your adulterated wife as w your adulterated sugar-and, I tell you again, you are one of the few men wh try the marriage experiment with a fair chance of success."

With that he uncrossed his legs again, and looked hard at Arnold. Arnold read the lesson, at last, in the right way. He gave up the hopeless attempt to circumvent Sir Patrick, and—come what might of it—dashed at a direct allusion to Sir Patrick's niece.

"That may be all very true, Sir, of some young ladies," he said. "There is one I know of, who is nearly related to you, and who doesn't deserve what you have said of the rest of them."

This was coming to the point. Sir Patrick showed his approval of Arnold's frankness by showed his approval of Arnold's frankness by coming to the point himself, as readily as his own whimsical humor would let him.

"Is this female phenomenon my niece?" he

Yes, Sir Patrick."

"May I ask how you know that my niece is not an adulterated article, like the rest of them?" Arnold's indignation loosened the last re-raints that tied Arnold's tongue. He exploded straints that tied Arnold's tongue. in the three words which mean three volum every circulating library in the kingdom.
"I love her."

Sir Patrick sat back in his chair, and stretched out his legs luxuriously.

"That's the most convincing answer I ever heard in my life," he said.

"I'm in earnest!" cried Arnold, reckless by

"I'm in earmest!" creen Armon, the this time of every consideration but one. "Put me to the test, Sir! put me to the test!"
"Oh, very well. The test is easily put." He

"Oh, very well. The test is easily put." He looked at Arnold, with the irrepressible humor twinkling merrily in his eyes, and twitching sharply at the corners of his lips. "My niece has a beautiful complexion. Do you believe in her complexion?"

"There's a beautiful sky above our beads," returned Arnold. "I believe in the sky."
"Do you?" retorted Sir Patrick. "You were evidently never caught in a shower. My niece has an immense quantity of hair. Are you convinced that it all grows on her head?"

"I defy any other woman's head to produce the like of it!"

"My dear Arnold, you greatly underrate the existing resources of the trade in hair! Look into the shop-windows. When you next go to London pray look into the shop-windows. In the mean time, what do you think of my niece's fours?"

"Ob, come! there can't be any doubt about that! Any man, with eyes in his head, can see it's the loveliest figure in the world." Sir Patrick laughed softly, and crossed his legs again.

"My good fellow, of course it is! The love "My good fellow, of course it is! The love-lest figure in the world is the commonest thing in the world. At a rough guess, there are forty ladies at this lawn party. Every one of them possesses a beautiful figure. It varies in price; and when it's particularly seductive, you may swear it comes from Paris. Why, how you stare! When I asked you what you thought of my nicee's figure, I meant—how much of it comes from Nature, and how much of it comes from from Nature, and how much of it comes from the Shop? I don't know, mind! Do you?" "I'll take my oath to every inch of it!"

"Shop?" "Nature!"

Sir Patrick rose to his feet; his estirical humor was silenced at last.

"If ever I have a son," he thought to himself,
"that son shall go to sea!" He took Arnold's arm, as a preliminary to putting an end to Ar-nold's suspense. "If I can be serious about any thing," he resumed, "it's time to be serious with I am convinced of the sincerity of your and your birth and position are beyond dispute.

If you have Blanche's consent, you have mine."

Arnold attempted to express his gratitude. Sir

"And hadining to bear him, went on. "And Arnold attempted to explain, went on. "And Patrick, declining to hear him, went on. "And remember this, in the future. When you next remember this, in the future. When you next want any thing that I can give you, ask for it plainly. Don't attempt to mystify us on the next occasion, and I will promise, on my side, not to mystify you. There, that's understood.

Now about this journey of yours to see your estate. Property has its duties, Master Arnold, as well as its rights. The time is fast approaching when its rights will be disputed, if its duties are not preferred. ing when its rights will be disputed, if its duties are not performed. I have got a new interest in you, and I mean to see that you do your duty. It's settled you are to leave Windygates to-day. Is it arranged how you are to go?"

"Yes, Sir Patrick. Lady Lundie has kindly erdered the gig to take me to the station, in tim e next train." "When are you to be ready?"

Arnold looked at his watch. "In a quarter of an hour. Very good. Mind you are ready. Sto minute! you will have plenty of time to speak to Blanche when I have done with you. You don't appear to me to be sufficiently anxious about ing your own property.

"I am not very anxious to leave Blanche, Sir-that's the truth of it."

"Never mind Blanche. Blanche is not busi "Never mind Blanche. Blanche is not buss-ness. They both begin with a B—and that's the only connection between them. I hear you have got one of the finest houses in this part of Scotland. How long are you going to stay in it?" "I have arranged (as I have already told you, Sir) to return to Windygates the day after to-morrow."

What! Here is a man with a palace waiting to receive him-and he is only going to stop one clear day in it!"

"I am not going to stop in it at all, Sir Patrick-I am going to stay with the steward. I'm only wanted to be present to-morrow at a dinner to my tenants—and, when that's over, there's nothing in the world to prevent my coming back here. The steward himself told me so in his

"Oh, if the steward told you so, of course there is nothing more to be said!"

it all belongs to her as well as to me

"Gendy! gently! you talk as if you were married to her already!"

ne, Sir! Where's the dif-"It's as good as do ficulty in the way now?"

As he saked the question the shadow As he asked the question the snanow of the third person, advancing from the side of the snanower-house, was thrown forward on the open the top of the steps. In a mosunhit space at the top of the steps. In a mo-ment more the shadow was followed by the sub-stance—in the shape of a groom in his rising livery. The man was plainly a stranger to the place. He started, and touched his hat, when he the two gentlemen in the summer-bouse. What do you want?" asked Sir Patrick. "I beg your pardon, Sir; I was sent by my master

"Who is your master?"
"The Honorable Mr. Delamayn, Sr."
"Do you mean Mr. Geoffrey Delamayn?" asked Arnold.

"No, Sir. Mr. Geoffrey's brother-Mr. Julius. I have ridden over from the house, Sir, with a message from my master to Mr. Geof-

"Can't you find him?"
"Can't you find him?"
"They told me I should find him hereabouts.
Sir. But I'm a stranger, and don't rightly know where to look." He stopped, and took a card where to look." My master said it was He stopped, and took a card tet. "My master said it was where to look. The stopped, and took a card out of his pocket. "My master said it was very important I should deliver this immedi-ately. Would you be pleased to tell me, gen-tlemen, if you happen to know where Mr. Gooffrey is? Arnold turned to Sir Patrick. "I haven't seen him. Have you?"

"I have smelt him," answered Sir Patrick,
"erer since I have been in the summer-house.
There is a detestable taint of tobacco in the air—suggestive (disagreeably suggestive to my mind) of your friend, Mr. Delamayn."

Arnold laughed, and stepped outside the summer-house.

"If you are right, Sir Patrick, we will find m at once." He looked around, and shouted, im at once." Geoffrey!" e from the rose-garden shouted back,

"You're wanted. Come here!"

Geoffrey appeared, sauntering doggedly, with his pipe in his mouth, and his hands in his pock-

"Who wants me?"

" A groom-from your brother." That answer appeared to electrify the loung-ing and lazy athlete. Geoffrey hurried, with eager steps, to the summer-house. He ad-dressed the groom before the man had time to speak. With horror and dismay in his face, he exclaimed:

"By Jupiter! Rateatcher has relapsed!" Sir Patrick and Arnold looked at each other

The best horse in my brother's stables!" cried Geoffrey, explaining, and appealing to them, in a breath. "I left written directions with the coachman; I measured out his physic for three days; I bled him, "said Geoffrey, in a voice broken by emotion—"I bled him myself, last night."

last night."

"I beg your pardon, Sir—" began the groom.

"What's the use of begging my pardon?
You're a pack of infernal fools! Where's your horse? I'll ride back, and break every bose in the coachman's skin! Where's your horse?"

The back of th "If you please, Sir, it isn't Ratentcher. Rat-"Hateatcher's all right? Then what the devil is it?"

"It's a message, Sir."

"About what?"

"About my lord."

"Oh! About my father?" He took out his handkerchief, and passed it over his forebead, with a deep gasp of relief. "I thought it was Hateatcher," he said, looking at Arnold, with a smile. He put his pipe into his mouth, and rekindled the dying ashes of the tobacco. "Well?" he went on, when the pipe was in working order, and his voice was composed again. "What's up with my father?"

"A telegram from London, Sir. Bad news of my lord. The man produced his master's card.

Geoffrey read on it (written in his brother's handwriting) these words: "I have only a moment to scribble a line on my card. Our father is dangerously ill-his lawyer has been sent for. London by the first train. Meet at the junc-

Without a word to any one of the three per-sons present, all silently looking at him, Geoffrey consulted his watch. Anne had told him to wait half an hour, and to assume that she had gone if he failed to hear from her in that time. The interval had passed—and no communication of any sort had reached him. The flight from the house had been safely accomplished. Anne Sil-vester was, at that moment, on her way to the mountain in a. vester was, at that m mountain ins.

MY NEIGHBORS.

Varies all shapes, and mixes all extremes. Page

In a convalencent state, after a serious illness that had rendered me wholly incapable of mental exertion, I sat in my arm chair by the fire, while on the table near me lay a volume of Engene Sue's "Wandering Jew," and another contain-Suc's "Wandering Jew," and another contain-ing a portion of the history of the renowned Pantagruel. I had been dreamily turning over the leaves of both, and had been much impressed

"Don't object to my coming back! pray don't, Sir Patrick! I'll promise to live in my new house, when I have got Blanche to live in it with me. If you won't mind, I'll go and tell her at once that a new world, the inhabitants of which had the vaguest notions of every thing that passed be-yond their own sphere.

yond their own sphere.

"Is not every one in London," I asked myself, "much in the condition of the man who planted cabbages within the precincts of Pantagroci s jawa, and only had the faintess knowledge at there was another would illumined by a sun and m.on? I have lived at least six years in this house, and what do I know of a certain Miss Thugleigh, who lives next door, and of whose ugly name I should never have heard, had not a letter, directed to her, been brought to me ac-cidentally by the postman? She has never left home at any time when I have been looking out of window; she is nover in her garden, which, by-the-way, is in a most neglected state. I am only reminded of her existence by an occasional noise. In London and its suburbs, save by some rare accident, is not every one in pretty nearly the same position as I am with respect to Miss Thugleigh? I know rather more of the man who is her next-door neighbor on the other side, and whose name seems to be Bubblesworth, for and whose name seems to be Bubblesworth, for the artist who comes to shave me talks me that he has his hair carled every morning, evidently intending to hold up a good example before my eyes. But knowledge like this is the very re-verse of exhaustire."

The pursuit of this foolish train of thought had caused me to rise from my chair, and I was staring vacantly into the glass on my mantis-piece when my attention was suddenly arrested by a remarkable phenomenon. The movements of the reflected figure did not correspond to my own. If I stirred it remained still, or moved in own. If I stirred it remained still, or moved in own. It is street it remained and, or moved in a different manner. The eyes alone, which were fixed on mins, obeyed the ordinary laws of re-flection. Presently, my own arms being folded, the figure extended one of its hands. I extended the figure extended one of its hands. I extended a hand too, and the figure, slightly inclining forward, grasped it firmly. Instinctively I endeavored to extricate myself, but so far was I from succeeding that I felt myself polled toward the glass. The figure, then, was a reality, and a very muscular reality too, for I could not resist it. Whither was I going? It was soon evident that there was no glass at all, but an aperture in the wall surrounded by a gilt frame, behind which was a room precisely corresponding to my own. was a room precisely corresponding to my own. The position was alarming.

was a room precisely corresponding to my own. The position was alarming.

On—on I was pulled, and for a few accords found myself enveloped in darkness. I seemed conscious of nothing but vacuity, when suddenly the grasp ceased, and I was once more in the light, seated at a table, opposite to a venerable old lady, whose white hair, neatly parted from the middle of the forehead, was surmometed by the most respectable of caps. She was absorbed in the perusal of a large book, which lay open before her. Not knowing how I should be received, I refrained from interrupting her studies, and took a leisurely survey of the room. and took a leisurely survey of the ro-ies, and took a leisurely survey of the room.

In shape it was a prism. The ceiling and floor were equilateral triangles, and the walls were, consequently, three in number. The table, too, was triangular, so were the seats of the chairs, each of which had three legs, and a huge bird-cage, containing a vulture, was in keeping with the furniture. Door, window, or fire-place, there was none; the only admission to fresh air being afforded by a triangular vestilator, immediately under the ceiling. On the few shelves which broke the monotony of the walls were placed some old books, two or three bottles, and soveral knives or degrees of Oriental fashion. But the most singular object was a hideous Indian idol, like those that represent the horrible wife of Siva, which stood in a corner, and before wife of Siva, which stood in a corner, and before which was a prismatic stooe, exactly similar in its proportions to the room.

"Well, George," said the old lady, suddenly raising her eyes from her book, and looking at me full in the face, "so you have condescended to visit me at last."

Though my name is not George, I felt that I was the person addressed, so I began politely to deny the condescension.

"Pool-pool! never mind compliments. You are here, and that is the great matter. I see you are rather astonished at the appearance of my room. It is somewhat close; but then it's very snug, and quite good enough for a simple body like me."

"Unique in its structure, at any rate," I said, endeavoring to admire. "I am rather curious to know how one enters it." "Indeed, I wonder at that, when you your-

of found yo our way so readily," she req a slight laugh
I felt uneasy, for I did not care to de my passage through the glass; but the old lady did not seem anxious for an explanation, since she immediately added, "It would not do to have

she immedistely added, "It would not do to have a room too easy of access, when things of this sort are flying about."

With these words, she opened a drawer in her table and took out a printed hand-bill, with the formidable heading, "One Hundred Pounds Reward." This she placed in my hands, and I learned from its contents that a butcher-boy had been missed by his employers, under circumstances that led to the ansistion of murder, and that the reward was offered for the apprehension of the supposed assassins.

"Luckily he did not live in the neighborhood. But on the whole it is better not to venture here."

"Luckily be did not live in the neugnormous.

But on the whole it is better not to venture beyoud begars and ticket-of-leave men."

"Venture what?" I inquired.

"Immolation!" was the reply.

"Immo—" I faltered. "Then it is your opinion that the unhappy boy was really mur-

"Really immelated? Of course I do. It would be very abourd if I thought otherwise when I performed the sacrifics with my own

"Atrocious wretch !- " I began. "Hoity-toity!" interposed the old lady.

"Don't let us lose our tempers." And really when I looked at her calm face, I fielt that wrath was impossible. She was some harmless lunatic, who owned to crimes she had never committed.

I bore the boy no ill-will," she proceeded; "I hore the boy no ill-will," she proceeded;

"he was as well-behaved a lad as one would wish to see. I would gladly have given the preference to a mischievous little vagabond, who rings my bell regularly every Saturday afternoon, in celebration, I suppose, of his half-boliday; but the butcher-boy came handy, and when can't have what one wants, one must take what one can get."

what one can get."

"But why mur—that is, immolate any body?"

I inquired, intending to humor ber delusion.

"That I can easily explain," she replied.
"You have doubtless heard that there is in India a secret sect of devotees, who term them-selves Thugs."

"I have read of that detestable fraternity in the "Wandering Jew" of Eugene Sue," I responded.
"Your strong expression, at which I take no offense, shows that you are not unacquainted with our principles. I am a Thug, and well the with our principles. I am a Thug, and veil the fact by assuming the name of Thugleigh." It struck me that a thicker veil might have been afforded by the name of Smith or Brown, been arroyed by the same of South of Prown, but I did not interrupt.

"I therefore, on principle," she proceeded,
"offer at least once a month a human sacrifice to the Goddess Bowanse, whose effigy you see

"I would rather not have known this circum stence," said I. "Indeed, as your society is, as you say, secret, it seems to me that you break your rules by making me your confidant."

"Not at all, "she remarked, smiling. "I am convinced that my secret will not go any fur-

"You have a high opinion of my discretion,

I rejoined, endeavoring to look flattered.
"I have no opinion whatever on the subject," she calmly remarked. "For all I know to the contrary, you may be the veriest chatter-box in the universe. But of this I am sure, that dead the universe. But of this I am sure, that dead men tell no tales, and I have selected you for the next victim. Now don't be alarmed. If you do not like it, you shall not suffer any pain." White talking thus she advanced toward a shelf.) "It would, indeed, be more regular to strangle you with a white searf, or to slay you with one of these knives; but as you are a victim of a superior order I can afford to dispense with extreme formalities, and allow you to swallow the contents of the little vial I now place in your hands."

"Poison?" I inquired, with horner.

"Yes," she answered, "and of so efficacious a kind that it will extinguish life in a moment, without the slightest pain or inconvenience.

without the slightest pain or inconvenience.

When you have expired, your body will be conveyed through this aperture, through which many—ah, how many!—have passed before."

With this she touched a spring, whereupon the idel sunk behind the stone, and exhibited a hideous face, painted on the wall, with a wide mouth pening on darkness.

Horror gave place to indignation,

"This is all very well, madam," said I; "but if you are a lunstic I am not bound on that account to swallow poison, and to be put out of sight like a posted letter."

"Besistance is useless," she said, drawing forth a revolver, and pointing it full in my face. "This might hurt you, whereas the vial causes no suffering whatever. You had better choose the latter." the latter.

I had never realized till that moment the feelings of Fair Resemond.

"And when," she proceeded, "the goddess grows impetient, the jaws of her provider are more extended."

This was the fact, and I was inspired with a sudden resolution. One road of escape was ob-vious, and, in a fit of desperation, I leaped into the open mouth, head-foremost, like a harlequin.

Again a few moments of darkness, during which I beard a shrick of female rage; and when this had passed I found myself in a neat little study, looking at a slim gentleman, trimly dressed, and especially remarkable for the perfect arrangement of his hair. He seemed to be "Well, James," he said, "you need not have taken me unawares like this. I did not so much as hear you knock." name is not James; but rejoiced as I was to find myself in a room where the image of Bowanes was not part of the furniture, I did not deem it expedient to correct the error. I was beginning to stammer out an apology, when he fortunately prevented me by saying, quickly:

"No matter—no matter. I am only too hap-py to show you the successful result of my little experiments."

experiments."

I expressed, in turn, my happiness at the proposed instruction; he proceeded thus:

"The greatest discoveries in practical science often, as you are aware, have a comparatively childish beginning. The steam-engine itself was, in its earliest form, a toy; and it was by means of a boy's kite that Franklin drew the electric spark from the clouds. I have devoted myself to bubbles. You smile"—I had done no-thing of the sort—"I do not refer to those hollow commercial enterprises which are stigma-tized by that name, but to bons fide bubbles such as urchins are in the habit of blowing from an ordinary tobacco-pipe. Just watch me now."

So saying, he dipped the bowl of an ordinary pipe into a small basin of fluid, and, with evident exertion, blew a fair round bubble, which, when detached, rested upon the table.

"Just touch that," he said.

I did so: the bubble did not burst, but was as firm as if it had been made of glass. "Now you see the nature of my invention," he continued, smiling with evident satisfaction. he continued, smiling with evident satisfaction.

"I add to the saponaceous fluid, vulgarly termed soep-and-water, an ingredient the nature of which I shall not reveal, and which has the effect of rendering the bubble permanent. You may dash that bubble against the ground, or strike it with a hammer—still it will not break. All you have to avoid is a contact with fire. Observe!"

He lighted a lacifer-match and applied it to the bubble, which, with a report like that of a the bubble, which, with a report like that of a small cannon, exploded so instantly that he was thrown to the ground as if stricken by a thunderbolt. However, he rose smiling, and, rubbing the part that had been most inconvenienced by the fall, quietly said: "There is no occasion to repeat the experi-

"Decidedly not," was my remark. "There is one point, however, on which I am curious. I can not sufficiently admire the singularity of your discovery, but I am at a loss to perceive

"Oh, that I can easily explain," was his reply. "Not only have I discovered the ingredient which hardens the saponaceous fluid, but I have invented a method of blowing which enables me to inclose whatever object I please with-in the precincts of a bubble. Look here!" He opened a cabinet and showed me a collection of humming-birds, butterflies, seatuettes, and other objects that are commonly put under glass cases, each inclosed in a hardened bubble, I acknowledged that the invention was admira-

"Yes," he said, "I think it is; and it will soon go forth to the world as Bubblesworth's pat-ent. But I have not come to that yet. Just sit for a few minutes in that chair while I prepare to astonish you with an application of my principle."

I complied with his request, and he slipped behind the chair. Presently I was aware that there was something like a medium between me and the surrounding objects, and, throwing my head back, perceived that Mr. Bubblesworth had actually inclosed me in an enormous transparent actually inclosed me in an enormous transparent sphere, streaked with brilliant colors, which reisted my touch as though it had been of iron. I was manifestly a prisoner, but the scherical wall of my prison gradually receded till it was beyond the reach of my outstretched hands. Soon the gay prismatic colors that played in streams around me began to assume definite streams around my began to assume definite shapes; some of which, apparently, were distant from me several miles, while others were in my

I was standing near a neat whitewashed cot-tage, in front of which, seated by a table, on which stood a foaming jug, was a jolly old gentleman of the conventional type, which we often find repeat-ed in engravings of the last century as the embodi-ment of rural felicity in advanced years. To sit alone smoking and drinking all through a whole summer expense, with a far face that smiled besummer evening, with a fat face that smiled be-nignantly upon nothing, was long the summit of human bliss in the eyes of many well-meaning artists who wished to contrast the innocent pleas-ures of the country with the riot and dissipation

This is an uncommonly pretty country, Sir,"

Tobserved to the ideal farmer.

"Yes, Sir, it is," he replied, "though it is so far from the station; and perhaps for that very reason. Ah, there were no railroads when I

"You came here young?" I asked,
"Came here? I was born here in this house, and this very day is my eightieth birthday."
I instinctively glanced upward toward the sky, as if to catch the face of Mr. Bubblesworth, to whom I would willingly have referred the doubts that areas in my mind. But nething was above.

that arose in my mind. But nothing was above me save the pure azure. I could address no one but the old gentleman himself.

"My question may appear very ignorant, Sir,"
I said, "but what county is this?"

"This," he answered, "is Sospehire, on the borders of Bubblesex."

I discovered at once the etymological origin of these strange names; but still I scarcely durst trust my ears. "I have heard," I said, "of Shropshire and Middlesex."

"Have you?" inserrupted the old gentleman; "that's more than I have. Maybe you have traveled in foreign parts. However, this is Soapshire, and if you cross the river you see yonder you'll find yourself in Thughamptonshire.

Soapshire—Bubblesex—Thughamptonshire odd names! Not only was I still somehow in the old world, but there was a slight connecting link between me and my immediate neighbors,

"Did you ever go to any church in Thug-hamptonshire?" I asked. Not very often; but I have done such a g," was the reply.

thing," was the reply.
"Ha! and in the course of his sermon did the minister make any mention of — of Bowa-

" No; I can't say as he did-leastways, while I was awake. But I tell you what - in the church-yard of Thugton, which is the chief market-town, there is a little hill or mound like which they call Bony-Barrow; and the story goes that a great many butcher-boys are buried there who were sacrificed by the Druids, as they call them, in the days of the ancient Britons."

"Ha!" I exclaimed, with intense interest. "A very curious thing that barrow. men who were digging there some twenty years ago found a stone figure of a woman with a lot hands, and you may see it now in Thugton Museum. But it is getting dusk. I think I may as well send up my fire-balloon." "Fire-balloon?"

"Yes; my great-grandson, who goes to the grammar-school of Thugton-cum-Sue, sent me grammar-school of Inngion-cum-Suc, sent me one as a present for my eightieth birthday. You must know that I was born at eight o'clock in the evening, so it was the boy's fancy that I should send it up exactly at that time, that he might be reminded of the old man at a distance.

It is a singular thing that a man who was born at eight o'clock should live to be eighty."

I might have told him that, inacmuch as I had encountered many things much more singular, this last marvel was somewhat ineffective; but as the effect of the lucifer-match when applied to the surface of the bubble was present to mind, I did not care to dispute about triffes.

"I think that fire-balloon might be dangercus," I remarked.

"Not at all—not at all," replied the old gen-tleman; "and if it does set alight a hay-stack tleman; and on an occasion like this. I or so, I don't mind on an occasion like this. I may never live to see any other birthday."

"That I think exceedingly probable," I re-marked, "if you persist in sending up this balloon."

"Why, what has that to do with it? You don't suppose I shall set the sky on fire!" (That was the very thing I did suppose.) "I have heard of folks setting the river Semaht on fire, but as for the sky—ho! ho! ho!"

I shall not describe the preparations made for the ascent of the fire-balloon. The old gentle-man unfolded it, lighted the tow in the little basket that hung from it as a car, and, as it slow-ly arose, watched it with delight and admiration. Up-up-it went, and down-down-went my heart. In the distance it appeared little more than a spark. Bang! Cottage-old man-

I was sitting in my arm-chair by the fire, and a coal which had just popped out of the grate lay smoking on the hearth.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Wissers, with his nipping, freety breath, has fairly ome. Old folks shiver, and draw their mufflers more come. Old folks shiver, and draw their mufflers more closely; but not so the young, whose blood is warm and quick. The school-boy throws up his hat with a shout at the sight of the first snow-dakes, noistly drage down his sled from the attic, and, with a tenderness and nicety quite foreign to his nature, pollabes up his favorite skates. Even the young girl looks longingly from the window after her frollosome brother, and from the window after her frollosome brother, and wishes no frills and flourous kept her from sliding with him on those patches of ice in the street. But what a blessed thing it is for girls that fashion has compromised a little, and that the exhilarating amusement of skating is nowadays considered an excellent recreation, not for boys only, but for every body!

The summer and autumn beauties of the Central Park have all departed; but the pends remain, and the Park Commissioners provide most excellent acthe Park Commissioners provide most excellent ac-commodations for the votaries of the skatorial art, and never fall to be ready to receive the first substan tial visit of Jack Frost. The largest of the three Park punds is situated north of the Mall, about Seventieth Street; the second in size is near Fifth Avenue and One Hundred and Tenth Street; while the smallest is near Pifty-ninth Street, between the Pifth and Sixth avenue entrances to the Park.

Speaking of the Park reminds us of a comical in negating of the fair ventions in of a comical in-cident, which, though in nowise connected with the subject of skatling, was what a throng of jolly skaters would have enjoyed immensely—if they had only been on hand. A few days ago the elephants of the Park were brought out of their stalls in the old Arsenal, for were accepted out of their "pictures" taken. The old elephant behaved with great decorum, and stood as still as if he had been used to having his likeness taken once a week all his life. But the photographer had a terrible lime with the "baby elephant," who, like other babies, would not hold his head still or look toward the camers. He persisted in turning around, and a photograph of his tall was not available the and a photograph of his tall was not exactly and a photograph of his tall was not exactly what was wanted. Coaxing did no good, neither did beating, and finally the young fellow escaped from his keeper, and ran off at the top of his speed. A lufficrous scene followed, the keeper rashing after the fugitive amidst the andthly expressed chaptin of the artist and the laughting shouts of the spectators. The big beby was captured at length, and was so out of breath that he could do nothing else but stand still, like a good child, until his picture was taken.

Poor fellow! An eighty-foot whale ran aground in shallow water in the Firth of Forth, about twelve miles from Edinburgh, two or three weeks ago, and it was serious business for him. He received about thirty saintes, namely, rifle-bullets.

A sad account of the sufferings of the Fernando Po prisoners was recently given in a lecture in this city by Setor Barenque, who, with a small party, fortu-nately escaped from the island. Early last spring two hundred and fifty prisoners were sent from Hafive days, during which they suffered hunger, they were directed to go ashore, with the cool remark that they were at liberty to pursue their ordi-nary avocations ! The population of the island con-sists chiefly of natives, who are almost if not quite savages. There were few provision stores, and the distress for food became very great. The heat was intense and the climate insulations. Consequently nearly one-half the prisoners were sick within a week after their arrival.

Buskin is reported to have lately given four of his books to a new library in England, with the remark that they were the only works of his which he wished to be read in their present form. These books were "Queen of the Air," "Ethics of the Dust," "Crown of Olive," and "Unto this Last." These books were:

A new Northern Lights theory is credited to Dr. Hall: namely, that the Northern Lights are the re-flected rays of the sun, thrown back and forth by the ice and snow of the arctic regions and the clouds surrounding the pole.

About the time of the first bene of "greenbacks" by the Government, there was some discussion about placing an appropriate Scriptural motto apon the bills, in accordance with an old custom of stamping one upon coins. Secretary Chase consulted with several persons, among others the president of a Phila delphia bank. After mentioning several Scriptural texts that had occurred to him, the Secretary asked the banker's opinion. "Perhaps," was the reply, the somer's opening would be, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have I give thea." But we have not seen that text on any of our "greenbacks."

Marcell, a village in France, is the scene of some singular archaeological discoveries. While digging for the foundations of a house the workman came upon a quantity of human house and various antiquities. The results of the discovery so far have been 257 skeletons, ninety-one earthen vasce, five of glass, twenty-three lances, nine javelins, eight hatches, and a quantity of necklaces, ear-rings, and beads. The acknowledges are those of a race of men of tail stature, some measuring six feet four inches. some measuring six feet four luches.

An accident of a fearful nature occurred on Noan account of a scartil nature occurred on No-vember II is a church in Lexington, Rentucky. A prominent member of the church had died, and a large namber of people had gathered to attend the funeral carecties. While the services were in prog-ress the floor of the building gave way, and pecipi-tated the entire audience into the basement. Six per-sons were known to be killed at several characteristics. sons were known to be killed at once, and about hundred and fifty injured, many of them seriously.

England thinks more of America than she did twenty-five years ago. Such a republic as ours can not be overlooked now by any nation, ever so proof. In 1848 the British Museum had only 1000 works re-lating to America. Now it has upward of 100,000.

A new method of making water-proof fabrics is announced, the operation being simple, but requiring care. The cloth is first submitted to the action of moderately strong sulphuric acid, the time of such action varying with the nature of the fabric, but never exceeding two minutes. A thorough washing fol-lows, and when dried the material is ready for use. The action of the acid is to decompose the wool or cotton fibres into a glutinous material, the gum dil-ing up the spaces between the threads, and thereby preventing the passage of water.

The Brooklyn Young Men's Christian Association as begun a good work, by which the young men of that city may receive educational advantages similar to those offered by the Cooper Institute. Classes of instruction are to be organized, and a course of week-ly scientific actures by able men has been already amenced. The membership fee is placed at two dollars, which entities the beaver to attend the inc-tures, classes, library, and social reunions, busides three first-class concerts in the Academy of Music,

What a fortunate electrostance that the twentieth December does and happen in midenmoser t how could the eighty-eight weighty members of the Fat Men's Association endure to "dance all night" on that occasion, as they propose to do? We hope for their sakes that the night of the twentieth will be clear and cold t

The system of fre. delivery of all letters directed to street and number is about to be introduced into San Francisco. The total number of letters received in the post-office of that city is about six thousand daily —nearly one-half of which are distributed through the general delivery by clerks. About twelve hun-dred dead-letters are each work forwarded to Washlagton—the persons - whom they are addressed not being found. Something like ten thousand letters daily sent away from the San Francisco office. are castly sens away from the San Francisco office. The free delivery system was inaugurated in New York city in 1863, and its advantages soon fully established. The plan has been adopted in many of the principal cities of the United States.

The life of a French bank-note averages about to or three years, terminating only when in a very shaky condition. No matter how dilapidated it is, if the cashier of the bank can identify it—and he will take infinite pains to do so—be will give the owner a new note for the old one. Very few notes are actually lost. During the last eixty-seven years $4,000 bank-notes of 1000 france each have been issued, and of this number, according to the latest reports, 23,958 had been re-turned to the bank, leaving only forly-two mac-counted for. Of 600-franc noises $4,355 had been re-turned out of 25,000. When notes are too worn to be tempes out of motion, they are canceled, locarcerated in a ingle caken chest, and then a conflagration takes place. A great fire is kindled in an open court; the defunct noise are thrown into a sort of revolving wire cage over the fire; the cage is kept rotating, and the minute fragments of ash, whirled out of the cage through the meshes, take their flight into infinite no one knows whither.

Bufas Choate's handwriting was proverbial for its illegibility. Daniel Webster used to say that the word "would," as Mr. Choate wrote it, resembled a small gridiron struck by lightning !

During the year 1868, and the first half of 1868, the English National Life-Boat Institution contributed to the saving of 1870 lives from various shipwrecks, and 22 resels from destruction. The Institution has now 207 life-boat stations under its management.

A French journal thus graphically describes M. Rochefort's appearance at a recent political gather-ing: "Tall, thin—very thin, thin as a skeleton. Bead more than pale—of a color not to be defined, between the creamy white and greenish blue of the electric light. Check-bones prominent, eyes hollow, foreboad -uncombed into the bargain; an irregular none - every thing angular - hair like independent brashwood - short jacket - black hat. He enters. 'Vive Rochefort?' He demands a few moment's repose. 'Vive Rochefort!' Some one speaks before him. 'Vive Rochefort!' He ascends the tribune. Vive Bochsfort !"

The Empress Enginic appeared several times before her departure for the East with her hair dressed with out any ornament whatever. Such extreme simplicity was alarming to her followers, who had not, like fit-genie, a profusion of crown diamonds to scatter over their elegant dresses, as a compensating contrast.

Mr. J. W. Gerard was once trying an action involvot claimed, through ing a right of way, which his cliing a right of way, which are count claimed, through the lands of the defendant. The late James T. Bredy was counsel for the latter. Mr. Gerard was explain ing to the jury, upon diagrams, where his client had a right to go.

a right to go.
"You don't mean to say," interrupted Mr. Brady,
"that the plaintiff has a right to go in that direc-

"Certainly I do," replied Mr. Gerard.

"Why," said Mr. Brady, impulsively, "you might as well say I have a right to come into your house as often as I please.

"So you have, my dear fellow," exclaimed Mr. erard. "Won't you come and dine with me to-Gerard. morrow !"

THE CECUMENICAL COUNCIL-VIEW OF THE CHURCH OF ST. P.

TES, ROME, WHERE THE COUNCIL IS TO BE HELD .- [SEE PAGE 794.]

THE CECUMENICAL COUNCIL.

It is only four or five days after the publica-tion of this abeet that the Œcumenical Council is to assemble at Rome. The Council is to be held, December 8, as

THE CHURCH OF ST. PETER.

This church, which Greson styles "the most glorious structure that has ever been applied to the use of religion," occupies the site of a basil-ica built by Cosstantina in 306. The founda-tions were laid by Julius II. in 1506, and in 1626 the building was dedicated by Usean 1625 the building was dedicated by URRAN VIII., its erection having been spread over the reigns of twenty Popes, and carried on by the building in the form of a Greek cross, which RAPHARL changed to a Latin cross; but Michael Ascelo returned to the original form. The latter designed the dome. MADERNO resumed the Latin cross form, and added the factories of the building in a feature of the building in a fe pade. The situation of the building—in a hol-low surrounded on three sides by hills—is un-The interior is unrivaled for grandeur and beauty; so exquisite are the propor-tions that the vast size is scarcely noticed by the beholder. The dome is regarded as the triumph of modern architecture. The principal dimensions of the church are as follow: Length of inserior, 618 feet; breadth of the nave and sisles, 1972 feet; height of nave, 152 feet; diameser of dome, 195 feet; height from the pavement to the base of the lantern, 405 feet. The semicircular colonnades on each side of the piazza, in front of the church, form, along with the covered galleries that extend from them to the portico, a magnificent approach to St. Peter's.

Elaborate preparations have been made in that part of the church which has been fitted as a council-hall. The walls have been adorned with portraits of eminent churchmen; the floor covered with a costly carpet presented by the King of Prassia; and galleries have been erect-ed for the reporters of the Council, embassadors, royal personages, and other persons of rank, The Pope will preside in person, and the lan-guage used at the Council will be Latin.

THE COUNCIL

About to be held will be attended, it is expected, by about 700 prelates, each of whom will be accompanied by three ecclesiastics; thus, with the abbots, the generals of the religious orders, the aboots, the generals of the religious orders, etc., there will be more than 3000 members of the clergy specially attached to the assembly.
The population of Rome already includes 15,000 ecclesiastics.
The Council will be purely ecclesiastical, since it is unsupported by the civil authorities of any nation. In this respect it will materially differ from the last great (Ecamenical Council—that of Trent, held about the middle of the sixteenth century. It is, therefore, less capable of mischief. The Council of Trent, as a writer in Harper's The Council of Trent, as a writer in Harper's Magazine for December asserts, "spread irreconcilable enmity among nations. It leagued the warriors and the priests in a deadly assault upon the working-man. It declared war against the factory and the work-shop, the printing-press and the school. It crushed the industry of Italy and Spain; it banished the frugal and thoughtful Huguenots from France; it strove in vain to make Holland a desolate waste, and to blight in its serpent-folds the rising intellect of Europe; it aimed vain blows at the genius of Europe; it aimed vain blows at the genius of Germany and the North; it held in bondage for three miserable centuries the mind of the decay-ing South. To the Council of Trent, by an easy deduction, may be traced the great war which Changes V. waged against his German sub-jects, and the disastrous crusades of his son PRILLIP against the Netherlands and Queen ELIZABETH; the wild rancor of the League and the Guises; the persecutions, worse than those of Diocletian, of Louis XIV.; the Thirty Years' War, in which Wallemerein and Tilly made half Germany a blood stained wilderness; the fatal bigotry of Austria; the tyranny of Spain. It was a flame of discord, a harbinger of strife; and to the student of history no spectacle is more startling than that torrent of wee which descended upon mankind from the delib-erations and the anathemas of a scanty gather-ing of bishops and Jessits in the rocky heights of the Tovol." of the Tyrol.

But, after all, though so powerful for a brief period, how futile has that Council been as against ern progress! As to what is to be done at the forthcoming meil, that is now a subject of conj ecture only The protest of Father Hyacinyms indicates the apprehension which is entertained among liberal Catholics that the only hope of the Churchnamely, a renovation from within itself—is about to be destroyed by the Pope and his Council. "Jamus," the author (or we should rather say unther say there are then one) of a week. authors, as there are more than one) of a work just published on this subject, and himself evidentity a Roman Catholic, speaks of a danger which "does not date from yesterday, and did not begin with the proclamation of the Council. For some twenty-four years the reactionary move-ment in the Catholic Church, which is now swoll-en to a mighty torrent, has been manifesting itself, and now it is preparing, like an advancing flood-tide, to take possession of the whole organ-ie life of the Church by means of this Council." And he adds: "We are of their opinion who are persuaded, first, that the Catholic Church, far from assuming a hostile and suspicious attitude toward the principles of political, intellectual, and religious freedom and independence of judgment, in so far as they are capable of a Christian independent, or rather are directly derived from the leaves of the control of the co the letter and spirit of the Gospel, ought, on the contrary, to be in positive accord with them, and to exercise a constant parifying and ennobling influence on their development; secondly, that a great and searching reformation of the Church is necessary and inevitable, however long it may be evaded. d Now, nobody expects that this Council is to promote these worthy ends.

In regard to the temporal power of the Church,
"Jamus" says: "We reject that doctrine and idea of the Church which has for years been commended by the organ of the Roman Jesuits commended by the organ of the Homan Jesuits as alone true, as the sole remaining anchor of deliverance for the perishing human race." The doctrine of Papal Infallibility "Jasus" thinks would not only "cripple all intellectual movement and scientific activity in the Catholic Church," but would also "build up a new wall of partition, and that the strongest and most impenetrable of all, between that Church and the religious communities separated from her. We must renounce that dearest hope, which no Chris-tian can banish from his breast, the hope of a fu-ture reunion of the divided Churches, both of the East and the West. For no one who is moder-ately acquainted with the history of the Eastern Church and of the Protestant bodies will seri-ously hold it to be conceivable that a time can ever come in which even any considerable por-tion of these Churches will subject itself, of its own free-will, to the arbitrary power of a single man, stretched, as it would be, through the doctrine of Infallibility, even beyond its present pro-

"We know on good authority," says "Janus, "We know on good authority," says "Janus," "that the whole plan of the campaign for fixing the Infallibility dogms is already mapped out.
An English prelate—we could name him—has undertaken at the commencement of proceedings to direct an humble petition to the Boly Father to direct an humble petition to the Boly Father to direct an humble pittion to the Boly Father to direct an humble petition to the Boly Eather to direct an humble position to the Boly Father to majority of bishops present, who have been already primed for the occasion, will accede by acclamation to this petition, and the Holy Father reasy primes for the occasion, will access by ac-clamation to this petition, and the Holy Father will gladly yield to the pressure coming on him spontaneously, and, as it were, through a sudden and irresistible inspiration from on high, and so the new dogma will be settled at one sitting, with the new dogma will be settled at one sitting, with-out further examination, as by the stroke of a magician's wand. As the Roman people are told after a Conclave, Habenus Papeus, on the even-ing of this memorable sitting the news will go forth to the whole Catholic world, Habenus Pa-peus Infallibiles. And before the newly-risen and bright sun of Divine truth all the ghosts of false science and forms of modern civilization will be scared away forever."

DEAD.

WITH closed lips and closed eyes, Wrapt all in white, so white she lies; m as a statue's carven face, And, oh, so cold to love's embrace!

Her share in all our dealings gone, Life, as we know it, hath she none; Slid into slumber calm and deep, A maiden sculptured in her sleep.

She was my own ere this befell; Whose now she is I can not tell; Man knows not—has no sense that saith What this thing is that he calls Death.

And I but know that all my hopes Lie like dead leaves on smitten slopes; That though my evening is not yet, The day-star of my life hath set.

Now all my thoughts will turn and tend In one direction to the end; And with the ghost of my dead Past, Mem'ry will wander to the last.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble,"

En gibe Books .- Book HEE.

CHAPTER III. A COURTN.

Two carriage bearing Veronica rolled along smoothly down a long avenue. It was the road leading from an erst grand-ducal villa which stands on the top of an eminence—scarcely high enough to be termed a hill in a country of Alpa and Apennines, but which is of very respectable altitude nevertheless, and is called the Poggio Imperiale. The avenue is flan and ilex trees of ancient growth.

Veronica had heard her mother speak so much and so often of Florence that she thought she knew it. But coming to view city and suburb with her bodily eyes, she found every thing strange, foreign, and, on the score of beauty, dis-appointing. Later she understood the amazing picturesqueness of that storied town, and with every glance its attractions grew on her. But there are some places—as there is some music, and that among the noblest—which do not take at once the senses by storm, but need time and familiarity to develop their wealth of beauty and

What Veronics saw with her unaccustomed es was, first the long, dusty, squalid Roman ad, into which the carriage turned at the foot of the avenue; then the Porta Romana, with its huge, yawning archway, through which carts of hige, yawning archway, tantoga watch can be all kinds were struggling; those coming in having to step to be examined by the officers of the town custom dues, and those going out pushing boldly through the gute and grazing wheels agninst the stationary vehicles.

Every body was talking very loudly. The w who really could by no exercise of ingenuity find any more articulate words to say, solaced themselves by half-uttered oaths and long-drawn, lugubrious howls addressed to the patient, lean beasts that drew the carts.

In odd contrast with this nimble energy of tongue, were the slow and languid movements of all concerned. The cetroi men lounged against the walls on high, four-legged stools set out before a queer little office, very dim and dirty, with glazed windows. They had within reach long iron rods, with which they probed trusses of hey or straw, or which they thrust in among hundles of linen or piles of straw-colored flasks, or poked down amidst the legs of people sitting in country chaises, or under the box-seat of backney-coachmen. And when they had thus satisfied themselves that there was no attempt being made to defraud the municipality of Florof the tax on food and wine, and whatso ever other articles are subject to duty, they—al-ways with ineffable languor—put their hands into their pockets again and bade the driver proceed. One man especially, with melancholy, dark eyes and a sallow face, uttered the permission to pass on, "Avanti!" in a tone of such profound and hopeless dejection, that one might have fancied him a guardian of that awful portal his great townsman wrote of, rather than a mortal customhouse officer at the city gate, and that he was warning the doomed victims: "Abandon hope, all ye who enter here!"

Sir John Gale's carriage only paused for an instant in passing through the Porta Romana. The spirited horses chafed at the momentary check, and dashed on again rapidly over the resounding pavement.

A succession of objects seemed to flit past Ve remica's eves like the swift changes in a dream. There was a long street paved with flat stones, fitted into each other angle for angle and point for point, like the pieces in a child's puzzle. There was in this street no side pavement for foot-passengers, and—the street being very fullthe coachman kept uttering a warning cry at in-tervals, like a minute-gun. Indeed, as they ap-proached the busier parts of the town, their pace was slackened perforce. No vehicle short of the car of Juggernaut could have ruthlessly kept up a steady progress through such a crowd.

There were houses of various styles and dimessions on either side of the long street, nearly all plastered; one or two, however, with a heavy cut-stone front to the basement-story. Every window had the inevitable green jalousies, and nearly every window had a group of heads framed in it, for it was a summer evening, and there were people taking the air—they called it pigliare il fresco, albeit it was yet hot enough, and stiffing in the narrow ways of the city; and there were bright bonners to be criticised, and acquaintances to be recognized, and familiar conversations touching the privatest family affairs to be held in brassy voices, between ladies and gentlemen standing in the street, and other ladies and gen-tlemen leaning on their elbows out of third-floor windows. And the talkers in the street planted in any spot that came convenient, and themselves in any spot that came convenient, and remained there immovable, as regardless of the pressing throug of passers-by as a stubborn, broad-based stone in a stream is regardless of the rushing current. And the passers-by yield-ed as the water yields, and skirsted round these obstructive groups, or—if the subject of their discourse struck them as peculiarly interesting— increased a while to live as their talk with a lingered a while to listen to their talk with a grave placidity, which might be characterized as good-humored, only that that word suggests somewhat of merriment to an English ear, and these people were few smiles on their brown faces.

Then came a vision of an open space, with houses on the left hand, and on the right a steep incline covered with gravel, on the summit of which stood a vast palace (its façade seeming, at the first glance, somewhat low for its width), flanked by open areades that advanced from the main body of the building and embraced two sides of the graveled space. These areades were based on titanic blocks of rough stone, and under the shade of the arches a military band was making lively music, and a dense mass of citi-sens with their wives and families was listening to it, still with the same nonchalant placidity,

Onward through a very narrow street of gloomy, frowning, iron-barred stone palaces; across a quaint bridge with shops and houses on it, where the gems and gold in the jewelers' windows flashed brightly beneath the beetle-browed pent-house shutters; past an open arch making a gap in the line of buildings on the bridge, through which was seen a glimpse of gold and purple hills swim-ming in a base of evening sunshine; along a stone quay with tall handsome houses on one than half full of brownish sand, and with pools of water here and there, and a shrunk middle stream singgishly crawling toward the sea, which stream was the classic Arno, nothing less!—past the end of another bridge, wide and handsome, at whose foot a dense crowd was assembled in a small piazzetta: some standing, some sitting on stone benches, some perched on the parapet overhanging the river, all watching the passers-by on foot or in vehicles; down another street which widened out into a considerable space and then contracted again, and where a tall column stood, and hackney-coaches were ranged hard by, and a vast old medieval palace—more like a fortress than a palace-beaved its bulk above the narrow ways behind and about it, like a giant raising his head and shoulders out of a pressing throng to breathe; and where a few elegantly-dressed gen-tlemen (rather attenuated about the legs, and some about the skin, and with a general vague air pervading them—though some were handsome, dark-eyed youngsters, too—of having not quite enough to eat and considerably too to smoke) were lounging at the door of a club-house, utterly unlike any club-house known to the dwellers beyond the Straits of Dover, or perhaps nearer than that; and at last the carriage drew up suddenly with a mighty claster a

riage drew up suddenly with a mighty claster at the door of a smart shop, all French mirrors and gilding, where fans were displayed for sale, and Paul descended nimbly, but decorously, from the box to hand "miladi" out.

All the sights that she had seen in her rapid drive were vividly impressed on Veronica's eyes, but she had not had time to give herself an account of them: to digest them, as it were, in her train. She felt almost giddy as she alighted and entered the shop. But one circumstance had not escaped either her observation or her comprehension: the fact, namely, that her beauty and elegance had attracted much attention from the loungers at the club door. One man especially had gased at her, like one enchanted, as her carriage whirled past.

She was looking at a bright glittering heap of fans on the counter, turning them over with a disdainful air, and pushing them away one by one with the tips of her gloves, when she became aware of a face looking furtively in through the spacious pane of the shop window. The face disappeared, and its owner walked away. Presently he repassed, glanced in again (when he did so, Veronica's quick eye recognized him as the man who had stared at her so admirringly in the street), and finally stopped and addressed Pani, who was standing in sentimental fashion at the street), and finally stopped and addressed Paul, who was standing in sentimental fashion at the

To Veronica's surprise, Paul answered him at To Veronica's surprise, Paul answered him at once, touching his hat respectfully. She hastily chose a couple of fans, hade her maid pay for them and bring them to the carriage, and went to the door, where Paul was still so bustly conversing with the stranger that he was not aware of her approach until she spoke to him.

At the sound of her voice he turned hastily, and the stranger took off his hat and bowed proceeding.

and the stranger book off his has and bowed profoundly.

He was a well-looking, slender man, of about thirty. He had fine teeth, and bright dark eyes, which latter, however, seemed to elade yours like a picture badly hung, on which you can not get a good light, shift and strive as you will. It was not that he turned his glance aside either, for be seemed to look boddly enough at wheever addressed him, but the glittering eye could not be fathomed. He was prematurely bald about the forehead, but the back and sides of his head were sufficiently well covered with dark waving locks, and he were a short beard and mussache of glossy black. His dress was of the latest fashion, and, although perbaps slightly brighter in color than an insular eye would deem fitting for masculine stire, was well chosen and perfectly made. He were a glass in his eye, attached to a short black ribbon. And when he bowed the glass fell and dangled across his waistcost.

"A thousand pardons, Madame," he said, speaking in French, but with a strong Italian accent; "I formerly had the honor of knowing Monsieur le Baron Gale, and just recognized his Monsieur le Baron Gale, and just recognized his servant."

Veronica bowed, with an easy hanteur, which yet was not calculated to repulse the speaker. So at least he thought, for he ventured to press forward and offer the support of his arm to assist Veronica into her carriage. She touched it with the tips of her fingers as she got in. Paul stood holding the door open with a grave face.

"I was charmed to find that my good friend Gale had returned to find that my good friend Gale had returned to Inaly," said the gentleman, still standing bareheaded by the side of the carriage after Veronica was seated. "And," he added, "under such delightful circumstances. Paul tells me that he is in the Villa Chiari. I shall do inyself the honor—if I may hope fer your amishe permission—of paying my respects to my good Gale, my homage to Madame."

Veronica bowed, smiled very slightly, marmured some inarticulate word, and gave the signal to drive on, leaving the stranger, hat in hand, on the pavement. When she had driven some distance she asked Paul in English who that person was.

He was the Signor Course Barletti, dei Prin-

that person was,

that person was.

He was the Signor Cesare Barletti, dei Principi Barletti; not the head of the house; a younger brother. The Barletti were a Neapolitan family. The Prince Cesare had known hir John at Naples. Oh yes; that was quite true. And Sir John had liked him to come true. And Sir John had liked him to come and play piquet or écarsé with him when he was laid up at his hotel, and could not go out. He (Paul) certainly thought that Sir John would like the prince to call and see him; otherwise Paul would have taken good care not to men-tion Sir John's present address. The Principe Cesare de Barletti was not a Florentine; miladi understood-did she not?-that it was wal of old Florentine ' relations" which Sir John objected to at present.

"Miladi" leased back with an assumption of indifference and instruction while Paul spoke. But no syllable of what he said was lost upon Barletti! Cesare de' Barletti! This man, then, was a cousin of her own! Her mother's father had been dei Principi, of the Princes Barletti.

Sir John knew and cared nothing about Veronica's mother. He is all probability had never heard Mrs. Levincourt's masden name. But Veronica knew it well, and had nourished a secret pride in her Neapolitan ancestry.

That the man who had accested her was her cousin did not much matter. But his intention of paying a visit to Villa Chiari mattered a great deal. It offered a hope of change and society. She had been a little surprised that I'anl should have given him the address. But Paul had himself explained that. It was old Florentiss acquaintances whom Sir John wished to shua. This man being a stranger in Tascany might have the corrée to Villa Chiari. Doubless Paul knew what he was about. If Sir John knew that Barletti was Veronica's cousin, would it make any difference in his reception of him? She mused upon the question until she reached the villa. It was quite evening. The sun had set behind the hills; but there was still a bright-ness in the sky. "Miladi" hastened to her ness in the sky. "Mindi" hastened to her own room to dress for dinner. She made a gorgeous toilet every day, finding a great deal of real pleasure in her line clothes. The sus-picion that this was a pleasure which some other person in her presence genuinely distained, would have much imbittered her delight in the rich silks and gay jewels and fine lace. But such a mortification never befell her in Sir John Gale's company.

As dinner they talked of Cesare de' Barletti. "Paul has told you, of course," said Verunica, about the man who spoke to him, and after-

"Oh yes—Barlesti, Ah—yes; I knew him at Naples. Wonder what brings him here!" "He said he would call."

"Not a doubt of it! He likes a good dinner and good wine; and he never gets either at his or expense.

I should suppose that the Principe de Barti does not need to come to his acquaintances letti does not need to come to his acquaintances for food!" said Veronica. Sir John burst into a grating laugh. "Bah!"

Sir John burst into a grating laugh. "Bah!" he cried, "you are impayable with your Principe de Barlett! The real prince and head of the family is poor enough. He lives nine months of every year in the third-floor of a mangy palasso at Torre del Graco, in order to scrape together enough to spend the other three months in Paris. But this fellow is only dei principi—a younger son of a younger son. He has twopence a year, which he spends on shiny boots (I dare say he blacks them himself) and cheep gioves. But he plays a good game of piquet; and I found it worth while to let him come nearly every evening when I was once laid by the heels—or the toe, rather, for I got a confounded fit of the gout—in a beastly hotel at Naples. Of course he —in a beastly hotel at Naples. Of course he was very glad. It paid his capitally!" Veronica's temper was chafed by this slighting mention of a Barletti. It vexed her. She knew mention of a Barietti. It vexed her. She knew that Sir John's coarse insolence was directed against this man in utter ignorance of the fact that he was in any degree connected with herself. Still it wered her. But she had no intension of incurring the risk of ridicule for the sake of championing her newly-found relation. She had been considerably elated by the thought of being cousin to a prince; and proportionally depressed by the discovery that to be del Principi Barietti was no guarantee of important position.

present by the discovery that so be det France Barietti was no guarantee of important position. "Then you mean this man to come here asked Veroules.

asked Verenics.

"Mean him to come? "Yes; if he makes himself amusing. If not, I shall give him his congé."

"If you feel that you want amusement why do you not go into Florence sometimes?"

"La balla idea! Go to Florence for amusement in June! There's nebody there; and if there were, it's much too bot to do any thing. Besides—no, no; we must get through the summer here as best we can. The dry heat suits me rather; especially on this hill where one gets plenty of air, even if it be hot air. In the autumn and winter we will move south. Meanwhile if Barletti drops in our way, so be it."

"Nobody in Florence?" replied Veronica, whose mind had been dwelling on those words. "It seemed to me that there were a great many carriages—"

You did not go to the Cascine?" interrupted

Sir John, quickly.
"No; I was too late. But I saw the people

"No; I was too late. But I saw the people driving along the Lung' Arno."

She perfectly understood from Sir John's manner that he had given orders to Paul not to take her to the Cascine, and that he had felt a momentary suspicion that his orders had been disobeyed. The question presented itself to her mind, what would have been the result if Paul had yielded to her desire? But when she religious has commented which had did and tired to her own apartment—which she did early —she lay awake for some time, occupying herself exclusively with another and very different problem, namely, which of her dresses she should put on to-morrow evening when Cesare de Bar-letti might be expected to make his appearance

CHAPTER IV.

. IN THE GARDEN.

"I was so delightfully astonished!" "At seeing Paul? He does not usually p duce ecstasy in the beholder. But 'tutti i g does not usually pro son gusti, all tastes are tastes, as they say here."
"Pardon! no: not at the sight of Paul for Paul's sake, but-" But for mine?"

"For yours, caro mio. I had never heard that you were married; never."
"I wonder if he had," thought Sir John.
"He says it so emphatically, that it is probably

"And the sight of miladi positively dazzled a! What eyes! What a grace! How beau-Take another cup of coffee," said Sir John, dryly, interrupting the raptures of his compan-ico. And yet the raptures did not altogether displease him.

Sir John Gale and the Principe Cosare de' Barletti were sitting together beneath the loggia on the western side of the Villa Chiari. The setting sun was flushing all the sky before them. They looked out on the garden, where, among the lanrels and acacias, a white figure passed and repassed slowly.

The cracked scagliola pavement of the loggis was covered, where the two men sat, by a thick carpet. Foot-stools and cushions were there, too, in abundance. Between Sir John and his gueet stood a little marble-topped table bearing coffee and wine. Sir John was half reclining in an easy-chair, with his legs stretched out be him, supported by cushions. Barletti set in a rocking-chair, on which he swang slowly back-ward and forward. Both men were smoking. "The coffee is not bad, eh?" said Sir John.

"It is very strong."
"Better than the stuff they give you at your caffe, isn't it?" "Ma, si! Better no doubt. But very strong, should like a little cold water, if I may have

Sir John rang a bell that stood on the table. Before a servant could answer the summons Veronica approached. She had been strolling up and down the garden, and had just reached the spot in front of the loggia when the bell

"What do you want?" she asked.
"The Principe would like some cold water.
He finds the coffee stronger than he is secustomed to."

ere was an indefinable sneer in the tope in which Sir John prenounced these words. The words were innocent enough. But Veronica understood the tone, and it offended her.

"I dare say be does," she retorted. "It is made to suit our English taste, which likes strong favors—some people would say, coarse favors."

"Oh no!" protested Barletti, not having in

"Oh no!" processed Barietti, not having in the least understood either the sneer or the re-tort; "the flavor is very good indeed."

"There is some deliciously cold water always in the marble basin of the broken fountain you-der," said Veronica, impulsively. "Let us go and get some! It will be better than any the servants will bring."

The words were addressed to Cesare de' Bar-letti who there ware his circumster, with server letti, who threw away his cigarette—with secret reluctance, by-the-way—and rose to follow " mi-

She had taken up a goblet from the table and was running toward the fountain.

She had recoved to impress this stranger—already appreciative enough of her beauty—with her dignity, hanteur, and airs de grande dame. And on a sudden behold her skipping through the garden like a school-girl!

The first plan was too slow, and required too much phlegm and patience to carry out. Barletti took her queenly mood very much as a matter of course. She could not bear to be ten minutes in the society of a stranger without producing an effect. And, moreover, she required to see an immediate result. She was vain and arrogant, but not proud, and not stupid; so that she could neither disregard the opinion of the most contemptible persons, nor delude herself in the teeth of evidence with the dull, comfortable faith that she was being admired when she was not. And then came the irresistible craving to make a coup—to shine—to dazzle.

was not. And then came the irrestable craving to make a coup—to shine—to dazzle.

Sir John looked after her in surprised vexation. He remembered her having done similar things for his behoof; that had been very natural and landable. But for a beggarly Neapolitan principino! Sir John felt himself defraeded. Had a pet animal appreached him at the moment he would certainly have kicked it. As it was, all he could do to reflex his feelings was to wear at the frichtened agreent who answered to swear at the frightened servant who answered the bell, for not coming sconer.

Cessre de' Barletti woodered much within himself that any human being should more more, or more quickly, than was absolutely necessary, on a hot Jame evening. He at first autributed Veronica's unexpected proceeding to that inex-haustible and incomprehensible cause, British eccentricity.

But when he rejoined her at the edge of the broken fountain, another solution presented it-self to his mind. She had perhaps seized this opportunity of speaking to him out of sight and hearing of her husband. Why not? It was im-possible that she could care a straw for that eldpossible that she could care a straw for that eld-erly roud. Very natural to have married him; he was so rich. Very natural also to admire the Principe Cesare de' Barletti, who was not eligible as a husband—as he very well knew, and very candidly acknowledged—but who was decidedly well-looking and well-born, and would make a very jewel of cavalieri serventi! There was but one circumstance which caused Cesare to besi-tate before according this achesion as final. Vatate before accepting this solution as final. Ve-ronica was an Englishwoman! And really there was no judging Englishwomen by the rules that hold good in estimating the motives of the rest sex! And whosoever should suppose that flection implied in the Italian's mind any sex! And whos special respect or admiration for Englishwomen would have been very much mistaken. Veronica filled the gobles at the fountain. The filling was a slow process, inasmuch as the water dripped sparely through the crevice before men-tioned. While the drops of bright water were falling one by one into the glass, Veronica kept her eyes fixed on the latter, and her attention

ner eyes fixed on the latter, and her attention was apparently absorbed in watching it.

"I pray you not to give yourself the trouble to do that for me, Signora," said Barletti, bending forward, and offering to take the goblet.

She waved him back with her hand, and said,
"I am watching to see how long it takes to fill the glass. The drops fall so regularly. Drip, drip, drip!"

drip, drip!"

He stood and looked at her. Now, at all events, he was not taking her behavior as a

As soon as the water touched the brim of the glass, she relinquished it into Barletti's he glass, she relinquished it into Barletti's hands and walked away slowly, as though she had lost all interest in his further proceedings. The prince drank a long draught. He had no idea of not enjoying its delicious coolness because he was so pussed by "miladi." When he had done he walked after her and overtook her.

"That was very fresh and pleasant," he said.
"A thousand thanks."

Eb P

"The water was so good. A thousand-"

"Decidedly," thought Barletti, glancing at the beautiful face beside him, "she is English, thoroughly English! Who is to make out such people?"

people?"
They found, on returning to the house, that Sir John had gone in. He was in the little sales, the servants said. Would il Signor Principe join him there?
Il Signor Principe complied with the request. Veronica lingued in the loggia and looked out over the landacase. The sun had gone down.

Veronica lingered in the loggia and looked out over the landscape. The sun had gone down. The brief twilight was nearly over. The trees stood out dark against the back-ground of pure sky, pale green near the horizon, and deepening toward the zenith to an intense dark blue. Not a leaf stirred in the breathless calm. There was no moon, but the heavens seemed to grow full of stars as the daylight faded. They quivered and shook with a liquid silvery lustre. And below on the earth sparkled and danced to and fro a thousand golden gleaming specks, threading a many pattern just above the creets of the ripening wheat. They were fire-flies. When one of the bright insects chanced to come near Veronics, she saw him glow and pale with a palpitasting intermittent flame. And sometimes the whole field full of them appeared to shine and fade simultaneously, like the successive showers of sparks from a smitchy fire that respond to the deep breath of the laboring bellows. no moon, but the heavens seemed to grow full of from a smithy fire that respond to the deep breath of the laboring beliews.

It was all as different as possible from Daneshire. And yet Veronica began to think of a certain summer night in Shipley long ago, when she and Mand were children together, and her mother had sat by an open window telling them stories of her Italian life. She remembered the black old yew-tree, only a little blacker than the cloudy, sultry, starless sky. She remembered the sound of her mother's voice, and Mand's dimly-seen little white face, and the touch of Mand's soft, warm, little hand, stroking her (Veronica's) hair in a sort of rhythmic accompaniment to Mrs. Levincourt's narrative. She did not think she had been very happy in those days. She pitied herself as she recalled some of them. Nevertheless their remembrance caused them. Nevertheless their remembrance caused a vague yearning in her heart, and filled her eyes with tears. A conviction, which she tried to ignore, was in her mind. She did not fight against it by self-deluding arguments; she simply tried to avoid arknowledging its existence, as we turn away our eyes from a disagreeable object that we know to be lying in wait for us on a path where-by we must peas. But it was there; she knew it was there. And this conviction was, that she had given all and gained nothing—that she had been duped and defrauded.
She did not believe that what she aimed at would, if obtained, have turned to dust and sales. And she knew she had not got what she aimed at. The horrible sense of the irrev-ocablesses of the past came over her. The sears brimmed over and ran down her cheeks, and they brought no solace. They only humiliated, nd made her angry. A maid, going into one of the upper rooms to A maid, going into one of the upper rooms to close the shutters for the night, looked out and saw "miledi" leaning, with folded arms, against a column at the end of the loggis, and apparent-ly absorbed in watching the fire-flies. It was an odd idea to stand there alone, when she might chat, and lounge on a sofa, and drink load leanands in the select.

iced lemonade in the saloon! But gentlefolks were odd—especially foreign gentlefolks. And Beppins went down to the servants' quarters, not ill-contented with her own lot, and prepared to discuss her master and mistress, and to thank her stars—with a side giance at Ansano, the her stars—with a sole giance at Ansano, the footman—that she was not tied to that "vecchio broatolone"—that grumbling old fellow, as she irreverently styled Sir John Gale.

Meanwhile Veronica, who never yielded herself long to any painful mental impression, returned to the house, and entered the saloon where Sir John and the prince were engaged over their came at nigner.

The room was brilliantly lighted, and dazzled her, coming from without. She felt more angry with her tears than ever, on becoming suddenly ware, as she ensured the saloon, that her eye-lids were swellen, and her eyes weak, and that they must be red and ugly.

"Oh," she cried, stopping short, and clasping her hands before her face, "what a glare! It blinds must"

Sir John was too intent on his game to regard er. Cesare de Barletti looked up, and fell instantly into a trance of admiration—for a costly diamond that glittered on Veronica's slender finger. He played a wrong card (as he afterward confessed, an infecile card I) and was vanquished.

Sir John was pleased. So was Veronics. The former attributed the victory to his own skill, on which—as he played very ill—he valued himself. The latter had no doubt that her presence had agitated de' Barletti into forgetting his game. Barletti himself was well satisfied to have put him bell to be the post of the property of the part of the property his host into good-humor. The stakes for which they played were very trifling, and he thought the small sum he had lost not ill-invested.

"Will you have your revenge, prince?" asked Sir John, throwing himself back in the chair, with a co ith a complacent smile. Barletti shook his head, doubtfully. "Aha! You show the white feather? Poe-itively I did not think I should be able to tell one card from another, it is so long since I have played. You ought to have beaten me, you really ought. Ha, ha, ha!" Varonica sented berself on a couch near the dow. Her white dress was soft and flowing, and her black hair shone in its rich ripples, as she leaned her head against the dark velver couch. Diamonds glittered on her neck and arms and hands, and trembled in her ears. There was no speck of color about her dress, and its pure whiteness enhanced the rich glow of her brunette complexion. She still shad-her eyes with one hand, complaining of the light.

Sir John, having finished his game, was full of solicitude for her. Should be have the can dies removed to another part of the room? Would she like a screen? Had she cought cold, or what was it? Her eyes were usually so strong? Being now the central object of attraction, her spirits rose buoyantly. She co-quetted and commanded, and made Sir John move and remove the wax tapers a dozen times before their position was satisfactory to her. At last he got tired, and rang for Paul to carry them away and bring a shaded lamp instead. Barletti looked on admiringly, and when, on the lamp being carried in, there appeared in its wake a tray with galantine, and chicken, and wine, and sweets (these English are such esters!), his spirits rose too, and they were all three quite brilliant over the little imprompts supper. The conversation was carried on in Newek. Sir John set heim able to each little imprompts. three quite brilliant over the little imprompts supper. The conversation was carried on in French, Sir John not being able to speak Italian floently. But suddenly Veronica addressed Barletti in Italian, and intensely enjoyed his admiring surprise at the purity of her accent.

"How admirably miladi speaks Italian?" he exclaimed, with enthusiasm.

"My mother was an Italian," said Veronica.

"Was she?" asked Sir John, careleasly.

"Tiens! I never knew that. Or—stay—oh yes, to be sure! I think I remember hearing it mentioned."

"How distrait you are to-night!" said Vehumor.

Cosare Barletti took away in his brain three themes on which his thoughts, passions, and prejudices made endless variations, as he drove down the Avenue of the Poggio Imperiale. The first was: It is odd that a man should not know or remember who his wife's mother was! The second was: Miladi wanted to make it appear that Cale was sreaking in prepocuration or absecond was: Miladi wanted to make it appear that Gale was speaking in preoccupation, or absence of mind; now, Gale is never "distrait;"
it is not in his character. The third was:
That handsome creature is not an Englishwoman, pure sangue! The fact of her having had an Italian mother brings her more into the category of human beings whose manners and development I understand. I wonder whether she was offended with me because I did not fell at her fast when we were in the carden tosale was cheened with me because I do not fall at her feet when we were in the garden together, or, at least, make some preparations for a future prostration of myself at her shrine!

On this last theme the variations were brilliant and inexhaustible.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Is an intensely Democratic county of California a number of teachers were being examined before the County Board for their certificates. The questions were printed, and the answers in writing. One of the questions in sistery required the teacher to "give a brief description of Sherman's march through Georgia." A Republican teacher wrote, in answer, "Like a dose of salls."

MATRIMONIAL

Married people will please read as written, single ose can read the first line, then the third, and theu se second, and finally the fourth in each verse.

That man must lead a happy life, Who's freed from mairimoutal chains Who is directed by his wife Is sure to suffer for his _ans.

Adem could find no so a peace,
When Eve was given for a mate-Until he saw a woman's face,
Adam was in a happy state.

In all the female face appears Hypocrier, decelt, and pride;
Truth, darling of a beart sincers,
Ne'er known in woman to reside

What tongue is able to unfold.
The falsehood that in woman dwells;
The worth in woman we behold.
Is almost impercaptible.

Cursed be the foolish man, I say, Who changes from his singlenese; Who will not yield to woman's sway, Is sure of perfect blessedness.

Dr. Binnderbore says be is always making mis-takes. He never opens bis mouth but he is sure to put his feet in it.

His OTHER NAME.—"Boy, what is your name?" Robert, Sir." "Yes, but I mean your other name." Bob, Sir."

yes you'd better ask pape."

"Autumn," says a wag, "is the time to read big books, because that season turns the leaves."

As a lawyer and a doctor were walking arm in arm a wag said to a friend, "These two are just equal to one highwayman." "Why?" was the response. "Be-cause it is a lawyer and a doctor—your money or your life."

One day a post read a new play before the Reading Committee of the French Comedy. It was unant-monety refused. The post went up to M. Sameon, the well-knows actor, and said to him, "I have a right to compilan of you; you voted against my piece, and yet you slept all the time I was reading it." M. Sameon will'ly replied, "Sir, in literary matters sleep is an opinion.

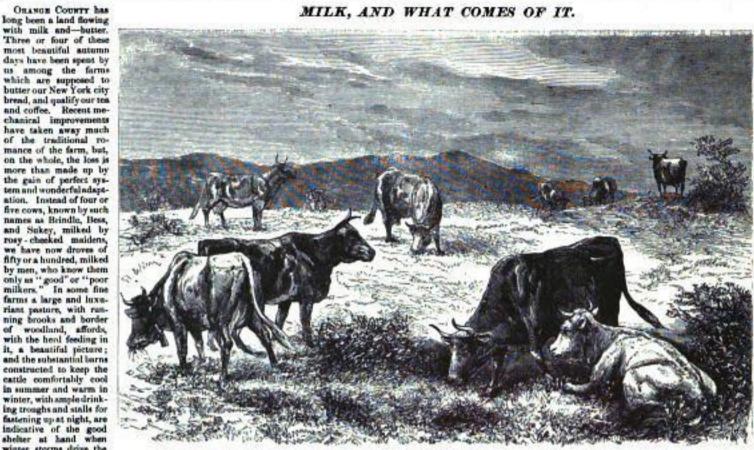

"Hans, where was you born?" "On the Halder-barrick." "What! always?" "Faw! and before, too." "How old are you, then?" "When the old school-bettee is beilt, I was two weeks more nor a pear, what ish painted red, as you go bothe mit your back behind you, on the right-hand side, by the old blacksouth-shop, what stands where it was burnt down next year will pe two weeks."

In Chicago busbands are said to be so fearful of curtain-inctures that they add to their announcement of fature movements the letters "W. F.," which mean "wife permitting."

most beautiful autumn

have taken away much of the traditional ro-

MILK, AND WHAT COMES OF IT.

THE PASTURE.

mance of the farm, but, on the whole, the loss is on the whole, the loss is more than made up by the gain of perfect sys-tem and wonderful adapt-ation. Instead of four or five cows, known by such names as Brindle, Bess, and Sukey, milked by rosy-cheeked maidens, we have now droves of fifty or a hundred, milked by men, who know them only as "good" or "poor milkers." In some fine farms a large and luxuriant pasture, with run-ning brooks and border of woodland, affords, with the heal feeding in it, a beautiful picture; and the substantial barns constructed to keep the cattle comfortably cool in summer and warm in winter, with ample drink-ing troughs and stalls for fastening up at night, are indicative of the good shelter at hand when winter storms drive the farm yards the cows are brought night and morning, in summer, to be milked. The strained milk is put into large cans holding forty quarts, such as the milkmen use in distributing it through the city. These cans are then put into tanks made in some cools cans are then put into tanks made in some cool running stream, where the water comes nearly to the top of the can. Frequent stirring is necessary until the animal heat is quite gone. The milk is then fit to be sent to the cars. This process can never safely be omitted; for, paradoxical though it may seem, milk is "fresher" and sweeter when it reaches the consumer if it is delayed at the farm for at least twelve hours. Even in but weather, it is more certain to keen Even in hot weather, it is more certain to keep sweet when twenty-four or thirty-six hours clapse between the milking and the using in the city. There has been much discussion as to the best means of cooling milk for market, and putbest means of cooling milk for market, and pat-ent pails have been tried in which the milk pass-es directly from the cow through small, coiled tubes surrounded by ice. But this rapid cooling does not work well, and practical experience in-dicates that the old and simpler process is the best. Every well-appointed farm most have, therefore, a cool and unfailing stream of water. There are two such streams in one of the farms are visited. One wasses through the have forwe risited. One passes through the harn, fur-nishing drinking troughs for the cattle, and a tank for cooling milk in winter. The other, running through the pasture, supplies a trout-breeding pond, and furnishes a tank for summer use. In a little but under the trees, the milk-come are keest in a stream which even the server cam are kept in a stream which even the severe drought of last summer did not dry, nor the heat drought of last summer did not dry, nor the heat raise to a temperature of 60°.

We are assured most positively that more of the spring water finds its way over the mouth of the can into the milk. Its dilution, of which there is so much just complaint, must be done, if at all, in the city, for the wholesale buyer is said to have such means of testing the milk as effectually protects him against the farmer. May the man be busy at work who is to give each family such a protection! We have heard it said that one end of a small piece of common tape pisced in a pan of milk will carry from it all the water into another vessel in which the other end of the tape should be placed; but we have never found this a safe test.

Strange to say, no butter is made on these large milk farms. The supply for the family is obtained from market, or, more rarely, from a until "churning day," when the thick cream was agitated by a strong arm until the butter came, then worked and salted. Instead, there is a daily pouring of the unskimmed, soured milk into a common clum, perhaps somewhat larger neighbor who churns all his milk for the accom-modation of those who send all theirs to the city. Our notions of the way to make butter were de-cidedly overturned on going to such a dairy. No setting of the milk in shallow pans for cream to rise; no skimming and putting away in jars than ordinary. The dasher is fastened to a shaft, which is moved by a crank. The crank is turned by means of a nearly horizontal wheel some eight or ten feet in diameter, which is kept in motion by a dog, sheep, or calf standing on it, something after the manner of the old tread-mill.

THE DOG CHURN.

When taken from the churn, the butter is work-ed by-hand, as of old. The farmer with whom we talked said he was about determined to send his milk to the creamery, since butter-making made it so hard for the women. Surely woman is less a drudge than she used to be. If, after beused to be. If, after be-ing relieved from the labor of charming, the re-maining working of the butter is considered too hard for the farmer's wife, the day of woman's redemption must be near at hand.

at hand.
Only one butter farm have we been able to find, and not enough is made there to supply the immediate neighborhood. Where, then, does like the Course Course. hood. Where, then, does all the Orange County butter come from?—Mostly from the West. Farmers buy from the vicinity of the Alleghanies, and even farther West, large quantities, which they sell in the original packages or repack in pails. Since railroads have become so numerous, New York drinks up all the milk in Orange County, and must Orange County, and must butter her bread else-

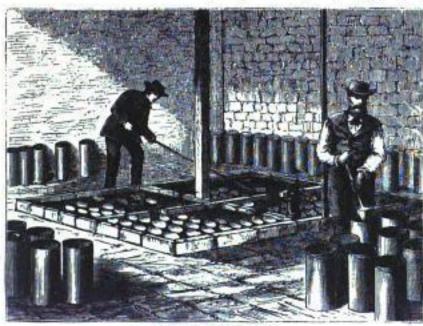

Orange County, and must butter her bread elsewhere.

The largest institution for the disposition of milk is the Creamery, which is, in other words, a chesse factory. Here is brought the milk which the farmers themselves are unable peoperly to prepare for market, for want of cool springs or sufficient help. Received here, it is placed in deep but narrow tin pails holding twelve or fourteen quarts. These are floated in large tanks of water. Such a one as our picture shows holds some four hundred pails. From these pails the cream is carefully taken and sent to market. The skimmed milk is then placed in a large vat and heated, by means of steampipes, to about 80°. Then the rennet is put in. From twenty to thirty minutes suffices for curding, and the mass is then stirred to separate the curd from the whey. After which it is heated still more; and then the whey, passing off through a strainer, goes to feed hops, while the card remains in the vat, to be salted and worked before putting into the presses. In two or three boars the curds become hard enough for the carras to be put upon them, and a few hours more in the presses make them ready for the shelves. Very carefully they must then be watched, lest the fly presses make them ready for the shelves. Very carefully they must then be watched, less the fly reactily they must then be watched, text the my lying in wait for them makes in them a snag house for her family. Greasing and turning must be a daily labor, and some weeks must pass before they are sufficiently cured for market. For the benefit of city consumers, who are pay-ing ten and twelve cents a quart for milk, from a tenth to a quarter of which is not infrequently nears Croten we may add that the highest prices.

pure Croton, we may add that the highest price the farmer ever gets for his milk is seven cents a quart; and he sometimes sells it for as low as two cents and a half. Our friends, the milkmen, have, therefore, it will be seen, a pretty good margin for freight and profit.

BRINGING TOBACCO TO MARKET IN VIRGINIA FORTY YEARS AGO.

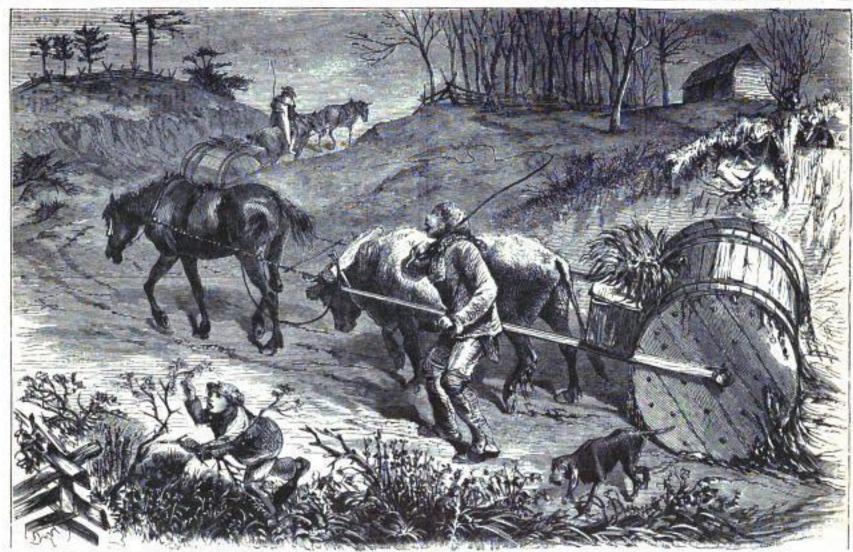

THE mode of transportation illustrated on page 297 was almost universally in vogue among the tobacco planters of Virginia within a comparatively about period, viz., up to the introduction of railroads into that State. A pair of rough wheels, composed of heavy planks battened together, sawed round, and exceeding the hogs-

TANK FOR COOLING MILK.

TAKING THE CURD FROM THE VAT.

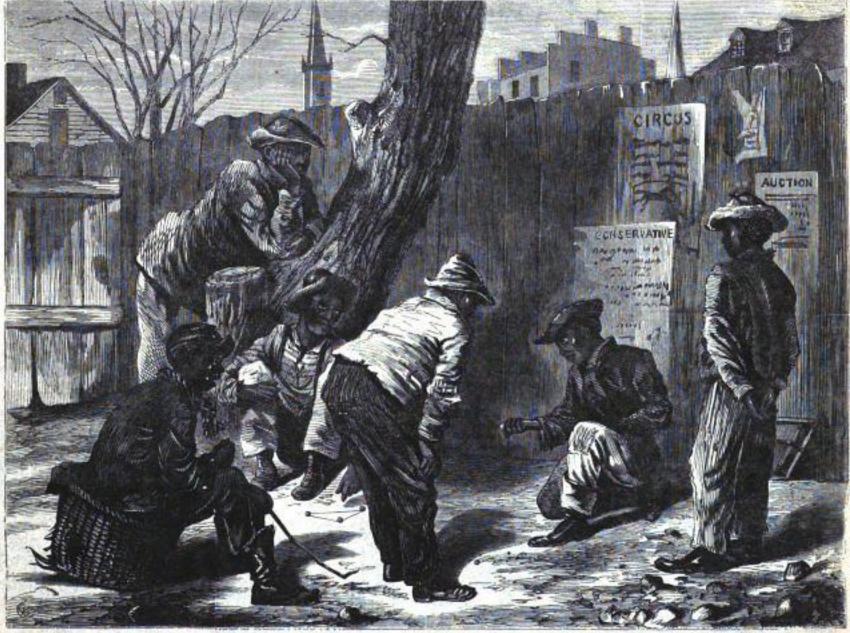

PRIMITIVE MODE OF BRINGING TOBACCO TO MARKET IN VIRGINIA FORTY YEARS AGO. - DRAWN BY W. L. SHEFPARD. - [SEE PAGE 196.]

head of tobacco two feet or thereabout in diameter, were firmly pinned to the heads of the hogehead, the pins running through into the tobacco. An axle, not running entirely through, nor properly an axle, as the wheel did not revolve upon it, projected on each side, and formed an attachment for the shafts; the box in front across the shafts was to carry provisions and forage.

This rode means of transport was called "Rolling tobacco." A steer and horse hitched "tandem," as shown in the sketch, were frequently the "team." The durkey in coon-skin cap and woolen mittens cracks his whip at the straining animals; his small companion gathers a linguring persimmon (or "simmon," as he would call it) from a supling; the harebound, who has followed his sable master from home, is awakened for a moment by a rustling sparrow; the "Roll-er"creaks and groans—and thus, within the mem-ory of thousands now living in Eastern Virginia, the "cheering weed" was trundled to market, bespettered and unsightly.

NEGRO BOYS PLAYING MARBLES-A STREET SCENE IN RICHMOND, VIRGINIA .- [DRAWN BY W. L. SHEPPARD.]

Charren Harms and Face, Som Lere, &c., cured at once by the use of Heyman's Compiler for with Objective. It keeps the hands soft in the coldest weather. See that you get the genotos. Soid by Druggists. Price 25 cents per box. Sent by mail on receipt of 56 cents.—Hessauss & Co., New York.

However is the best policy in medicine as well as in other things. Avan's Samarauria is a genuine preparation of that unequaled spring medicine and blood purifier, decidedly superfor to the poor indis-tions heretofore in the market. Trial proves it.— (Com.).

ADVERTISEMENTS.

POR BLACK WORMS and PIMPLES On the FACE, use Prant's Countains And Pintas Reside. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Pasav, 49 Bond St., New York. Bold every where.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

C. A. STEVENS & CO., 40 East 14th Street, Union Square, New York,

are offering

A choice selection of Diamonds, Pearls, Sapphires, and other Gens, mounted in the most article manner.

Also, Pine Jeweity of every variety. Watches from the best American and European manufactures. Silver and Plated Ware, a choice selection con-stantly on hand.

Particular attention given to the Revetting of Dia-monds, and the manufacture of Silver Ware for Testi-monials and Weddings, from original designs.

AGENTS for the SALE OF WATCHES MADDfactured by the UNITED STATES WATCH CO. of MARRON, New Jersey. Send for Circular.

Waltham Watches.

Bevana of watches at retail should be on their guardagained buying watches represented as "American," and which are usually advertised in connection with the words "Geolde," "Initiation Gold," and other words calculated to attract attention. Nine cases out of ten such watches are sporious, as our genuine morements are seidons, if even, put into any thing but solid gold or after cases. Large numbers of these worthous watches bear colorable initiations of our trademarks. To avoid imposition, buyers who do not know responsible jewelers should first procure a descriptive cutalogue of the different styles of watches useful by the American Watch Company, of Wattham, Max. The catalogue contains, in addition, much useful information to watchmarkers. Address.

ROBRINNS & APPLETION, General Acents.

ROBBINS & APPLETON, General Agents, 182 BROADWAY, New York.

A LIE UTTERED

Ned Buntline's New Story Buffalo

The King of the Border Men The Wildest Truest Tale he Ever Wrote Will be Commenced at once in the New York Weekly

BRAINARD'S

MUSICAL WORLD.

AN ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Only $1 00 per Annum. The best and most popular musical monthly in the relt. Circulation, 20,000 copies. November and Devaluer Numbers, containing SIX NEW PIECES OF MUSIC.

rent to any eddress, as specimens, on receipt of Ten Centa. Elegant premiums for Clubs. Address B. BRAINARD & SONS. Music Publishers, Cleveland, Ohio.

DO NOT BE

CAUGHT

buying a Currerwan Passaser for your friends and children until you have seen the Lozo Pendulum Board, which is the best Parion Game Board ever invented, being only 3% feet long and 18 inches wide. It is lined with the finest billiard cloth, and contains a combination of four popular and fascinating games, wis.

BAGATELLE, TEN PINS, and RING TOSS.

We invite every body to call at our salesroom and examine it. If you can't come yourself, write to some friend in New York asking them to call. Send for a descriptive catalogue and peice-list. It can be sent to any part of the United States before the Holidays.

NOVELTY GAME CO., 14 MURRAY St., New York.

DR. J. A. SHERMAN,

Artistic Surgeon, respectfully offers has revice in the application of also fropture Caralive Appliances, at his office, 65t ERICADWAY, course 4th Street.

The great experience of Dr. SHERMAN, resulting from the long and constant devertion to the treatment and core of this disease, assets him of his ability to relieve all, without regard to the age of the patient or duration of the infirmity, or the difficulties which they may have hereatfors emonutered in seeking relieve, New Orleans, for a period of more than fifteen years, had under his care the worst cases in the cointry, all of which were effectually relieved, and many, to their great loy, restored to seemd body.

None of the poins and logistics resulting from the me of other Trusses are found in Dr. Sherman's Appliances; and, with full knowledge of the assertion, personnel of the disease, than can be obtained of any other general, or In the inventions of any other persons the United States.

Prices to said all classes. It is the only, as well as the chappets reasedy ever offered the afflicted. Photographic likenesses of cases before and after treatment ferrolated on receipt of two cents.

The Companion is an eight-page weekly paper-practical in its character, wideawake, and entertertaining.

It gives a great variety of reading, interesting alike to young and old-and has for contributors such writers as

Rev. Edward E. Hale, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, "Sophie May," Mrs. Helen C. Weeks, Miss E. Steart Phelps, ogether with many other well known and popular authors Subscription Price $1.50. Send for a specimen copy to PERRY MASON & CO., Publishers Youth's Compan 161 Washington St., Bosros, Mass.

DENEW 11 RENEW 111-Ether Harrer's Werker, Mostrier, or Banas, $4, and Tur Pana-solouscal Jorenas, $3, sent to one address for $5, by S. R. WELLS, 350 Broadway, New York.

$20 A DAY! Business new. Samples and Circu-

AT LOW PRICES.

A Large Assertment of ROBES DE CHAMBRE and HOUSE COATS,

For HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

FC. A. NICWEGLL, 727 Broadway, Cor. Wastriy Place.

Eight per Cent. Gold. HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

The undersigned, as representatives of the ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COM-PANY, have the honor to offer for sale the

$1,500,000

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

(PAYABLE IN GOLD)

ST.JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD CO.,

Bearing Eight per Cent. Interest in Gold, Free of Government Tax, secured by a first and only mortgage on the railway, which runs from St. Joseph to Fort Kearney.

Total length of road, 271 miles.

Distance mortgaged, 111 miles; and at the rate of only $13,500 per mile on a completed road, costing to build and equip more than double the amount mortgaged.

Trustee for Bondbolders: FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

This line of railroad is the extension of the Honnibal and St. Joseph Ballroad, with its connections North and East, and the St. Louis and St. Joseph Rati-road, with its connections South and East, both lines roos, such its connections South and Rais, such times converging at St. Joseph, and connecting at once with the St. Joseph and Denver City Railrood, running West, through Eastern Kausen, into the heart of Nebraska, and connecting with the Union Pacific Railroad at the City of Fort Kearney, making the shortest route known to California and the Pacific States.

These bonds have thirty years to run from August 14, 1869. Payable at maturity, in Gold, in the City of

The interest is payable in Gold on the 15th of Febrnary and August in each year, at the rate of 8 per cent., free of Government Tax, in New York, London, and Frankfort-on-the-Main, at the holder's option, without notice, and at the following equivalents:

	ON $1000 BOND.
In	New York$40 gold.
In	London
In	Frankfort-ou-the-Main 100 flor.

On $500 Bond, one half these amounts respectively.

The Bonds are in denominations of $1000 and $200. They are Coupon Bonds, but may be registered in the owner's name at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Com-pany, and, by the surrender of the Coupons, can be converted into a Registered Bond, with interest payable to the registered owner.

Company's Capital Stock, $10,000,000, to which nearly $2,000,000 is subscribed and paid up by local subscriptions, which amount has and is being expended on the road.

The Company have $1,500,000 acres of superior land immediately adjoining the line. This was a grant direct from the United States Government to aid the Company in their work, and, at the Government price of $9 50 per acre, has a value of $4,000,000, while the loan is only $1,000,000, and is the only debt against the Company.

The issue of $1,500,000 of these Bonds is all that can be issued by the Company.

Bonds sent and packages received free of expres charge, and marketable securities converted without sion, to parties investing in these Bonds. We offer these Bonds at the low price of FIN and accrued interest in currency, with the reserved right to advance the price without notice.

Pamphlets, maps, and information furnished on spplication.

Parties desiring safe and increative investments should lose no time in investigating these securities.

W. P. CONVERSE & CO.,

Commercial Agents.

54 Pine Street, New York.

TANNER & CO.,

Piscal Agents,

49 Wall Street, New York.

Having had all the papers and documents re lating to the loan examined by competent counsel and pronounced complete and sufficient, and having personally examined the same, which we find regular and perfect, and having had our own engineers examine the road and property, whose reports are satisfactory, we do, with the utmost confidence and satisfaction, recommend the EIGHT PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE GOLD BONDS OF THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY as A SAFE, SURE, AND PROFITABLE IN-VESTMENT, worthy the attention of capitalists, investors, and others.

> W. P. CONVERSE & CO. TANNER & CO.

PUBLISH ARE ALMOST IDEALLY WELL EDITED. - The Nation, N. Y.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Harper's Weekly.

Harren's Weekly.

Harren's Weekly.

Harren's Weekly is an illustrated record of, and a commentary upon all the important events of the time. Due attention is also given to topics of especial and local interest. The best artists in the country are constantly engaged in the department of illustration, and the Publishers are also largely indebted to photographers in all the large cities of America, Barope, and the East for prompt and valuable contributions.

As a Literary Journal, Harren's Wezzur is recognized as the only illustrated newspaper which has ever succeeded in establishing and maintaining a chaim to pre-emineure.

The Editorial matter of Harren's Wezzur constitutes one of its most prominent features; it includes weekly articles upon National Politics, Finance, Commerce, and Miscollaneous topics.

In No. 618, for November 20, was commenced the new story "MAN AND WIFE," by Weiker Coulses, the Anther of "The Woman in White," "So November 4, Armenials," and "The Howartons." Subsectiors remitting $4.00 for each single subscription will be furnished with the Weiker from the commencement of this story to the cines of 1878.

Published Workle, with prefuse Illustrations.

Published Workly, with prefuse Illustrations.

The young lady who buys a single number of Han-ran's Hazan is made a subscriber for life.—S. Y. Evening Post.

Harper's Bazar.

FASHION, PLEASURE, AND INSTRUCTION.

FASHION, PLEASURE, AND INSTRUCTION.
HARTEN'S BEARA has gained a success the most repid and wonderful ever known in the annals of journalism, and is recognized as the best and most attractive family paper ever lessed. As an illustrated chronicler of Fashion it is without a rival in this country. By a special arrangement, involving great expense, with the publishers of the Berlin Banza—the iseding journal of fashion in Europe—its fashion-plates are published in New York simultaneously with their appearance in Berlin and Paris.

A large portion of the Bazas is every week devoted to instructive and entertaining reading-matter—Stories, Foems, Blographical Sketches, and Goesip. The Editorial articles are always spicy, and cover every topic of social interest. No effort and no expense will be spared to permanently secure for this journal the victory which it has won so rapidly, and which it so well decrease.

Published Feekly, with prefere Blustrations.

Published Weekly, with profuse Illustrations.

The most popular Monthly in the world .- N. Y. 66-

The Best Monthly Periodical, not in this country alone, but in the English language.—The Press, Phila.

Harper's Magazine.

HARTEN'S MAGAINEN has now entered upon its Fordicta Februse. Its encouse hitherto—unrivated by that of any other monthly periodical in Europe or America —has been due to the popular character and variety of its contents; to the enterprise of its Publishers in securing for its pages, at any cost, the best literary contributions of English and American writers; to its profusely illustrated articles of Traval and Exploration; to the promptness, authenticity, and popular treatment of its pagers upon schenitic subjects, upon the mechanical improvements of the age, and upon current topics; and to the variety and interest of its special Editorial Departments of the age, and upon current topics; and to the variety and interest of its special Editorial Departments—to which recently a new one has been added, via., the Monthly Edentific Record. The elements upon which the past serous of the Magazine has depended will still continue to be its leading characteristics; and its publishers are condent that with increased situation to the wants of the reading public they will be able to enhance even its present popularity.

HARTEN'S MAGAZINE contains from fifty to one bundred per cent, more matter than any similar periodical issued in the English language. Thus the ample space at the disposal of its Publishers will enable them to treat fully of all the topics embraced in their plan.

The Publishers feel themselves warranted in axing and anticipating for the future a continuance of the favor which has been accorded to their enterprise in the past.

Published Marith: with profuse Hissatrations.

Published Mouthly, with profuse Illustrations

TERMS for HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, and BAZAR.

the Werkly or Baras, to prepay the United States postage.

The Volumes of the Magazinz commence with the Numbers for Jane and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Werklan and Barak commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number sont after the reactif of his order. When the theoretical and the description is to be changed, both the old and new one must be given. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In resulting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft bayable to the order of Harrian & Beormans is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the studee.

gar Subscribers singly to either of Harper's Periodicals farnished from the present time to the close of 1800 for Four Dollars.

Trans rox Arvervance is Harren's Psinorecala.

Harper's Haunries.—Whole Page, $750; Haif Page, $135; Quarter Page, $70—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 30 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Westly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $1 00 per Line.—each insertion.

Harper's Banar.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 30 per Line.—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

A.T.STEWART & CO.

A LARGE REDUCTION in the prices of the Goods

IN ALL THE DEPARTMENTS OF THEIR RE-TAIL ESTABLISHMENT, Vis. :

Bilks, Velvets, Dress Goods, Laces, Embroideries, Purs,

ASTRAKHAN AND SEALSKIN JACKETS,

SHAWLS, HOSIERY, Ladies', Misses', Children's, and Infants'

Wearing Apparel, GENTLEMEN'S PURNISHING GOODS,

UPHOLSTERY and CURTAIN MATERIALS, CARPETS, HOUSEKEEPING GOODS, &c.,

PARTICULARLY REQUEST AN INSPECTION OF THE SAME, without importunity to purchase. BROADWAY, 4TH AVE., and 10TH ST.

s. W. GEERY,

IMPORTER,
Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Tess, Wines, Cigars, and CHOICE PARILY GROCERIES,
Formerly I. & W. Geery,
Established in 1894. New York.

The selection of Choice Tess and Oi! Wines has een the special business of this house for years. My stock comprises some of the Oidest Liquors in

My stock comprises some of the Ottoes.

My stock comprises some of the Ottoes

the country.

Constantly on hand, a full assortment of every thing appertaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Octors will be called for (in the city) every morning, if dealred.

Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

Notes for December,

ADDRESSED TO

THE FEEBLE AND DEBILITATED.

This is a trying season for invalide—indeed, for all who are not blessed with robust constitutions and from frames.

Iron frames.

Cold has come upon us enddenly, scaling up the open pores, and scaling in, as it were, any seeds of disease that may have been lurking in the system, but which remained undeveloped so long as the waste matter of the body and all sorid and unwholesome humatter of the body and all acris and unwinescence in-more were freely discharged by evaporation from the surface and through the bowels.

A tonic, aperient, and alterative medicine is now needed to invigorate the vital powers depressed by a low temperature; to stimulate and purify the secre-tions, and to fit the body to endure, without incoure-nience, pain, or dange, the sudden climatic change which nathers in the Witter.

The only preparation which will fully meet this al-most universal need, and will thoroughly and safely perform the important work, is the leading total and

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS.

This popular specific improves the appetite, invigo-rates the digestive organs, regulates the flow of bits, enriches the blood, calms the nerves, relieves consti-pation, promotes superficial circulation and evapora-tion, and, being compresed solely of wholesome vego-table elements, with a pure stimulant as their diffusive vehicle, may be taken by the weakest without fear. The flavor is agreeable; for although the BITTERS are a potent medicine, they contain no nansesting ele-ment.

Rascality Rampant!

Rascality Rampant!

Swindlers in Arms !-The "Svan-Svanum Bassas" is threatened with arrest for its truthful exposures of the "Tricks and Traps" of Swindlers. Our rascal offers $000 to be "let alone." See the Dec. "Bassam." 26 swindlers "ventilated." The "STAR-SPANGLED BANNER!" enters upon its eighth year in Jan. 1870. It is a large libestrated 40-column paper; 8 pages; Ledger size; for type; overflowing with spicedid reading. It is devoted to Liberature, Poetry, Sense, Wit, Windom and to any thing calculated to entertain or instruct. The superb Steel Engraving "Evangeline," by its feet in size, mounted on a roller, in sect prepaid and grafts to every subscriber. Only 75 cents a year. Now as rus man. Your money will be refunded if you are not perfectly satisfied. Remember, there's nothing like 2. You need it. It will save you wassey. All newedealers sell it. Only 5 cents. Address STAR-SPANGLED BANNER, Hinsdale, N. H.

NEWMAN & CAPRON'S

Establishment for the sale of HOUSE FURNISHING s and Plated Ware, in great variety, is still lo cated at 1172 Broadway, cor. 28th Street.

Also, Builders' Hardware, Locks, Electro-Broused and Pisted Work of their own manufacture. Old household articles requiring Replating done on short notice. They are also prepared to contract for Bell Work and Speaking Tubes in Hotels and Private Dwellings.

Carbolic Salve.

Prepared with Carbolic Acid, which is used in Hospitals, by direction of Physicians of most eminent standing every where. Possesses the most reevery where. Possesses the most re-markable healing properties ever dis-covered, 25 cts. per Box. John F. Hen-ry, Proprietor, 8 College Place, N. Y.

CEND ONE DOLLAR, and get by return in mail the pretiest Present you can give a Lady this Christman-Loring's Box of Preset Note Paper, with her Initial. Address LORING, Publisher, Boston.

Stammering cured by Bates' Appliances. For descriptive namphies address Stempson & Co., Box 5006, N. T.

THE CELEBRATED

IMITATION GOLD HUNTING WATCHES,

"COLLINS METAL," Improved Oroide.

These jurily celebrated Watchee have been so theroraghly basted during the last four years, and their repnuation for time and as imitations of Gold Watches is so well established, as to require no recommendations, Prices:—Horizontal Watches, $10, equal in appearance and for time to Gold Watches worth $100; FullJeweled Levers, $18, equal to $100 Gold once; PhilJeweled Levers, stars fine and superior finish, $20, equal to $200 Gold once.

We have just commenced making a very fine American Watch, full jeweled, Patent Lever, chronometer belance, adjusted to heat, cold, and position, $50 ounces down weight, equal in appearance and for time to a Gold Watch costing $200.

We charge only $20 for these magnificent Watches,
All our watches are in hunting cases, gents' and ladies' sines. Chains, Collins Metal, $2 to $5. Also, all kinds of Jewelry, equal to gold, at one-tenth the price.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

TO CLUBS...—Where Six watches are ordered at one time, we send a Seventh watch free. Goods sent by Express to be paid for on delivery.

C. E. COLLINS & CO., No. 335 Broadway, New York.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING!

Novelty Job Printing-Press.

The only Low-Priced Press.

The only Low-Priced Press.

The only Low-Priced Press.

The only Low-Priced Press.

ever invented that will do good printing. Printing can be done as well and as rapidly on this press as on the best that printers use: and fire printing one of the contract of the first printers use: and fire printing, it is entirely without a rival.

The Seet Heldisia Off for Seys. Price of Presses.—31 5, $30, $32, and $50. Bend for full descriptive illustrated directions, with testimentals from all parts of the country, and specimens of plain and color printing done on the press, and specimen sheets of types, bedders, cuts, rules, &c., to BENJ. O. WOODS, Proprietor, SEI Federal Street, Boston, Mass.

CATARRH.

RELIEF AT ONCE !-- A PERFECT CURE! MORTON'S NEW REMEDY FOR CATARRIE AND MODE OF TREATMENT

AND MODE OF TREATMENT
Is an improvement, and a perfection never before attained. It consists of the alternated inhalation of harmless liquids—they are paintess, deansing, decolorsing, soothing, and powerful circulties. Relief and comfort follow from the first day's use, and a permaneat cure in due course of time. It penetrates through the absorbents to the very seal of the disease—beeska it up at its fountain bess—removes all the westched symptoms, such as pain in the temples, noises in the head, obstruction of the air passages, offersive discharges from the noestria, and dropping of moras into the throat, "cold in the head," essecuing, distrincas, loss of memory, dismoss of vision, and restores the escuof memory, dismoss of vision, and restores the scocome mailady in all its forms forcever, and cares the most hopeless case known. Send a Stamp for Pamphiet to GERHITT NOSTON, office 11 Ann St., N. Y.

The Stan.

Chart & Dalla, Eprove Comm.

The charges stands, and heat For Vart accompany.

Everybody lims it. There editions Bart. Will know when the Bar and Warry. If a year. And the Navary of helicopies. Pall reports of markets, agriculture, Farmers and Frair Grovener Chair, and a complete stary is receipt the control of the common part of the control of the cont and D. L. W. ENGLAND, Publisher Sun, New York.

"One of the best in the country."

So says the Bosrow Journal of the

NEW ENGLAND FARMER,

the leading Agricultural paper of New England.

TERMS: Weekly, $2.50; Monthly, $1.50, per year. Send stamp for specimens and premium list. R. P. EATON & CO., Boston Mass.

TWO NICE NEW GAMES:

"Words Within Words" and "Blowing Cotto

Finasing and entertaining for Old and Young. They are sure to be favorites in every family circle. The two games, in a neat ben, for 50 cents. Sent postpad on receipt of price, by the publishers, G. M. WHIPPLE & A. A. SRITH, Salem, Mass.

"Containing Every Thing of Interest." SO SATS THE "ASSETTLE NEWS" OF THE

YORK OBSERVER. $8 50 PER ANNUM. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

SIDNEY R. MORSE, JR., & CO., ST PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

 ROUGH AND READY; or, Life with the New York Newsboys," the fourth "Ragged Dick" Book, costs $1.35 by mall, from LORING, Publisher, Boston.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR

PRIEST and NUN. Apply at once to CRITTENDEN & McKINNEY, 1806 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

DOOSEY'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.
A Complete Catalogue new ready. Sent free.
Becary's "Bulled Super," the new Haif-Dime Series of the Best Sougs. Seld every where, or specimen number mailed for Five Cents.—446 Breadway, N. Y.

TOYS FOR THE HOLIDAYS, at the Children's Free Riding School and Toy Bazzar, 478 Becodway, between Grand and Broome Streets.

LEWIS P. TIBBALS.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

BRONZES.

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-cties to be found in the city, and are offered at

to Sign of Gold Telegraph. ...

TO THE WORKING CLASS.—We are now propered to far-rials all classes with consense employment at house, the whole of the fluids or far the space movements. Business new, highly and recepting, and a proportional sear to develop that had one in the business. Boys and give seen eventy as much as mon. Thankel who may this profess may send their actions, and tearths had seen, we make finis requirabled offer; To ruch as now not will action, we will seed by the pay for the involve of writing. Full particulars, whose amongs, which will do to commence work on, and a copy of The Proper's Literary (responsible-one of the largest and best family sewspapers positioned—all sent/free by mail. Beaut., if you want permanent, profitable work, addition R. C. ALLEN & CO., Augusta, Maine.

THE BOLLAR WATCH.—A perfect time.

Leeper, with superior compass attachment.

Cased in pure Oroids of Gold, enameled dial, glass crystal, steel and brans works. Usual watch size.

Made restrictly of meets, and in elegantly-finished Oroide case. Extirely new—patented. A perfect "gen of ingeneity." This is no worden compass. Warranted rive years. Satisfaction gnaranteed. Single sample, in next case, malled people for only $1, three for $2, by addressing the sole manufacturers, MAGNETIC WATCH CO., Hundals, N. H.

HARRIE KITTUREN CHINE

For Family use—simple, cheap, reliable. Enits every thing. AGENTS WANTER. Circular and sample stocking FRER. Address HINKLEY KNITTING MACHINE CO., Bath, Ma., or 176 Broadway, N. Y.

CHIRLSTMAS and New Year, ... Clemence's Garment Supporter and Jacobs' Family Scissors Sharpener, "Beautiful Holday Gifa." Sent any where prepaid. Supporter, 31, Sharpener, 35c. Great Inducements to Agents. Southerick & Hostings, Woroster, Hoss.

Kidney Complaints, Gravel, Stricture, and all Organic Troubles cared by using the SHELDON SPRING WATER.
Book of thirty pages, with certificates, sent free.
Address J. W. BEALS, Treasurer, Boston, Mass.

A WELL-PAYING BUSINESS is offered to A Agents every where, by the Armun Presidents Co., incelling their very popular Books. All want-ing business for the Winter-should will est once for our extra liberal terms to E.G. Svonks, Auburn, N.Y.

A PEMALE Resident Agent wanted in every town in the United States, to perform easy labor at their homes by which they can make $2 of an evening. Cash sent in advance. Address B. DURAND, 504 Eighth Ava., New York City.

VINEGAR — HOW MADE FROM CIDER, 10 hours, without seing drugs. For directors, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Coun.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored hair or T beard to a permanent Black or Briwn. One Comb sent by malf for th. For sale by Merchants & Dengelste, generally. Address Magic Comb Co., Springfeld, Mass.

HOWE'S Never-Palling Agus Cure and Tonic Bitters.

— Rowe's Concentrated Syrap cares terrible diseases.

— Incipient Consumption, Catarrh, Cancer, &c., every time. gt each. C. B. Hown, B.D., Seneca Palls, N. Y.

TGOL Chests and Lathes,—Are elegant, tesful, and isstructive. Suitable for boys, amateurs, and mechanics. Disstrated catalogue free.

Address GEORGE PARE, Buffalo, New York.

SYADILOH EHT ROP NUP, - Serention of the Paper-Tubes. Will make you Laugh. By mail, So. FLETCHER & CO., 27 Nassau St.

MRS. WHITNEY'S New Novel, "Hither-to: a Story of Yesterday," costs $2.00 by mail, from LORING, Publisher, Boston.

Collegiate and Commercial Institute (General Russell's School, New Haven, Ct. Winter term begins Jan. 11.

The New Books of the Season

PERSONAL DE

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

United States, on receipt of the price.

HAYDN'S DICTIONARY OF DATES, relating to all Ages and Nations. For Universal Reference. Ed-tied by Bessams Viscourt, Assistant Secretary and Keeper of the Library of the Royal Institution of Great Britain; and Revised for the Use of American Readers. See, Cloth, $5.00.

LOST IN THE JUNGLE. Narrated for Young Peo-ple. By PAUL B. Do CRARLES, Anthor of "Piscov-eries in Equatorial Africa," "Wild Life under the Equator," "Journey to Ashango Land," "Socies of the Gorilla Country," &c. With numerous En-gravings. 12mo, Cloth, $1.75.

WILD SPORTS OF THE WORLD: a Book of Natural History and Adventure. By James Generators, Anthor of "The Adventures of Reuben Davidger," "The True History of a Little Regammin," "The Seven Carses of London," &c. With 147 Illustrations. Crown Syo, Cloth, $5.50.

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. By JUSTIM McCarter, Author of "The Waterdale Neighboos." Illustrated. Pro, Paper, 15 cents.

THE POLAR WORLD: a Popular Description of Man and Nature in the Arctic and Antarctic Regions of the Globe. By Dr. G. Harrers, Author of "The Sea and its Living Wonders," "The Harmonies of Nature," and "The Tropical World." With Additional Chapters and 180 Illustrations. Byo, Cloth, 48 To.

THE ROMANCE OF SPANISH HISTORY. By JOHN S. C. ASSOTT, Author of "The French Revolution," "The History of Napoleso Benaparte," &c. With Illustrations. 18mo, Cloth, $2.00.

WRECKED IN PORT. A Novel. By Erorum Yaves, Author of "Klesing the Red," "Land at Last," "Black Sheep," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, King, of Naples and of Italy. By Jozep S. C. Amort, Author of "The History of Napoleon Bonaparte," "The French Revolution," &c. 18mo, Cloth, $1 80.

A BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK; or A County Pam-ily. A Novel. By the Author of "One of the Fam-ily," "Carlyon's Year," "Found Dead," &c. 8vo, Pager, 35 cents.

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1818; or, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Busson J. Lossaxa, Author of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revention." With 882 Illustrations, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Barritt, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Yolume, 1904 pages, large 870. Frice, in Couts, $1 60: Sheep, $8 60: Full Roan, $9 60; Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, $19 60.

11. GEORGE ELIOTS NOVELS, Complete. Harper's limitrated Library Edition, Complete in 5 vols., 17mo, Microcco Cloth, 15 cents per volume. The set complete, in a neat case, 25 fb.

ADAM BROK.—THE MILL ON THE PLOSS.—FRIER HOLY.—Somess or Clerical Livy and Stles Mirker.—Emole.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS

VARITY FAIR. 38 Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

—Paymensis. 179 Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 25 cts.

—The Vincourant. 150 Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 16 cents.—The New coars. 150 Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 16 cents.—The Adventures of Pauler. 64 Illustrations and Portrait of Author. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.—Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

18 Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

18. CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

GREAT OFFER.

HORACE WATERS, No. 631 Broadway, N.Y., will dispose of One Hundred Planos, Melodecos, and Organs, of six first-class makers, at extremely low prices for Cash during the Holidays, or will take from $5 to $25 monthly until paid; the same to let, and rent money applied if purchased. New 7-Octave Planos for $65 and upward; New Organs for $65 and upward; New Organs for $65 and upward, for cash.

Extraordinary power, with wide field of observation, in OPERA, FIRID, and MA-RINE GLASSES, portable and compact. Calalogues by enclosing starsp.

SEMMONS, Optician, 687 Broadway, N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED for Willson's School and Family Charts. To canvass every state in the Union. Men of ability, and unil recommended, can realise handsome profits. For particulars and terms, address HARPER & BROTHERS, Franklin Square, N. Y.

HORRIBLE!—I suffered with CATAERSE
Thirty Years!—was cared in six weeks by a simple remedy, and will send the receipt, postage free, ta all afflicted. Address Ray. T. J. BEAD, Drawer 116, Syracuse, New York.

POCKET REVOLVERS. SIX Shoots A nest, durable weapon; four-inch harrel. Price $1 50, postpaid. Address S. G. AUSTIN, Elsis, Mich.

A GENTS can make $200 per month by selling our Silver-Plating Fluid. $3 per dosen. RICHMOND & HOSTER, Seneca Falls, N. Y.

WAS cared of Deafness and Catarrh by a simple remedy, and will send the receipt free. Mss. M. C. LEGGETT, Hoboken, N. J.

THE Needty Job Printing-Presses, for Printers, Mer-chants, & Amateure. Prices, $15, $50, & $50. Soud for descriptive circular, C. C. Thurston, Brooklyn, N. Y.

$290 for first-class new 7-Octave Planos. $290 Sent on trial, U.S. Prano Co., New York.

MILKING THE ERIE COW.

C. G. Gunther's Sons,

502-504 BROADWAY.

Offer a very Elegant Assortment of Novelties in

SEAL AND ASTRAKHAN SACQUES,

TURBANS,

Boas, Ties, &c.

Hatter and Furrier. DANIEL D. YOUMANS, 717 BROADWAY,

offers at low prices:

LADIES' FINE FURS in every variety; SEAL and ASTRAKHAN SACQUES AND TURBANS;
WHITE POX MUFFS AND BOAS
CHILDREN'S PURS, GENTS' FURS, &c.
Importer of ENGLISH HATS for Gentlemen's Wear.

PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

[Patented June 1, 1809.]

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the ad-vantages of the French patents, with wonderful

FF FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. _4 SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO.,

SOLE MANUFACTURERS, Wallingford, Conn.

CATALOGUES, by Mail, 10 cents each. CATALLOGUES, 9 AND THE PARTY OF THE PARTY OF

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 924 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A Holiday Present.-Pellal & Sun manufacture warranted Gen-ulne Mesrachaum Goods. Shores: Elp Broadway, St. Nicholas Hotel, & El John St., middle of block. Send for chredits to Letter-Box 2006. Also, Repairing and Boiling done.

Ahearn's Patents.

Purchasers wanted for every State and County not pet sold. $1000 and express can be made weakly, on every $200 invested. For particular, address J. AHEARN, 5 P. O. Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

CHEAPENT PAPER in the WORLD, Bros. RASS. RACT: fell of FACT. FUS. and FAST CT: SUT to please "all hands." Only 50 ch. a year; valuable persulum to subscribers and agenta. Bjec-imens. Siz Cents. Bay where you saw this. Address UNION BANNER, Belfast, Maine.

A GENTS. OROIDE GOLD. AGENTS. A 250 a day made sary. Osnora Gen. Far. Forestain Pzv. Is indestructible. Writes 4 pages with one dip. Sella at stell—looks like 15-carat Geld. Sample box. Il pers. Sr 55 cents, postpaid; also other nowthes. Crys Novarov Co., 484 Library St., Philadelphis, Pa.

WEBB'S

ONLY PRACTICAL ADDING MACHINE IN THE WORLD.

THE WORLD.

This little matchine, no less wonderful in its simplicity than in its efficacy, has won a more speedy success than any other lawselfon of the day. While the sewing matchine had to struggle through long years for adoption, Webby Adding Matchine was accepted at once. Where numbers are called off, it gives instantaneous additions. It carries up the columns of a longer account, two at a time, with mechanical screamy. The President of the Piest National Bank of New York writes in his institutable. "IT HELLEYES THE MIND ENTIRELY, AND REDUCES ARITHMETIC TO A SIMPLE MOTION OF THE HAND IT THE matchine took the first needs and diplomas at the last American Institute Fair, New York, and also at the last Mass. Since Fair, in Booton. It is guaranteed to do every thing claimed for it, and the respect course from nearly all who use it that not enough for decisions—that it does more. Frice 38 and $10. Sent by mail on receipt of price and parkage (51 centry, or by express, C. O. D., at the customer's expense. To remit (post-office order, registered letter, or draft) saves the return-moticy charge. For circular, testimonials, &c., esclose stamp. Biate and Courty Richas (orcharry for sale.—WEBS ADDING MACHINE CO.

R. P. DUTTON & CO., Selling Agents, 713 Broadway, New York.

Le Van's IMPROVED GOVERNOR,

Balance-Valve Combined,

Warranted to give entire sat-isfaction. One will be sent to any responsible party on thirty days trial, to be returned at my superme if not as represented. Price-list and Pactographs sent on application.

W. Barnet Le Van & Co., S. E. Car. 24th and Wood Sts., PHILADELPHIA.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, MANCYACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS.

EW Sand for Price-List.] Baltimore, Md.

Fancy Goods, Swies Carved Goods, Fine Gold and Sliver Watches. M. J. PAILLARD & Co., 686 BEOADWAY, N. Y.

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This one Bell, located in the steeping-room, rings upon the testing of each window and opering of such window student of the house. The sounds who are using it see sify to its marits. Send for a Pamphlet.
E. HOLMES, 7 Harray St., N. Y.

TO THE LADIES.—One week's time, pleas-naily employed, will pay for a first-rate Sawing Macinica. Address COREY D. RELSEY, 190 Laulington Ave., New York.

I MPORTANT! - Health and pleasure in the use I of hears Put. Peace Bakes. Testimonials and de-scription sent by Dunuar & Hockwall, Baffalo, N.Y.

HARVEY FISK.

A. S. HATCH.

Office of FISK & HATCH,

lankers and Bealers in Government Securities.

No. 5 Names Street, New York, Sprender 8, 1869.

To our Customers and Correspondents:

The surprising development of our national resources, and the rapidity with which the Government is now enabled to reduce the national debt, by weekly purchases, render it apparent that the time is approaching when the Five-Twenty bonds may be funded at not over four or four and a half per cent, interest.

Meanwhile their high price, as compared with other classes of securities paying an equal rate of interest, is leading to general inquiry for more profitable forms of investment in which money may

During the war the necessities and peril of the Government, and the consequent cheapness of its securities, rendered them so attractive that, from this cause, combined with the patriotic faith of the people in their safety, they absorbed almost the entire floating capital of the country, and diverted attention from other classes of securities which had before been deemed sufficiently conservative and sound to meet the wants of the most cautious investors,

The Government is no longer a borrower. It no longer needs the country's capital, but desires gratefully and honorably to repay it.

The rapid accumulation of capital for investment, and the reduction of the national debt and improvement of the national credit—rendering it certain that hereafter but a comparatively low rate of interest can be derived from investment in Government bonds—is compelling the search for other safe and well-guarded channels into which capital not employed in business may wisely flow.

The enterprises of Peace, no less needful in their time and place, for the common welfare, than were the waste and cost of War, now call for the capital which the Government no longer needs, and offer for its use a remuneration which the Government need no longer pay, and, in some cases, a security as stable and enduring as the faith of the nation itself.

The desire to capitalize the premium which may now be realized upon Five Twenty bonds, and which a material decline in Gold toward par, and the ability of the Government to fund them at a lower rate of interest, may at any time extinguish, is felt by many holders who desire some satisfactory assurance as to which of the many lower-priced securities in the market would afford the necessary safety to justify an exchange.

The applications for information and advice which are addressed to us daily, show how universal is the desire for this assurance as to what forms of investment more profitable than Government securities at present market races are entitled to the confidence of investors.

The pressure of this want has led us to feel the importance of directing our own attention as bankers, our large experience, and our facilities for obtaining reliable information, to the work of supplying it in some measure, and to offer the results of our inquiries to those who may be disposed to confide in our good faith and judgment.

We are unwilling to offer to our friends and the public any thing which, according to our best judgment, is not as secure as the national obligations themselves, with which we have hitherto principally identified ourselves

Since closing the GREAT CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD LOAN, which meets all these requirements, we have carefully examined many others, but have found no other which would fully do so, until the following was placed in our hands.

FIRST MORTGAGE

Six per Cent. Gold Bonds

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.,

The Western Pacific Railroad, connecting Secremento with San Francisco, furnishes the final link in the extraordinary fact of an unbroken line of rail from the shore of the Atlantic to that of the Pacific.
It is 150 miles in length, including a short branch, and it will be the

METROPOLITAN LINE

OF THE PACIFIC COAST.

connecting its chief cities, and traversing the garden of the rich and growing State of California; receiving, in addition to an immense and intrative local traffic, the through business over the Union and Cautral Pacific Railroads—between the Enstern States and Sacramento.

maircage—between the naviero States and Sacrametto.

It is completed, fully equipped, and in successful operation, and its scarnings in October—the first full month—montroided to $195,000 in oots. The not carmings will, by a moderate estimate, amount to $600,000 per annow, in colo, while the interest on its Bonds will be but $188,000.

The value of the property and franchises is not less than

TEN MILLIONS OF DOLLARS.

and the amount of the mertgage is $2,800,000.

The bonds are of $3000 each, have thirty years to run, and will be sold at

NINETY, AND ACCRUED INTEREST, in currency. They are made payable, PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST, IN GOLD COIN, in the city of New York. Coupons due January and July 1st.

The near approach of the time when the United States can probably fund the greater poetion of its Six per cent, debt, in naturally causing inquiry for other forms of investment which will afford satisfactory security with the same rate of interest. THE WESTERN PACIFIC RAILENDAD FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS must have an immense advantage over all other securities based upon marely local or encompleted relironda, and may be held with an much confidence as Government bonds, or as first-class mortgages on New York City securities.

property.

The loan is small in amount. Its rinims to confidence are apparent. It will be rapidly taken. Bonds will be delivered as the orders are received.

Government bonds received at their full market value in exchange.

FISK & HATCH, Bankers.

pg. We buy and sell Government Bonds, and receive the accounts of Banks, Bankers, Corporations, and others, subject to check at eight, and allow interest on daily balances.

LOW PRICES EXTREMELY

UNION ADAMS & CO.

FOR LADIES.

Patent Merino Vests. Patent Merino Dramers. · Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Merino Hosiery, Kid and Castor Gloves.

FOR MISSES.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Patent Union Dresses, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Cashmere Hosiery, Roman and Fancy Saskes.

No. 637 BROADWAY.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

POURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 677.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1800, by Harper & Boothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southers District of New York.

REYNARD'S BREAKFAST.

Tans spirited illustration of forest life tells its own story so well as hardly to require a word of explanation. Master Revisant, always a dillegent provider for his honsehold, has evidently left his cozy den in the early hours of a winter province of a the early hours of a winter morning on a foraging expedition. While the gray mist still hangs low over forest and marsh, he has made his way steakhily down to the border of the lake, where, no doubt, he has often replenished his exhausted larder. Croeping noiselessly over the yielding snow, he has surprised a family of ducks, sleeping in fancied safety among the rocks. Not a sound gives warning of danger to their quick sense of hearing. Pushing aside the Intervening reeds, without causing the rustle of a leaf, the sly marsader creeps nearer and nearer to the place where they neatle, until within easy reach of them. A quick spring, and he has seized the selected victim by the neck, slung him over his shoulder, and trotted up the bank with his prey; while the startled mate, with a chrill scream of affinish soernaway of affright, soers away into the air.

How admirably the artist manages the details that tell the story of this little woodland tragedy—the gray, wintry atmosphere, the snow banked against the old tree trunk on the left, and loading down the leafless twigs, the reedy bank and the black water from whose margin Master REYNARD has snatched his prey. The half-open wings and drooping neck show that the sharp jaws have done their fatal work. In another moment the lacky forager will turn the conterround the old tree, and, with his victim slung over his shoulder, trot merrily back to his expectant household.

CURIOUS SHOWERS.

There are sometimes real showers of very unreal rain. It is stated by an old writer that in Lapland and Finnmark, about a century ago, mice of a particular kind were known to fall from the sky; and that such an

and that such an event was sure to be followed by a good year for foxes. A shower of frogs fell near Toulouse in 1804. A prodigious number of black insects, about an inch in length, descended in a snow-storm at Pakroff, in Russia, in 1827. On one occasion, in Norway, the peasants were astonished at finding a shower of rats pelting down on their heads. Showers of fishes have been nomerous. At Stanstead, in Kent, in 1660, a pasture-field was found, one morning, covered plentifully with fish, although there is noither sea nor river, lake nor fish-pond near. At Allahabed, in 1889, an English officer saw a good smart down-pour of fish, and soon afterward thousands mile from the beach. In all these, and numerous other cases, when a liberal allowance has been made for exaggeration, the remainder can be explained by well-understood causes. Stray wind blowing from a sea or river; a water-spout licking up the fish out of the water; a whirland numerallowance has day of terror and marvel, and have disappeared.

Not that any one ever saw such a shower actually fall; but red spots have occasionally been seen on walls and stones, much to the popular dismay. Swammerdam, the naturalist, told the people of the Hagne, two centuries ago, that these red spots were connected with some phenomena of insert life; but they would not believe him, and insisted that the spots were real blood, and were portents of evil times to come. Other naturalists have since confirmed the scientific opinion.

AFRICAN DIS-COVERY.

Ar the time of writing his last dispatch (dated June, 1868). Dr. Livingstone had not reached Lake Tanganyika, which is believed to flow into the Nile; but he had found a chain of lakes to the chain of lakes to the south which drained toward the north, toward the horth, and, as he believed, through Lake Tan-ganyika into that river. These lakes are fed by numerous rivers of considerable size, and should they prove to be the head-waters of the Nile, we must look for the sources of the mighty river at least four hundred miles south of the most southerly point of the Victoria N'yanza. The River Chambese seems to connect these lakes with each other and with the Tangunyika, and the whole volume of water which they con-tain in all probability finds its way into the Nile. We must wait for further information before we ean say positively that these lakes and rivers are within the basin of the Nile, but there is every proba-bility that the opin-ions which have been expressed in favor of this hypothesis will soon be verified. Meanwhile we can not but feel extremely interested in the ptions which Dr. Livingstone gives of the places which he has visited, and which prove that in the region now open-ed up fur the first time there are spots as beautiful and as blessed by nature as any thing that we can imagine. Speak-ing of Lake Liemba, one of the chain which he has discov-

REYNARD'S BREAKFAST.

of small deed fish were found upon the ground. Scotland has had many of these showers of fish; as in Hoss-shire, in 1828, when quantities of herring-fry covered the ground; at Islay, in 1830, then a large number of herrings were found strewed over a field after a heavy, gusty rain; at Wick, much more recently, when herrings were found in large quantities in a field half a wind sending them hither and thither: all these are intelligible. The rat-shower in Norway was an extraordinary one; thousands of rats were taking their anneal excursion from a hilly region to the lowlands, when a whirlwind overtook them, whisked them up, and deposited them in a field at some distance—doubtless much to the astonishment of such of the rats as came down alive.

which he has discovered, Dr. Livingstone tells us that "it lies in a hollow, with precipitous sides 2000 feet down; it is extremely beautiful, sides, top, and bottom being covered with trees and other vegetation. Elephants, buffsloes, and antelopes feed on the steep slopes; while hippopotami, crocodiles, and fish swarm in the waters. Guns being unknown, the elephants, unless sometimes deceived into a pitfall, have it all their own way. It is as perfect a natural paradise as Zenephon could have desired. On two rocky islands men till the land, rear goats, and catch fish , the villages ashore are embowered in the palm-oil palms of the west coast of Africa." Lisingstone's present journey has only confirmed whit was brought to light in his previous travels, viz.: that instead of the interior of Africa being a sandy desert, as was formerly thought, it is really rich in vegetation, and studded with lakes." But there is another fact which Dr. Livingstone has discovered in jounnection with Lake Liemba, and which goes far toward outweighing all others in importance. The altitude of this lake the doctor ascertained to be 2340 fent, thus showing that Speke's observations were incorrect, and that Mr. Findlay was probably right in saying Speke had made a mistake of about 1000 fest in his calculations. But we must weit until Dr. Livingstone comes home for the detailed information which will enable goeg-raphers to pronounce their final judgment on the Nile question. If the great explorer traces the lake system which he has discovered into the Tanganyika, and should find, on arriving at Uji-ji, the stores and medicines sent there for his use, he will proceed to the northern end of the lake, and parhaps follow its affisent. Sir Roderick Murchison thinks he will return to Zanziber after having ascertained the direction of the drainage of the Tanganyika; but Captain Sherard Osborn considers that he will probably follow the outlet, and see for himself whether it flows into the Albert N'yanez, and thence into the Nile. In the latter case, Dr. Livingstone would, in all likelihood, meet Sir Sanued Baker, and the result of this meeting would be to clear up the great mystery which for centuries has shroushed the head-waters of the Nile.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1869.

ARE SPAIN AND PERU AT WART

THERE is one important point in regard to the Spanish gun-beats. Is there war between Spain and Peru? And if so, can the United States permit the departure of war vessels built for one of the belligerents, upon any pretext or affedavit as to the intention of the vessels? England acknowledged the belligerent rights of the rebellion in this country. If, then, the agents of the rebellion in this country. If, then, the British Government that the Alabana was intended, not to make war upon the United States, but to be a marine police, to prevent the escape of slaves, or to do any thing that might be required, excepting to harm the United States, would the British Government, in the opinion of this country, have been justified in allowing the departure of the Alabana?

Suppose that one of the Spunish gun-bosts sails from New York, receives her armament, and encounters a Peruvian ship, will she quietly sail by? Or suppose that, sailing from New York and receiving her armament, one of the gun-houts takes the place of some other Spanish ship of war, and so releases it to fight the Peruvian ship, have we not flagrantly violated our neutrality? What is the essence of neutrality? Is it not that the neutral will not allow either belligerent to strengthen himself in the neutral port? Or can a neutral permit a belligerent who is engaged both in a domestic and a foreigs war, to strengthen himself in the neutral port upon the joen that his intention is the domestic and not the foreign difficulty? If a belligerent is strengthened, is he not necessarily strengthened against all his antagonists? In a word, if you give a man food, must you take his word for it that the nourishment is all going into his left arm, and not into the right? Can you feed him without strengthening both arms? If there he war between Spain and Pern, how can we, as an honest neutral, permit Spain to use us as her navel base?

These are very serious questions, and the rightful departure of the Spanish gan-boats would seem to depend upon the point, whether there is war between Spain and Pera. About eighteen months since, the relations of those two countries were the subject of correspondence between their Ministers and our Government, when Peru wished us to allow the departure of the two monitors, the Oncete and Cotorbo. The Spanish Minister said in May, 1858, that if there was still war between the countries, it was not the fault of Spain, which had suspended hostilities since May, 1866, at the friendly request of Mr. SEWARD; but peace had not been accepted by the allied states of Peru and Chili, and therefore he hoped that we would not violate our neutrality. In reply, Mr. SEWARD said that Pern insisted that war had ceased by the suspension of hosrilities, and that Spain had virtually acknowledged the claim by making an arrangement with Chili to clear ships of war from British ports. The President would not undertake to decide whether war had actually ceased. The question was difficult. Colleteral facts must determine it. The Peravian Minister declared that the situation of the two countries was one of "imperfect pence." There had been no but actually the war had ceased, and Peru would not resume it unless provoked by fresh hostilities. Yet the Minister conceded that, while there was no treaty, the war might "be renewed at any moment."

After deliberate consideration, the United States permitted the departure of the monitors, not upon the ground that war did not exist, but that there was then no condition of beligerency between the two powers which would justify their detention. Has the situation changed, and can the Peruvian Minister now justly declare that there is war between the countries? It is not two years since the Minister of Peru said that war might be renewed. It can not be supposed that the recognition of Cuha by Peru has tended to confirm the half-peace, and any overt act upon the part of Peru would renew the war, which the Spanish Minister in May, 1868, insisted must not be considered ended.

The United States did not express an opinion upon the question of war. The Government merely recognized the practical but not binding empension of hostilities. It is as free to take another view upon the representation of the Minister of either power or of both powers. If, in May, 1868, the Spanish Minister, during the suspension of hostilities, said that there is nevertheless a state of war, and the Peruvian Minister in July, 1869, says also, during the same suspension, that there is war, why should not the United States say that war must be accepted as the situation, since both powers declare that, despite the suspension, there is war? And, war existing, our neutral duties are obvious; and the gun-boats must apparently be detained, unless it can be shown that they are marchandise not amenable to the laws of neutrality.

THE BATTLE OF THE SCHOOLS.

Is a battle the great point is to choose your ground wisely, and then stand to your gams. This is what must be done in the battle that we must fight for the common school system in this country. Oddly enough, the country is so large and hospitable, offering a home to all people, and announcing a political principle which gives them all equal rights, that its pertils spring from the multitudes it invites and the conditions upon which it prides itself. For instance, by our peculiar and peculiarly clumsy electoral system, two or three great States may elect a President. Of the chief of these great States the chief city is so populous as, politically, almost to control the State. The population of that city is largely composed of foreigners, and the worst part of the foreign-born population remains in it. This is subject to the control of a few demagogues; and thus again the power of an ignorant and unprincipled man in our politics is immense and incalculable.

The great remediable danger of this country, therefore, is ignorance. It is that which gives a demagogue his power. It is that which we must rout, or which will rout us. And this we can do only by a universal system of com-mon schools. Their establishment and multiplication is a paramount duty of the nation, and one that it should not hesitate to discharge. Against the national will in this matter, the fixed resolution that every body shall be educated, no plea of State power, no ecclesiastical or sectarian sophistry, no mistak-en religious zeal, should be suffered to stand for a moment. If Presbyterians, or Baptists, or Unitarians, or Methodists, or Roman Catho lies, or Jews, or whatever religious body, wish to instruct children in their peculiar tenets, nobody hours the way: let them do as they choose. But as the State, as a political community, we have nothing to do with any religious tene whatever; and as a State we mean to educate every body, not in religion, but in practical knowledge.

This is a hard saying for many good persons, but it is indispensably true. It is said that we are all Christians, that we agree in reverence for the Bible, and that the great general truths of religion are acceptable to all of us, of what-ever sect. But this is not so. We do not agree in reverence for the Bible. The Jews are as honest as Christians; but their reverence for the New Testament is very different from the Christian reverence. Then an immense number of Christians in this city, for instance, do not consider the ordinary translation of the Bible a correct or safe one, and do not regard it as a book to be read without especial care and comment. Now, these Jews and these Christians are American citizens with all their rights, and they are, therefore, entitled to be defended in perfect religious equality and freedom. But they are not so, if they are made to pay taxes for schools in which their children, as they think, are exposed to sectarian influ-We must insist, therefore, that an obences. vious objection shall be removed.

But nobody should be deceived. The objective point of the hostility of the Roman Catholic priesthood is not the Bible in the schools, it is the schools. "A Catholic Priest" writes on the 25th of November to the Boston Advertiser: "Catholics would not be satisfied with the public schools even if the Protestant Bible and every vestige of religious teaching were basished from them......They will not be taxed either for educating the children of Protestants nor for having their own children educated in schools under Protestant control." They assert that all education which is not technically religious is irreligious; and they do not allow that there is any pure religion but that of their Church. Consequently, if you would not educate children to be atheists, they say, to their followers, you must insist upon our share of the public money for our schools.

Here, then, is the exact ground upon which to fight the battle. Don't leave them an houst sectarian objection. Free the schools of every thing against which this kind of opposition may be fairly urged, and then stand fast upon the principle that the public money shall not educate the people in the private religious faith of the teachers. The great duties of love to God and man, the beauty of holiness, the sweet magic of charity, all that is noblest in human aim and troest in human life, do not appear in a ceremonial and hollow reading of a chapter in the Bible; and it is not true that such a ceremony gives, as many suppose, a religious character to the school instruction. It does nothing whatever but furnish a wespon to the enemy, and to make the best of books a bore to every child.

That the better public opinion of the country is coming very rapidly to this conclusion is every where evident. Nor would there be any apprehension whatever of the result of the struggle at any point, if it were not for the fact that we stated in beginning, namely, the danger of ignorance. The Democratic chiefs count upon the support of the Roman Catholic population for reasons that are plain enough. The demand of that element of the party will presently be division of the public school money. The Democratic chiefs can not resist; and we shall thus have an organized political party working cautiously to that result. But let us understand exactly what the schools are and for what intended, and we need not fear the issue.

THE METHODIST BOOK CONCERN.

The recent report upon the alleged mismanagement in the Methodist Book Concern is a striking illustration of what such a report ought not to be. It will be remembered that the substance of the charges which led to the investigation and report was, that there had been frauds in the purchase of paper-and in the Bindery. The duty of the Committee, therefore, was to state facts and mention names. Frands are not perpetrated without swindlers, and society is served, not by denouncing the frauds, but by exposing the swindlers. If, on the other hand, a transaction is irregular through misunder-standing, it is plainly which to the person as a kname who is merely irregular post a person as a knave who is merely ignorant. The Committee state, upon the first point, that the "Concern"—and a more awkward and that the "Concern"—and a more awkward and Indicrous title for a great publishing house it would not be easy to find—has not seriously suffered by the manner in which paper and printing materials were bought. Now the word "serious" is a very clastic word. The facts are, as shown in the evidence, although no allusion is made to them by the Report, that the paper was bought for the "Concern" by a young men named Postes, the son of one of the principal managers. Two well-known houses in the paper trade testified that Mr. Postruk received a commission of from 2 to 7 per cent, upon the value of the paper bought from them. During three years, from the trans-actions with these two houses alone, young Mr. Pontun's commissions were more than $30,000. During ten years there would, therefore, at the same rate, be a certain loss to the "Concern' of $100,000 upon the business with these two How much more there might have been in other dealings may be supposed. This, however, the Committee say, is not a "serious" loss. But it is a loss resulting from the conduct of one of the agents of the business, and is therefore not only a great loss, but a loss of the most serious character. The commissions, unless authorized by the managers—and this is not affirmed-were money taken from the treasury of the Methodist Book Concern. The Committee say that the Concern has not seriously suffered. Of course, then, they recommend that the sys-tem of commissions be continued.

The Committee further announce that in the Bindery there have been great mismansgor and serious losses. But they do not say what they are and from what they arise. The charge is that money was paid upon false invoices, and that the property of the "Concern" was sold by its workmen for their own benefit. This would seem to be the point upon which the Committee should have given information. But they pre-What, then, is their report? fer silence. is this: that the printing material department is managed without "serious" loss, although a system of leakage is proved: that the Bindery is greatly mismanaged with various losses, and that the general management of the business does not involve the honesty of the managers. Then by the Committee's own showing involves their capacity; and when they say that such management meets their own approval and commands public confidence, they humiliate themselves and insult the public. Suppose that the person who pays the clerical members of the Committee their salary should charge from two to seven per cent, commission upon the amount, would they think it a "sectous" loss, or would the transaction command their hearty approval and confidence?

The effect of the Roport has been to create a very general impression that the business of the "Concern" is sadly mismanaged; and that it should be thoroughly investigated. The members of the denomination who are contributing large or small some to its general expenses, and all Methodists who have the denominational honor at heart, are interested that this matter should not end here.

SPECIE PAYMENTS.

It will be recollected that Mr. M'CULLOCS, in his annual report as Secretary of the Treasury in 1865, stated "that the legal-tender acts were war measures passed in a great emergency; that they should be regarded only as temporary; that they ought not to remain in force a day longer than would be necessary to enable the people to prepare for a return to the gold standard; and that the work of retiring the notes which had been issued should be commenced without delay, and carefully and persistently continued until all are retired."

The House of Representatives, on the 18th of December, 1865, passed the following resolution by a vote of 144 to 6; "Resolved, That this House cordially concurs in the views of the Secretary of the Tressury in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency, with a view to as early a resumption of specie payments as the business interests of the country will permit; and we hereby piedge co-operative action to this end as specifly as possible."

This resolution authorized no particular mode

This resolution authorized no particular mode of contraction; and Congress, on the 12th of March, 1866, authorized the exchange of bonds for notes, but provided "that of United States notes not more than $10,000,000 should be retired and canceled within six months from the passage of the act, and thereafter not more than $4,000,000 should be retired in any one month."

Mr. M'Culloca, in pursuance of this authority, went on with the policy of contraction; but by reason of earnest complaints, chiefy from the West, Congress in January, 1868, passed an act declaring "that from and after its passage the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to make any reduction of the currency, by retiring or canceling United States notes, shall be and is hereby suspended."

Mr. Bourwell finds himself wholly fettered

Mr. BOUTWELL finds himself wholly fettered by this clearly-expressed intention against contraction; and it will be necessary, before is can be resorted to anew, that Congress shall reverse its action, and confer the power.

its action, and confer the power.

As the opinion prevails in many quarters that Congress will soon take measures for a speedy return to specie payments—and as this belief, in conjunction with the policy pursued by the Treasury, is having effects of a moment-ous character upon the whole trading and producing interest—the question comes home to the business of every man, What will probably be done?

In answering this question the interests and purposes of the national banks need to be considered, as they have the most intimate relations with the business of the country. On the 28d of June, 1869, the National banks held a convention at the St. Nicholas Hotel, which was a complete representation of this powerful interest. Mr. E. G. Spatulero, the President of the Farmers' and Mechanics' National Bank of Buffalo, as temporary Chairman, addressed the Convention at length, declaring that the policy of selling gold adopted by the Treasury was a remove from specie payments, instead of an advance in that direction, "There is," he says, too great a disparity between the reserve of gold in the Treasury and the volume of green-backs to be redeemed;" and adds, "Whether resumption takes place in two, five, or ter years a larger reserve of gold will be necessary, or the amount of greenbacks must be reduced."

Mr. THEODORS M. POMEROT, a Director of the First National Bank of Auburn, on being elected President of the Convention, address the body, declaring a readiness on the part of the banks to resume whenever the Government shall also resume; but he indicates no mode of proceeding to this end; on the contrary, he supports free banking, and the removal of the restriction upon circulation imposed by acts of Congress, on the ground that "the right to issue circulation to pass current as the representative of money, if granted to one should be open to all;" and on the further ground that it is the "merest speculation" to speculate on the subject whether or not the present circulation is more or less than the country demands. He thus closes his important speech: "This and other similar questions should be settled in conference by your Executive Committee, and whatever legislation may be necessary will readily follow." A Committee of seventy-five was appointed, among other objects, "to give timely notice of any proposed legislation adverse to their interests," and the Convention adjourned, after creating a permanent general Committee of eleven members to manage its affairs.

The confidence expressed by Mr. POMEROT is probably well-founded that the legislation of igress, at least for some time to come, will conform to what shall be recommended in behalf of this powerful interest. Few, however, will expect any very prompt and effective measures from this quarter for returning to specie payments.

The fact is, that by reason of speculation on a large scale, and of the excess of our imports our exports, adjusted for the present by sending our bonds to foreign countries, the difficulty in returning to specie payments is greater now than when Congress repealed in January, 1868, the law which permitted contraction.

In England specie payments are maintained because, in addition to the amount of the precious metals held by the Bank of England, a larger amount is in the pockets of the people, ready to be called on in case of emergency in banking. In lieu of this the pockets of our people are stuffed with notes down to the denomination of ten cents, while in England no notes are allowed under about twenty dollars. This wide difference in policy drives the precions metals away from the United States and encourages their accumulation in Great Britain.

We can not shot our eyes to the fact that contraction, attempted under more favorable circomstances as to deut than at present, was shandoned out of regard to the debtor inter-est; and as the indebtedness of individuals has been increased by speculation and extravagance, it is safe to assume that the same interest will be equally powerful over the ensuing Congress.

On looking back to the period of Mr. M'CUL-LOCH's recommendations, above referred to, it will not only appear that they were timely and sound, but it will be regarded as a misfortune that they were not firmly followed. But although contraction is the true road, the unfortunite tendency of our people to constant and beavy indebtedness makes it difficult.

The truth should be widely disseminated that, until we determine to persist in the policy of improving our circulating medium, there can be no recovery from the fluctuations in the price of products which constantly attends our When we get upon the solid ground of specie, we shall be able to compete with all nations, and secure an amount of prosperity known to no other portion of the globe.

HONOR AND MURDER.

THE death of Mr. RICHARDSON will again raise the question in the courts whether jealausy is a justification of homicide. The principle of civilized society is plain enough. It is, that a man must not assume to punish crimes upon his own responsibility. A savage scalps his for whenever he can get at him. But civ-ilization replaces individual vengeance by the forms of law. Yet there are certain circumstances under which it permits individual redress, such as personal assault or burglary. There are still other circumstances which have been tacitly held to justify such redress where there is no violent personal attack, but merely an offense against honor. The form this re-dress took was the duel. But Honor is a very elastic word, and may be used by secondrels as well as by honorable men; and it consequently happened that, under the code of hunor, an honorable man was at the mercy of any scoundrel or dead-shot who chose to throw a glass of wine in his face or so call him liar. So the duel, as essentially abourd and 'nvolving great-or perils than it remedied, has been abolished by the growing good sense of civilization.

But there are still circumstances under which public opinion apparently justifies individual vengeance. Probably no jury in this country would convict a woman who should shoot the man who attempted her dishonor. It is doubt-ful if it would convict her of crime if she deliberately shot her seducer; although it might be very difficult to show that she had not consent-The reason of such a verdict would probably be found to be a vague, general impression that women are usually at a disadvantage, and that if the shooting was not exactly justified by the special testimony, it was venial upon general grounds. The same toleration is shown towith offenses against their domestic happiness.

But this is a relic of sheer barbarism. If we justify a husband in killing a man whom he occuses of stealing his wife's affections, we must justify the wife in killing any woman whom she may accuse of being his paramour or of divert-ing his preference. Thus the most precious lives might be sacrificed to a whim of jealousy, or to a groundless suspicion. This justification of assaults, by what are called injured husbands, serves, however, to show how ingrained is the feeling that a man's wife is in some way his property. If a husband shoots the alleged seducer, or merely the guiltless confident, of his wife, the public shrugs its shoulders, and remarks that the victim ought to have counted the cost. But if the wife should shoot a poor woman of the town because of her husband's offense, or any innocent woman whose society her husband sought, there would be immense consternation. And yet, is not the marriage yow equally binding upon husband and wife? If the husband may punish what he calls offenses against his honor, may not the wife avenge outrages upon her?

There is but one remedy, and that is to in-sist, by the conviction of plainly proved offenders, that offenses shall not be privately punished. If a man attacks you upon the high-way, or breaks into your house, you will jus-tifiably defend yourself by every practicable But to justify a deliberate attempt to murder, by a man's allegation that his honor has been assailed and his domestic peace disturbed, is to relax the very foundations of civilized society. If a wife's affections are alien-ated there is at least room for suspicion that the husband's conduct has not been such as to retain them. Certainly the common welfare demands that there be some better reason than "outraged honor" offered in extenuation of

A PREMIUM UPON CRIME.

THE most remarkable fact in regard to great robberies at this time is that the robbers are not punished, but the crime is compromised. To compromise with a thief is to give him half the booty, with a promise not to trouble him upon condition that he will return the other half. Sometimes a compromise is an arrangement by which the whole booty is returned as a condition of not prosecuting the thief. But a compromise is always a proceeding by which society suffers. It is lately announced that some merchants in New York, of what is called "respectable standing," are accused of swin-dling, and will be criminally prosecuted unless they consent to a compromise. Is there any good reason why this principle should not be carried further? Shall we not compromise with gentlemen of good standing accused of assault and battery, and consent not to prosecute if they will pay the doctor's bill for their victim? Cases of murder, indeed, would seem to be difficult, because the erring gentleman who did the deed could not recall the victim to life. But possibly some arrangement might be made by which he would consent not to destroy other people if he should be excused from responsi-bility for the accomplished fact. Indeed, the principle is susceptible of great breadth of ap-

It is really becoming necessary to remember that cheating is cheating, however respectable "the standing" of the swindler, and that robbery is robbery, whatever may be the number of church pews owned by the robber.

It is no new thing for merchants of what is called respectable standing to defraud the Custom-house. Indeed, there is an old saying that all is fair in love, in politics, and at the Custom-bouse, and a man might hesitate to perjure himself in a court of law who would most glibly swear falsely to pass an invoice. But this is a dangerous kind of sophistry. All human transactions rest at last upon good faith, and confidence in real honor. When a man's outh is known to be a lie, there follows a profound disturbance of the foundations of society; for men can not be habitually false in one way without weakening their truthfulness in every way.

If it be true that certain merchants are implicated by evidence in dishonest transactions at the Custom-house, it is a thousandfold berter that they be criminally prosecuted and tried and punished, if convicted, than that the United States should recover by compromise the money which the "respectable" merchants are said to have stolen. And if it should appear, upon such a trial, that the general feeling in regard to the oppression of tariffs, and to all Custom-house transactions, made it very doubtful whether a moral stigma could ever be attached to perjury and theft committed there, the cause of Free Trade would have acquired a prodig-iously powerful ally, in the conviction that the Custom-bouse is more pernicions, as a source of the kind of immorality which is fatal to any people, than advantageous as a system of levying taxes. In any case it is worth while to try the experiment, and to ascertain whether a man's reputation would be injured by legal conviction of defrauding the Government the Custom-house,

A CURIOUS INJUSTICE.

THERE is a good custom in Massachusetts by which the Governor at Thanksgiving pardons two convicts whose conduct during their term in the State prison has been most exemplary. This year the usual pardon was issued; but to the public astonishment, it appeared that the two men were not prisoners to whom pardon should be granted, but of whom it should be naked. For they were innocent persons unjust-ly convicted. The general feeling, of course, then was, that it was both an injustice to them and to two other well-deserving prisoners to re-lease them only. They were entitled to their liberty. It was no grace of the government, but its plainest duty, to release them; and the spirit of the annual custom of pardon required that two justly convicted prisoners should be set free. No one, however, supposed that this was not as evident to the Governor and Council, and to the old and experienced warden of the State prison, as it was to every body else. ! But there was no explanation, and the whole affair seemed unintelligible.

At the end of a week, however, the warden, Mr. HAYNES, wrose a letter detailing the facts. The two men were convicted of highway robbery upon the positive evidence of the man robbed. It was a case of mistaken identity. Upon entering the prison the men asserted their innocence, but that often happens. Recently, however, facts, unknown to the prisoners, were communicated to the warden proving their innocence. He, having no authority to release them, instantly laid them before the Governor and Council, who are the sole releasing power. But it was only on the day before Thanksriving that the last documents in the case were received, and too late for the Council to examine the testimony in some other cases which the warden intended to propose for the usual pardon. Consequently the two innocent prisoners were released as pardoned; and the two others, who should have had the benefit of a pardon, will be detained in prison until Christmas. The warden adds that he agrees fully that the two men had a right to justice, and not to pardon; but that the Legislature had provided no other means than a pardon to reach such cases.

This is an injustice which the Legislature of Massachusetts should remedy at the very earliest moment. It should certainly provide that the Governor and Council may release an unjustly convicted person, with a public acknowledgment of the injustice done him, a...d with the gift of a sum of money large enough to be serviceable to a man so unhappily seized and so injuriously branded. But, in this instance, it would also seem to have been possible for the warden, who was convinced of the innecesses of the prisoners in question, to have supplied, in time, to the Council, the evidence necessary for the release of two proper convicts. Me would then have left with the Executive Chamber the responsibility of deciding whether the two customary pardons were exhausted in the case of the innocent men. But it is shameful to any honorable State that its only remedy for the enormous injury of the unjust imprisonment of a citizen is the obloquy of a pardon. It wrongly deprires him of liberty, and, by way of reparation, brands him forever as a pardoned criminal.

NOTES.

The Delineare Gazette, published at Wilmington, tells its readers all about Harper's Weekly. It is "unscrappious and scerribous." It is "a production of an inferior order of its kind." It is edited "with neither taste nor ability." Its contributors are persons "of shallow minds and commonplace talents." Its columns are, therefore, filled with "written and pictorial trush and claustern nonescent of the most relienders and clap-trap nonsense of the most ridiculous and sensational description." So much for us. And sensitional description." So much for us. And next, good readers, you catch it. You are "a class of illicerate or superficial persons, to whose uncultivated fancy and narrow prejudices it [the Weskly] panders and appeals." It seems, gentle readers, that you are also our victims. "Over those people"—that is you, illicerate and superficial multitude—"its corrupting influences are successful, and dangerously exercised." Why? Because was a see more are illustrated. cause you are more gratified "by adaptations to the eye and the passions of nature than by appeals to the reasoning faculties and the judgment of a well-balanced mind." Well, at least, the world has one comfort left. While Harper's Weekig has one common tell. Whole Harper's Weekly thus "prostitutes" and "contaminates" and "warps" by "hitig and blackguardly cartoons," and "inflames" to "amalgamation" and "miscogenation," there is still the Wilmington Gasette proudly surviving, as an in-sparing example of "the judgment of a well-balanced mind."

THE third volume of FRANCIS PARRHAN'S The third volume of Francis Parkman's series of histories of the early settlement of the country is just published by Little, Brown, & Co.; and this time it is "The Discovery of the Great West." These volumes, as our readers know, or should know, form together a general history of "France and England in North America." It is a subject which Mr. Parkman has made as much his own as Motley the Dutch Parkman and the Country of Republic or MACAULAY the English Revolution. He is thorough master of his material, which is much scattered, and exists largely in manuscript; and his imagination, his picturesque narrative style, and his admirable perception of the true point of interest, give to his historical works a wonderful charm and symmetry. It is to the pages of Mr. PARKHAN that we must go for the American Indian. Coopen so bewitches our young fancies with Uncas and the red heroes that it is very difficult to divest our estimate of the In-dian of a false and foolish glamour. Mr. PARK-Man, however, knows him by personal experi-ence and long and thoughtful study. In the sec-ond volume of the series, "The Jesuits in North America," and in this last, "The Discovery of the Great West," he paints the Indian at full length, the most unromantle, the most cruel of human beings. And it is curious to observe that at their best the Indians are not interesting. We do not respect them, nor like them as much as we do noble animals. We follow their movewe do noble animals. We follow their move-ments with a languid attention; but the moment HERNERIS, or MARQUETTE, or LA SALLE ap-pears, we salute the hero of the scene. In "The Discovery of the Great West" there is not, of course, the same extraordinary story of human heroism as in the tragedy of the early Canadism Jesuits, which was told in the last volume. But there are equally graphic and admirable sketch-es of the Jesuit fathers who are more known to us, and a delightful, and we may say finel, ac-count of the discovery of the Mississippi River. Indeed, with singular tact Mr. PARKMAN gives us in his compett volumes about all that the reader cares to know of that period of our his-tory; and his work, which is indispensable to complete knowledge of the settlement and civili-zation of the North American continent, is done in a way which assures his position among our

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Tus French Sensis and Corpe Legislatif were opened by the Emperor November 72. In his address he serribed the political agitation of the past two months to the "subvervive passings" and the "accesses of the press and of public assemblages," by which society was measured and freedom consprended. France deciry ilberty and order; and while he asks the legislators to help him secure liberty, he will answer for the order. The suppression of slavery in the New World, the freeding of the Russian serfs, the Irish Charch referent, the Eccamenical Council, the Pacific Haitmad, the telegraph, the Mount Cenis Tunnel, and the Secure Canal, were slided to as the trimples of the epoch of which all have reason to be proof. In conclusion, be decisered that there was to be a more direct participation of the sation in its own affairs, which would give a new furne to the empire.

On the 5d linet, the Corps Legislatiff was agitated by a demand from M. Rochebort that the National Guard be ordered to grant the half of the Corps in friture, for the perfection of the members. Cheers and derinder cries dilowed, after the first hurst of astonishment, from all parts of the half. The Opposition applies ded, but the majority protested against the demand and the favor with which it had been received. M. Guiset has written a letter to a member of the Corps Legislatiff, in which is advised the members to support the Parliamentary Empire.

The difficulty arising out of the landing of the French telegraph cable on American shores has, according to a telegram from Paris, been adjusted in a anticable manuer.

A Pre-Sprood Conference was held at Rome on the Minet, all which an allocution was delivered, and the official touth.

Carillet complicates have agian been discovered in Rome on the Real and manuers have been taken to revert a cefficers of the (Ecunomical Council tools the official coulds.

Carlist conspiracies have again been discovered in Spain, and measures have been taken to pervent a fresh outbreak. Several of the suppressed Republican journals in Madrid have been permitted to reappear, and the conscilinational guarantees, suspended some time ago as a measure of public anter, have been restored. General Prim has stated in the Cartes that since the commencement of the Cuben rebellion four-toen vessels of war, including two bros-clack, had sailed for Chab, treasperting nearly 40,000 troops.

The reports of a want of harmony between the Calmese forwentment and Mr. Buillingine are officially desired. They are ascribed to persons in China who are opposed, on commercial and other grounds, to the policy of the Chinese flowerment. His missing will extend beyond two years. Mr. Berlinginne was received on the 2d link by the King of Prussia, and presented his credentiels.

A lotter from Pekin states that the Chinese Government is anxious to have it clearly understood that Mr. Berlingamets treaty with this country has not been ejected, but action on though defired, their githought best to wait until the results of the unprintions of the whole surject might be disposed of at care.

The bark Neel, bound to Beenbuy, the first mercantic vessel to puse through the Sees Casal with a carryo, has been wrecked in the Red Sea, eighty six miller from the port of Sugs.

The Vicency of Expp., the seast, the Paris, a dismond diadem worth 4,000,000 of france.

(Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 186, by HARFER & BROTERICS, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

MAN AND WIFE.

By WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "The Moonstone," etc., etc.,

WITH ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

THE DEST.

Asson was the first who broke the silence.
"Is your father seriously ill?" he asked.
Geoffrey answered by handing him the card.
Sir Patrick, who had stood apart (while the question of Rateatcher's relapse was under discussion) sardonically studying the manners and ms of modern English youth, now came for-Customs of modern English youth, now came for-ward, and took his part in the proceedings. Lady Landie herself must have acknowledged that he spoke and acted as became the head of the fam-ily, on this occasion.

"Am I right in supposing that Mr. Delamayn's father is dangerously ill?" he asked, addressing himself to Arnold.

himself to Araold.

"Dangerously ill, in London," Arnold answered. "Geoffrey must leave Windygates with me. The train I am traveling by meets the train his brother is traveling by, at the junction. I shall leave him at the second station from here."

"Didn't you tell me that Lady Lundie was going to send you to the railway in a gig?"

"Yes."

"If the servant drives, there will be three of you—and there will be no room."

"We had better ask for some other vehicle," suggested Arnold.

Sir Patrick looked at his watch. There was no time to change the carriage. He turned to Geoffrey. "Can you drive, Mr. Delamayn?" Still impenetrably silent, Geoffrey replied by a nod of the head.

Without noticing the unceremonious manner in which he had been answered, Sir Patrick went on:

"In that case, you can leave the gig in charge of the station-master. I'll tell the servant that he will not be wanted to drive." "Let me save you the trouble, Sir Patrick," said Arnold.

Sir Patrick declined, by a gesture. He turned again, with undiminished courtesy, to Geoffrey.

"It is one of the duties of hospitality, Mr. De-It is one of the duties of hospitality, Mr. De-lamayn, to hasten your departure, under these sad circumstances. Lady Lundie is engaged with her guests. I will see myself that there is no unnecessary delay in sending you to the sta-tion." He bowed—and left the summer-house. Arnold said a word of sympathy to his friend, when they were alone.

"I am sorry for this, Geoffrey. I hope and trust you will get to London in time."

He stopped. There was something in Geoffrey's face—a strange mixture of donbt and be-wilderment, of annoyance and hesitation—which was not to be accounted for as the natural result of the news that he had received. His color of the news that he had received. His color shifted and changed; he picked fretfally at his finger-nails; he looked at Arnold as if he was going to speak-and then looked away again, in silence,

"Is there something amiss, Geoffrey, besides this had news about your father?" asked Arnold.
"I'm in the devil's own mess," was the answer.

"Can I do any thing to help you?"

Instead of making a direct roply, Geoffrey lifted his mighty hand, and gave Arnold a friendly slap on the shoulder which shook him from head to foot. Arnold steaded himself, and waited—wondering what was coming next.
"I say, old fellow!" said Geoffrey.

"Do you remember when the boat turned keel upward in Lisbon Harbor?" Arnold started. If he could have called to Arnold started. If he could have called to mind his first interview in the summer-house with his father's old friend, he might have re-membered Sir Patrick's prediction that he would scorer or later pay, with interest, the debt he owed to the man who had saved his life. As it was, his memory reverted at a bound to the time of the boat-accident. In the ardor of his grati-tode and the innocence of his heart, he almost resented his friend's question as a reproach which he had not deserved.

"The you think I can ever forget," he cried, warmly. "that you swam ashers with me and saved my life?"

Geoffrey ventured a step nearer to the object that he had in view.

"One good turn deserves another," he said,

Arnold took his hand, "Only tell me!" he agesty rejoined—"only tell me what I can do!"
"You are going to-day to see your new place,

"Can you put off going till to-morrow?"
"If it's any thing serious—of course I can!"
Geoffrey looked round at the entrance to th cose, to make sure that they were You know the governess here, don't you?"

he said, in a whisper.
"Miss Silvester?" "Yes. I've got into a little difficulty with Miss Silvester. And there isn't a living soul I

"You know I will holp you."
"You know I will holp you. What is it?"
"It isn't so easy to say. Never mind—you're no saint either, are you? You'll keep it a secret, of course? Look here! I've acted like an infernal fool. I've gone and got the girl into a |

Arnold drew back, suddenly understanding him.

"Good heavens, Geoffrey! You don't mean.—"
"I do! Wait a bit—that's not the worst of it. She has left the house." "Left the house?"

"Left, for good and all. She can't come back again."

"Why not?"

"Bornuse she's written to her missus. Wo-men (hang 'em!) never do these things by halves. She's left a letter to say she's privately married, and gone off to her husband. Her husband is-Me. Not that I'm married to her yet, you un-Not that I'm married to her yet, you understand. I have only promised to marry her. She has gone on first (on the sly) to a place four miles from this. And we settled I was to follow, and marry her privately this afternoon. That's out of the question now. While she's expecting me at the inn I shall be bowling along to Lon-don. Somebody must tell her what has hap-pened—or she'll play the devil, and the whole business will burst up. I can't trust any of the people here. I'm done for, old chap, unless you help me,"

Arnold lifted his hands in dismay, "It's the most dreadful situation, Geoffrey, I ever heard Geoffrey thoroughly agreed with him.

"Enough to knock a man over," he said, "isn't it? I'd give something for a drink of beer."

He produced his everlasting pipe, from shoer force of habit. "Got a match?" he asked.

Arnold's mind was too preoccupied to notice the question.

"I hope you won't think I'm making light of your father's illness," he said, earnestly. "But it seems to me—I must say it—it seems to me that the poor girl has the first claim on you."

-tell her to stop where she is till I write to ber." half distracted, and all that. And-wait a bit !

Arnold hesitated. Absolutely ignorant of that low and limited form of knowledge which is call-ed "knowledge of the world," his inbred delieacy of mind revealed to him the serious difficulty of the position which his friend was asking him to occupy as plainly as if he was looking at it through the warily-guthered experience of so-ciety of a man of twice his age.

"Can't you write to her now, Geoffrey?" he asked.

"What's the good of that?"

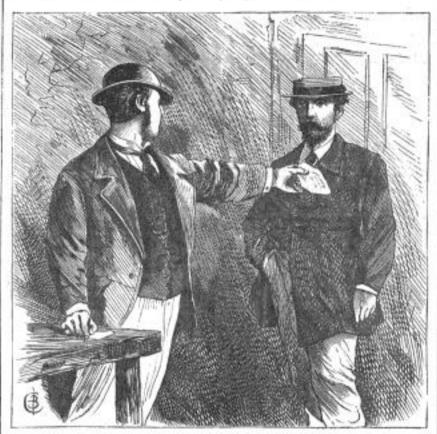

"Consider for a minute, and you will see. You have trusted me with a very awkward secret. I may be wrong—I never was mixed up in such a matter before—but to present myself to this lady as your messenger seems exposing her to a dreadful humiliation. Am I to go and tell her to her face: "I know what you are hid-ing from the knowledge of all the world;" and is

"Bosh!" said Geoffrey. "They can endure a deal more than you think for. I wish you had heard how she bullied me, in this very place. My good fellow, you don't understand women. The grand secret, in dealing with a woman, is to take her as you take a cat, by the woman, is to take her as you take a cal, by the scruff of the neck—"

"I can't face her—unless you will help me by breaking the thing to her first. I'll stick at no sacrifice to serve you; but—hang it!—make allowances, Geoffrey, for the difficulty you are putting me in. I am almost a stranger; I don't know how Miss Silvester may receive me, before I are over me lie."

before I can open my lips."

Those last words touched the question on practical side. The matter-of-fact view of the difficulty was a view which Geoffrey instantly recognized and understood.

"THAT WILL DO THE BUSINESS; READ IT YOURSELP, ARNOLD-FT'S NOT SO BADLY WRITTEN."

Geoffrey looked at him in surly amazement. "The first claim on me? Do you think I'm going to risk being cut out of my father's will? Not for the best woman that ever put on a petti-

Arnold's admiration of his friend was the solidly-founded admiration of many years; admiration for a man who could row, box, wrestle, jump—above all, who could swim—as few other men could perform those exercises in contempo-rary England. But that answer shook his faith. Only for the moment—unhappily for Arnold, only

"You know hest," he returned, a little coldly.

"What can I do?"

Geoffrey took his arm—roughly, as he took every thing; but in a companionable and confidential way.

"Go, like a good fellow, and tell her what has happened. We'll start from here as if we were both going to the railway; and I'll drop you at the foot-path, in the gig. You can get on to your own place afterward by the evening train. It puts you to no inconvenience; and it's doing the kind when on to your own place afterward by the evening train. It puts you to no inconvenience; and it's doing the kind thing by an old friend. There's no risk of being found out. I'm to drive, remember! There's no servant with us, old boy, to notice, and tell takes."

Even Arnold began to see dimly by this time that he was likely to pay his debt of obligation with interest—as Sir Patrick had foretold.

"What am I to say to ber?" he asked. "I'm bound to do all I can do to help you, and I will. But what am I to say?"

But what am I to say?"

But what am I to say?"

It was a natural question to put. It was not an easy question to answer. What a man, under given muscular circumstances, could do, no person living knew better than Geoffrey Delamayn. Of what a man, under given social circumstances, could say, no person living knew less. "Say?" he repeated. "Look here! say I'm

"She has the devil's own temper," he said.

"There's no denying that. Perhaps I'd better write. Have we time to go into the house?"

"No. The house is full of people, and we haven't a minute to spare. Write at once, and write here. I have get a pencil."

"What am I to write on?"

"Any thing, were herefuln's cord."

"What am I to write on?"

"Any thing—your brother's card."

Geoffrey took the pencil which Arnold offered to him, and looked at the card. The lines his brother had written covered it. There was no room left. He felt in his pocket, and produced a letter—the letter which Anne had referred to the covered by the covered by the covered to the letter which have the letter which at the interview between them; the letter which she had written to insist on his attending the

"This will do," he said. "It's one of Anne's own letters to me. There's room on the fourth page. If I write," he added, turning suddenly on Arnold, "you promise to take it to her? Your hand on the berguin!"

He held out the band which had saved Ar-

He held out the hand which had saved Arnold's life in Lisbon Harbor, and received Arnold's promise, in remembrance of that time.

"All right, old fellow. I can tell you how to find the place as we go along in the gig. Bythe-by, there's one thing that's rather important.

I'd better mention it while I think of it.

"What is that?"

"You mustn't present yourself at the inn in or own name; and you mustn't ask for her by her name."
"Who am I to ask for?"

"It's a little awkward. She has gone there as a married woman, in case they're particular about taking her in..." about taking her in-derstand. Go ou." "And she has planned to tell them (by way of making it all right and straight for both of us, you know) that she expects her husband to join hor. If I had been able to go I should have asked at the door for 'my wife." You are going in my place—"

"And I must ask at the door for 'my wife," or I shall expose Miss Silvester to unpleasant consequences?"

"You don't object?"

"You don't object?"

"Not I! I don't care what I say to the people of the ion. It's the meeting with Miss Silvecter that I'm afraid of."

"I'll put that right for you—never fear!"

He went at once to the table and rapidly scrib-hied a few lines—then stopped and considered.

"Will that do?" he asked himself. "No; I'd better say something spooney to quiet her." He considered again, added a line, and brought his hand down on the table with a cheery smack.

"That will do the business! Rend it yourself, Arneld—it's not so badly written."

"That will do the business! Rend it yourself, Arnold—it's not so badly written."
Arnold rend the note without appearing to share his friend's favorable opinion of it.

"This is rather short," he said.

"Have I time to make it longer?"

"Perhaps not. But let Miss Silvester see for herself that you have no time to make it longer.
The train starts in less than half an hour. Put the time."

the time."
"Oh, all right! and the date too, if you like." He had just added the desired words and fig-ures, and had given the revised letter to Arnold, when Sir Patrick returned to announce that the gig was waiting.

"Come!" he said. "You haven't a mom to lose!" Geoffrey started to his feet. Arnold besitated.

"I must see Blanche!" he pleaded. "I can't

Blanche without saying good-by. Witers Sir Patrick pointed to the steps, with a smile. Blanche had followed him from the house. Ar-

Blanche had followed him from the house. Arnold ran out to her instantly.

"Going?" she said, a little sadly.

"I shall be back in two days," Arnold whispered, "It's all right! Sir Petrick consents."

She held him fast by the arm. The hurried parting before other people seemed to be not a perting to Blanche's taste.

"You will lose the train!" cried Sir Patrick.
Goodfore, saired Arnold by the over which

"You will lose the train!" cried Sir Patrick.
Geoffrey seized Arnold by the arm which Blanche was holding, and tore him—literally tore him—away. The two were out of sight, in the shrubbery, before Blanche's indignation found words, and addressed itself to her uncle.
"Why is that brute going away with Mr.
Brinkworth?" she asked.
"Mr. Delamayn is called to London by his father's illness," replied Sir Patrick. "You don't like him?"

like him? "I hate him!"

Sir l'atrick reflected a little.

"She is a young girl of eighteen," he thought to himself. "And I am an old man of seventy. Curious, that we should agree about any thing. More than curious that we should agree in disliking Mr. Delamayn."

He roused himself, and looked again at He roused himself, and looked agoin as Blancha. She was seated at the table, with her head on her hand; absent, and out of spirits—thinking of Arnold, and yet, with the future all smooth before them, not thinking happily, "Why, Blanche! Blanche!" cried Sir Pat-"Why, Blanche! Blanche!" cried Sir Patrick, "one would think he had gone for a voyage round the world. You silly child! he will be back again the day after to morrow."

"I wish he hadn't gone with that man!" said Blanche. "I wish he hadn't got that man for a friend!"

"There" then! "

"There! there! the man was rude enough, I own. Never mind! he will leave the man at the with me. Dance it off, my dear—dence is off!"

"No," returned Blanche. "I'm is no humor for dancing. I shall go up stairs, and talk about it to Asso."

it to Anne "You will do nothing of the sort !" said a third voice, suddenly joining in the conversation.

Both uncle and niece looked up, and found Lady Lundie at the top of the summer-house steps,

"I feebid you to mention that woman's name again in my hearing," pursued her ladyship,
"Sir Patrick! I warned you (if you remember?) that the matter of the governess was not a matter to be trifled with. My worst anticipations are realized. Miss Silvester has left the house!"

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH. THE SCANDAL.

It was still early in the afternoon when the gnests at Lady Lundie's lawn-party began to in arriving at a general conviction that "something was wrong."

Blanche had mysteriously disappeared from Blanche had mysteriously Lady Lundie had Rhanche Blanche had mystersee. Lady Lundie had her partners in the dance. Lady Lundie had mysteriously ahandoned her guests. Blanche mysteriously ahandoned her guest. Blanche had come back. Lady Lundie had recohad not come back. Lady Lundie had re-turned with an artificial smile, and a prece-cupled manner. She acknowledged that she was "not very well." The same excess had been given to account for Blanche's absence— and, again (some time previously), to explain Miss Silvester's withdrawal from the croquet! A wit among the gentlemen declared it remind-ed him of declining a verb. "I am not very well; theu art not very well: she is not very ed him of declining a verb. "I am not very well; theu art not very well; she is not very well"—and so on. Sir Patrick too! Only think of the sociable Sir Patrick being in a state of seclusion—hobbling up and down by himself in the loneliest part of the gurden. And the servants again! It had even spread to the servants! They were presuming to whisper in corners, like their betters. The house-maids appeared, spasmodically, where house-maids had, no business to be. Doors bany ad and petticoats business to be. Doors bang and petticoats whisked in the upper regions. Somethi depend upon it, something wrong! "We had —depend upon it, something urong! "We had much better go away. My dear, order the car-riage."—"Louiss, love, no more dancing; your pupa is going."—"Good-afternoon, Lady Lan-die!"—"Haw! thanks very much!"—"So sorry for dear Blanche!"—"Oh, it's been toe charm-ing!" So Society jabbered its poor, nossensival little jargon, and got itself politely out of the way before the storm came.

This was exactly the consummation of events which Sir Patrick had been waiting in the acclusion of the garden,

There was no exading the responsibility which was now thrust upon him. Lady Lundie had as-nounced it as a settled resolution, on her part, to trace Anne to the place in which she had taken refuge, and discover (purely in the interests of virtue) whether she actually was married or not. Blanche (already overwrought by the excitement of the day) had broken into an hysterical passion of tears on hearing the news, and had then, on recovering, taken a view of her own of Anne's fight from the house. Anne would never have kept her marriage a secret from Blanche; Anne would never have written such a formal farewell letter as she had written to Blanche-if things were going as smoothly with her as she was try ing to make them believe at Windygates. Some dreadful trouble had fallen on Anne-and Blanche was determined (as Lady Lundie was determined) find out where she had gone, and to follow, and help her.

It was plain to Sir Patrick (to whom both lale was plain to Sir Patrick at separate interdies had opened their hearts, at separate interviews) that his sister-in-law, in one way, and his nince in another, were equally likely—if not duly restrained—to plunge headlong into acts of in-discretion which might lead to very undesirable discretion which might lead to very undesirable results. A man in authority was sorely needed at Windygates that afternoon—and Sir Patrick was fain to acknowledge that he was the man.

"Much is to be said for, and much is to be said against, a single life," thought the old gentleman, hobbling up and down the sequestered garden-path to which he had retired, and applying himself at shorter intervals than usual to the track of his inverser. "This, however, is I hands of his trury case. "This, however, is, I take it, certain. A man's married friends can't prevent him from leading the life of a bachelor, if he pleases. But they can, and do, take devilable good care that he shan't enjoy it!"

Sir l'atrick's meditations were interrupted by the appearance of a servant, previously instruct-ed to keep him informed of the progress of events at the be

They're all gone, Sir Patrick," swid the man. "That's a comfort, Simpson. We have no visitors to deal with now, except the visitors who are staying in the house?

None, Sir Patrick. "They're all gentlemen, are they not?"
"Yes, Sir Patrick,"

"That's another comfort, Simpson. Very good. I'll see Lady Lundie first."

Does any other form of human resolution ap-proach the firmness of a woman who is bent on discovering the frailties of another woman whom she hates? You may move rocks, under a given set of circumstances. But here is a delicate being in petticoats, who shricks if a spider drops on her neck, and shudders if you approach her after hav-ing eaten an onion. Can you move her, under a given set of circumstances, as set forth above? Not you!

Patrick found her ladyship instituting her Inquiries on the same admirably exhaustive sys-tem which is pursued, in cases of disappearance, by the police. Who was the last witness who had seen the missing person? Who was the last servant who had seen Anne Filvester? Begin with the men-servants, from the butler at the top to the stable-boy at the bottom. Go on with the women-servants, from the cook in all her glory to the small female child who weeds the gurden. Lady Landie had server gurden. Lady Landie had cross-examined her way downward as far as the page, when Sir l'atrick joined her.

"My dear lady! pardon me for reminding you again, that this is a free country, and that you have no claim whatever to investigate Miss Silvester's proceedings after she has left your house Lady Lundie mised her eyes, devotionally, to the celling. She looked like a martyr to duty. If you had seen her ladyship at that moment, Lundie raised her eyes, devotionally, to would have said yourself, "A marter to duty."

No, Sir Patrick! As a Christian woman,
"No, Sir Patrick! As a Christian woman,
"No, This un that is not my way of looking at it. This un-happy person has lived under my roof. This unhappy person has been the companion of Blanche. I am responsible—I am, in a man-ner, morally responsible. I would give the world to be able to dismiss it as you do. But no! I must be satisfied that she as married. In the interests of propriety. For the quieting of my own conscience. Before I lay my head on my pillow to night, Sir Patrick—before I lay my head on my pillow to-night!"

"One word, Lady Landie-" "One word, Lady Landie-"
"No!" repeated her ladyship, with the most pathetic gentleness. "You are right, I dare say, from the worldly point of view. I can't take the worldly point of view. The worldly point of view hurts me." She turned, with impressive gravity, to the page. "You know where you will go, Jonathan, if you tell hes!"

Jonathan was lazy, Jonathan was pimply, Jonathan was fat—but Jonathan was orthodox. He answered that he did know: and what is

He answered that he did know; and, what is more, he mentioned the place.

Sir Patrick saw that further opposition on his part, at that moment, would be worse than use-less. He wisely determined to wait, before be interfered again, until Lady Lundie had thor-oughly exhausted herself and her inquiries. At the same time—as it was impossible, in the present state of her ladyship's temper, to provide against what might happen if the inquiries after Anne unluckily proved successful—he decided on taking measures to clear the house of the guests (in the interests of all parties) for the next four-and-twenty hours.

"I only want to ask you a question, Lady Landie, he resumed. "The position of the gentlemen who are staying here is not a very pleasant one while all this is going on. If you had been content to let the matter pass without notice, we should have done very well. As things are, don't you think it will be more convenient to every body if I relieve you of the responsibility of entertaining your guests?"

"As head of the family?" stipulated Lady

"As head of the family!" answered Sir Pat-

"I gratefully accept the proposal," said Lady Lundie.

"I beg you won't mention it," rejoined Sir Patrick.

He quitted the room, leaving Jonathan under examination. He and his brother (the late bir Thomas) had chosen widely different paths in life, and had seen but little of each other since the time when they had been boys. Sir Patrick's recollections (on leaving Lady Lundie) appeared to have taken him back to that time, and to have fragined him with a certain tenderness for his boother's memory. He shook his bead, and sighed a sad little sigh. "Poor Tom!" he said to himself, softly, after he had shut the door on his brother's widow. "Poor Tom!"

On crossing the hall, he stopped the first servant he met, to inquire after Blanche. Miss Blanche was quiet, up stairs, closeted with her maid in her own room. "Quiet?" thought Sir Patrick. "Thut's a bod sign. I shall bear more of my nicee." to have taken bim back to that time, and to have more of my niece.

Pending that event, the next thing to do was to find the guests. Unevring instinct led Sir Patrick to the billiard-room. There he found them, in solemn conclave assembled, wondering what they had better do. Sir Patrick put them all at their case in two mountes

"What do you say to a day's shooting to-mor-row?" he asked.

Every man present-sportsman or not-said

yes.
"You can start from this house," pursued Sir Patrick; "or you can start from a shooting-cottage which is on the Windygstes property—among the woods, on the other side of the moor. The weather looks pretty well settled (for Scot-land), and there are plenty of horses in the stables. It is uscless to conceal from you, gentle-men, that events have taken a certain unexpectwill be equally Lady Landie's guests, whether you choose the cottage or the house. For the next twenry-four hours (let us say)—which shall

Every body-with or without rheumatism-

"Very good," pursued Sir Patrick. "It is arranged to ride over to the shooting-cottage this evening, and to try the moor, on that side, the first thing in the morning. If events here will allow me, I shall be delighted to accompany you, and do the honors as well as I can. If not, I am sure you will accept my apologies for to night, and permit Lady Lundie's steward to see to your comfort in my place."

Adopted unanimously. Sir Patrick left the guests to their billiards, and went out to give the cessary orders at the stables.

In the mean time Blanche remained portentossly quiet in the upper regions of the house; while Lady Lundie stendily pursued her inqui-ries down stairs. She got on from Jonathan (last of the males, indoors) to the conchusa (first of the males, ont-of-doors), and dag down, man by man, through that new stratum, until she struck the stable-boy at the bottom. Not an atom of information having been extracted, in the house or out of the house, from man or boy, her lady-stup fell back on the women next. She pulled stop fell back on the women next. She pulled the hell, and summoned the cook—Hoster Deth-

A very remarkable-looking person entered the Elderly and quiet; scrupulously clean; emi-neutly respectable; her gray her neat and smooth under her modest white cap; her eyes, et deep in their orbits, looking straight at person who spoke to her—here, at a first view, was a steady, trustworthy woman. Here also, on closer inspection, was a woman with the seal of some terrible past suffering set on her for the You felt it, rather than saw it, rest of her life. in the look of immovable endurance which un derlaid her expression-in the death-like tranquality which never disappeared from her man-ner. Her story was a sad one—so far as it was known. She had entered Lady Lundie's service at the period of Lady Lundie's marriage to Sir Thomas. Her character (given by the clergy-man of her parish) described her as having been manried to an inveterate drunkard, and as having seeffored unauterably during her husband's lifetime. There were drawbacks to engaging her, now that she was a widow. On one of the many occasions on which her husband had per-sonally ill-treated her, he had struck her a blow which had produced very remarkable nervous results. She had lain insensible many days together, and had recovered with the total loss of her speech. In addition to this objection, she was odd, at times, in her manner; and she made was odd, at times, in her mather; and she made it a condition of accepting any situation, that she should be privileged to sleep in a room by her-self. As a set-off against all this, it was to be said, on the other side of the question, that she was sober; rigidly honest in all her dealings; and one of the best cooks in England. In con-sideration of this last merit, the late Sir Thomas had decided on giving her a trial, and had dis-covered that he had never dined in his life as he dined when Hester Dethridge was at the head of his kitchen. She remained, after his death, in his widow's service. Lady Lundie was far from liking her. An unpleasant suspicion ated to the cook, which Sir Thomas had overlooked, but which persons less sensible of the immense importance of dining well could not fail to regard as a serious objection to her. Medical men, consulted about her case, discovered certain physiological anomalies in it which led them to suspect the woman of feigning dumbness, for some reason best known to herself. She betinarely declined to learn the deaf and dumb alphabet—on the ground that dumbness was not associated with deafness in her case. Strataeems were invented (seeing that she really did gents were inventon (seeing that she really did possess the use of her ears) to entrap her into also using her speech, and failed. Efforts were made to induce her to answer questions relating to her past life in her husband's time. She flatly declined to reply to them, one and all. sin intervals, strange impulses to get a holiday away from the house appeared to seize her. If she was resisted, she passively declined to do her work. If she was threatened with dismissal, she impenerably bowed her head, as much as to say, "Give me the word, and I go." Over and over again, Lady Lundie had decided, naturally enough, on no longer keeping such a servant as this; but she had never yet carried the decision to execution. A cook who is a perfect mistress of her art, who asks for no perquisites, who al-lows no wasts, who never quarrels with the other servants, who drinks nothing stronger than tea, who is to be trusted with untold gold—is not a cook easily replaced. In this mortal life we put up with many persons and things, as Lady Lun-die put up with her cook. The woman lived, as it were, on the brink of dismissal; but thus far the woman kept her place—getting her holidays when she asked for them (which, to do her justice, was not often), and sleeping always (go where she might with the family) with a locked door, in a room by herself.

Hester Dethridge advanced slowly to the table

Hester Dethridge advanced slowly to the table at which Lady Lundie was sisting. A slate and pencil hung at her side, which she used for making such replies as were not to be expressed by a gesture or by a motion of the head. She took up the slate and pencil, and waited with stony submission for her mistress to begin.

Lady Lundie opened the proceedings with the regular formula of inquiry which she had used with all the other recreates.

with all the other servants.

"Do you know that Miss Silvester has left the

The cook nodded her head affirmatively.

"Do you know at what time she left it?"

Another affirmative reply. The first which ady Lundie had received to that question yet.

She eagerly went on to the next inquiry.

"Have you seen her since she left the house?"

A third affirmative reply.

Where?" Hester Dethridge wrote slowly on the slate, in singularly firm upright characters for a woman in her position of life, these words:

the road that leads to the railway. Nigh to Mistress Chew's Farm.

to Mistress Chew's Farm."

"What did you want at Chew's Farm?"

Hester Dethridge wrote: "I wanted eggs for the kitchen, and a breath of fresh air for myself."

"Did Miss Silvester see you?"

A negative shake of the head.

"Did she take the turning that leads to the radway?

Another negative shake of the bead.

Another regard the moor?"

An uffirmative reply,

"What did she do when she got to the moor?" Hester Dethridge wrose: "She took the foot-oth which leads to Craig Fernie."

Lady Lundie rose excitedly to her feet. There vas but one place that a stranger could go to at traig Fernie. "The inn!" exclaimed her lady-Craig Fernie thip. "She has gone to the inn!"

Hester Dethridge waited immovably. Lady

Lundie put a last precautionary ques these words:

"Have you reported what you have seen to any body else?"

An afformative reply. Lady Lundie had not bar-gained for that. Hester Dethridge (she thought) must surely have misunderstood her.
"Do you mean that you have told somebody else what you have just told me?

Another affirmative reply.

"A person who questioned you, as I have

A third affirmative reply. Who was it?'

Hester Dethridge wrote on her slate: "Miss

Lady Lundie stepped back, staggered by the discovery that Blanche's resolution to trase Anne Silvester was, to all appearance, as firmly settled as her own. Her step-daughter was keeping her own counsel, and acting on her own responsibility—her step-daughter might be an awkward ob-stacle in the way. The manner in which Anne had left the bouse had mortally offended Lady An inveterately vindictive woman, she had resolved to discover whatever compromising elements might exist in the governess's secret, and to make them public property (from a paramount sense of duty, of course) among her own circle of friends. But to do this—with Blanche acting (as might certainly be anticipated) in direct opposition to ber, and openly esponsing Miss Silvester's interests—was manifestly impossible The first thing to be done-and that instant was to inform Blanche that she was discovered, and to forbid her to stir in the matter.

Lady Lundie rang the bell twice—thus inti-mating, according to the laws of the household, that she required the attendance of her own maid. She then turned to the cook—still waiting her pleasure, with stony composure, slate in hand.

"You have done wrong," said her ladysing, severely. "I am your mistress. You are bound to answer your mistress.—" Hester Dethridge bowed her head, in ity ac-knowledgment of the principle said down—so

The bow was an interruption. Lady Lundis

"But Miss Blanche is not your mistress," she went on, sternly. "You are very much to blame for answering Miss Blanche's inquiries about Miss Silveste

Hester Dechridge, perfectly unmoved, wrote her justification on her slate, in two stiff sen-tences: "I had no orders set to answer. I keep nobody's secrets but my own."

That reply settled the question of the cook's dismissal—the question which had been pending for mouths nest.

for months past.

You are an insolent woman! I have home with you long enough—I will bear with you no longer. When your mouth is up, you go."
In those words Lady Lundie dismissed Hester

Not the slightest change passed over the sin-ister tranquillity of the cook. She bowed ber head again, in acknowledgment of the sentence pronounced on her-dropped her slate at her side-turned about-and left the room. The woman was alive in the world, and working in the world; and yet (so far as all human interests were concerned) she was as completely out of the world as if she had been screwed down in her coffin, and laid in her grave, Lady Lundie's maid came into the room as left it. "Go up stairs to Miss Blanche," said her mistress, "and say I want her here. Wait a min-ute!" She pansed, and considered. Blanche tite!" She paused, and considered. Blanche might decline to submit to her step-mother's interference with her. It might be necessary to appeal to the higher authority of her guardian. "Do you know where Sir Patrick is?" asked Lady Lundie.

"I heard Simpson say, my lady, that Sir Patrick was at the stables."
"Send Simpson with a message. My compliments to Sir Patrick—and I wish to see him immediately."

mediately.

The preparations for the departure to the shooting-cottage were just completed; and the one question that remained to be settled was, whether Sir Patrick could accompany the party—when the man-servant appeared with the

"Will you give me a quarter of an hour, gen-tlemen?" asked Sir Patrick. "In that time I shall know for certain whether I can go with you or not."

As a matter of course, the guests decided to wait. The younger men among them (being Englishmen) naturally occupied their leisure time in betting. Would Sir Patrick get the better of the domestic crisis? or would the domestic crisis get the better of Sir Patrick? The domestic crisis was backed, at two to one,

Punctually at the expiration of the quarter of an hour, Sir Patrick reappeared. The mestic crisis had betrayed the blind confide mestic crisis had betrayed the blind confidence which youth and inexperience had placed in it. Sir Patrick had won the day.

"Things are settled and quiet, gentlemen; and I am able to accompany you," he said. "There are two ways to the shooting-cuttage. One—the longest—passes by the inn at Craig Fernie. I am compelled to ask you to go with me by that way. While you push on to the cottage, I must drop behind, and say a word to a person who is staying at the inn."

person who is staying at the inn."

He had quieted Lady Lundie—he had even quieted Blanche. But it was evidently on the condition that he was to go to Craig Fernie in their places, and to see Anne Silvester himself. Without a word more of explanation he mount-ed his horse, and led the way out. The shoot-ing-party left Windygates.

ON THE ROCKS.

The old horse, dragging the old wagon, pur-sued his way at a melancholy jog-trot through the woods. His equine soul was bitter within him. This was the twenty-first time within a him. This was the twesty-first time within a formight that he had passed over that very read. He hazed—as a horse may—the summer season, the summer tourists, and this postession of "the Quintette." But what could be do? He was too weary and ill-fed to run away. Nothing better occurred to him than to doggedly resolve out to a fester and to this determination he not to go faster, and to this determination he dhered—come what might.

Four only of "the Quintette" occupied the Four only of "the Quintette" occupied the wagon. Laurence, whip in hand, was perched in front, his legs dangling over the traces. He was wont to boast a listle of his skill in keeping Dolly up to her work; but to-day his artistic snappings and cuttings were all in vain. Mab and Amy, dividing the responsibility of the rains, came next; and behind, on the back seat, sat Milda have. Hilds-alone.

Hilds—slone.

This was something so out of the common order of things that all had taken notice of it in their own fashion. Lanrence had attempted a trifling joke or two, received in stony silence, and now the girls were twisting their heads round every minute, on various pretexts, to study Hilds's face. It was no use. The face looked a little pale, but quite unreadable. She joined in the talk now and then—perhaps as often as usual—but her voice lacked its usual ring, and a silent conviction that matters were ring, and a silent conviction that matters were going wrong took possession of the party. "There's the Doctor now," cried Laurence, suddenly, in a tone of relief. "Where? I don't see him."

"Up that path to the right-just coming out 's gate. Where are your eyes, child?"
"Oh yes—stop, Laurence—he's coming to

Dr. Sterling emerged from the woods and approached them. A strong active figure - not very tall, but with something of a military bearing in the square shoulders and about the set head. Cool gray eyes, too, and a firm mouth, as of one accustomed to command.
"Doctor, won't you get in now and ride the rest of the way?"

The Doctor took one look at Hilda before an Her face was averted; but the profile, swering. Her face was averted; but the prome, with its drooped eyelids and compressed lips, looked cold and uninviting.

"Thank you; no, Miss Amy. Dolly has a sufficient load, I think. I prefer to walk;" and with a slight, general bow the alert figure moved to contain the property of the state of the st on, outstripping Dolly in a moment, and van-ished round a curve. Laurence tried a fresh series of persuasions upon the luckless Dolly, but without avail, and a damp seemed to fall on the spirits of the party.

What does it mean?" whispered little Mab. A shake of the head and a grim little mose was the only reply she got. Amy didn't know—no-body knew—what it was that, happening on the leach that morning, had made Hilda and the Doctor so unlike themselves,

Nobody ever can know but the parties most concerned the intricacies of a lovers' quarrel. It springs up, rapid as a thunder-gast, from some cause, absurdly small perhaps—a trifle, easy to pass over in the case of an indifferent person, but possessed suddenly of momentous im-portance in this. The two natures, all charged with electrical perceptions; thrilling with newly-found capacities, affinities, wishes; bewildered with the new Heaven and new Earth upon which they have entered; groping, as in the dark, to find out the whole of each other—of themselves; the whole world tremulous with fresh mysterious meaning-what wonder if in this wonderful, balf-discovered realm they sometimes come to-gother with a clash, and that clash strikes fire! To those who stand pledged heart to heart these storms may come and pass, leaving the air freer and the sky more blue. But Hilda and ber and the sky more blue. For Filds and ser lover had not reached that stage. Little by lit-tle they had drawn close to each other. The stient, drifting chain of circumstances, which seem in this world to make us their sport—now seem in this worst to make us their sport—now uniting, now separating—had in this case been favorable. No contrary eddy had set in—the winds blew softly. All this haloyon formight they had neared each other with rapid progress. Each day, with its radiance of peace and pleasure, had woven a more assured spell over their hearts. And yet this morning a storm-wind had begun, and it might go on to blow and tenr asunder the two lives which seemed so nearly one.

"A trifle light as air." Yet here was the Doctor, far on his way to "The Head," chewing the cud of bitter fancies, and shattering the investigant cuts from his care bushes with quick, impatient cuts from his cane as he passed; and here was Hilda sulking in the back seat of the wagon.

No; I beg Hilda's pardon. It was not sulks —her nature was too fine for that. Poor child!
she felt all turned cold within—all but her heart —that ached pitifully. She was too proud to show it, however, and so her fair, clearly-cut face looked hard and set.

The week was though forward thickets of

The road ran through fragrant thickets of arbor-vitze and juniper. Overhead the intense sky looked through the tree-tops. Cat-birds and robins were singing—it was a day for happiness; but dear me! how little she cared! How little any of as care about such things when we happen to be miserable!

And now the woods were passed, and they came out upon a sparkling little cove fringed with a line of creamy foam. To the right was a field of yellow grain which swept its waring tassels up the sides of a vast rocky headland; beyond and beyond that, encircling every thing, was a ring of waveless turquoise, whose horizon line rose and met the curving dip of another sea, whose azure was flecked with clouds of gold and snow-like bright islands. The serenity, the perfection of color, the softness of the wind which met their faces, gave no token of the might that lurked within this beauty; but the deep, low thunder of the surf upon the far-away cliff spoke of the force with which, even on the calmest days, the water threw itself upon the land. What a storm might be upon "The Head" very few people had ever cared to experience.

A fisherman's but stood at the entrance of the in the doorway stood a tall old woman-their grandmother.

All of them knew her, and they stopped to speak. The stern face softened at the courteous greeting and the sweet young faces.

"Come in, won't you?" she said. "And have some blueberries and milk."

"Oh, thank you; but I guess not, Mrs. Judson. We are in a hurry to get to the rocks.
The surf is so fine to-day, and the tide changes in an hour or two. We're very much obliged to you, though."

"Just as you like."

At the fence the Doctor stood, with a bar down, to help them over. A spray of wild roses was in his hand. He glanced at Hilda as she passed, and handed the flowers to Mah.

"Thank you," said Mab, a little frightened; and she made haste up the hill after her familiar Kate. She had a feeling as if the roses burned her fingers. This was little Mab's first expeher fingers. This was little Mab's first experience of a love affair. She had watched it with intense interest—the apparent hitch grieved her not a little.

"What can we do about it, Amy?" she whis-pered, as they panted up the hill. "It is so for-lorn and strange. Cen't we do any thing?"

"Nothing at all. Just act as if every thing was as usual; perhaps it will all come right yet.

Any way, it will get worse and worse if we take

Amy sighed as she spoke. She, too, had invested a deal of tender sympathy in Hilda's romance, and she had experience enough to know the mischief small misunderstandings make. Those "little rifts within the lute"—what sweet

Those "little rifts within the lute"—what sweet music they have silenced!

Hilda and the two young men walked side by side without speaking. What help she needed in the climb she accepted from Laurence. It was a hard scamble up the steep hill, with its gnarled tree-roots and its slippery mosses and lichens; but a harder still on the other side, where the jagged granite boulders fronted the sea. Lifted and jumped, and swang from rock to rock, the girls made the descent and reached at last their bourne, a flat, broad platform just above the water. It exactly held the party, and here they had seent many a harsey morning durabove the water. It exactly need the party, and, here they had spent many a happy morning dur-ing this eventful fortright.

Directly opposite was a low, cavernous opening in the bollow cliff. Into this each moment great emerald-green billows were pouring, sucked in with a bellowing like thunder, and then dashed forth a cataract of yeast-white foam. The sun struck the edge of each wave with sharp, dazzling glints as it poised before the plunge, and danced upon the returning torrent, changing its white into a mass of seething, turbulent minbows. Beyond lay the sea, sleeping in calm, unruffled blue, and the islands in the buy gleamed golden in the sun.

What levely days they had spent on that rock!

Days filled with the exhilaration of the wonderful air and the half rapture, half terror which au-tends a thing we feel to be so infinitely greater than ourselves. Days of happy silence mosely, than ourselves. Days of happy shence mosely, when now and then a scrap of song or a tinkling laugh broke the quiet, but where conversation was wont to lapse into repose as tranquil but more intense than that of sleep. Hilds and the Doctor occupied usually a rocky shelf so near the waves that they occasionally haptized it by a shower of spray. Wrapped in the same immense shower of spray. Wrapped in the same immense plaid, they would sit for hours, speaking some-times in low tones, but more often lost in a si-lence no less eloquent than speech. To-day nei-ther of them approached the similiar spot. Hibla nestled down in a remote corner by little Mab, and Dr. Sterling, absorbed in dropping bits of rock into the water, had now and then a word for Amy, but for no one else.

Something was very wrong. All felt it. No snatches of song arose. Laurence didn't venture on a single conundrum. Puzzled little Mab felt the silence oppressive, but she couldn't think of a word to say. The hollow roar of the spouting horn came with a foreboding moan. "How rough it is to-day!" said Laurence at

"How rough it is to day!" said Laurence at last, chucking a pebble into the waves.

"It's just the day for Miss Archer to drop her hat again, isn't it?" said Amy.

"Who's Miss Archer?"

"Day you know? "The girl who towed her.

"Don't you know? The girl who tossed her hat into the sea one day off that rock, and dared her lover to jump in after it."

"And did he?"

"And did he?"

"Yes. But he was obliged to swim all the way round to the Cove before he could land. He would have been dashed to pieces here."

"More fool he." said Laurence. "I'd have seen the young lady hanged first."

"It's just the Knight De Lorge over again, isn't it?" put in little Mab.

"Then I bope he threw the wet hat in her face; don't you, Doctor?"

"No," said Dr. Serling. "A gentleman wouldn't do that. But I hope from that day he saw her as she was and despised her."

Something in the tone brought a flush to Hilda's pale cheek. "How hard he is!" she sighed to herself—"hard and cruel;" and the pain at her heart grew more miscrahle.

"I move we have lunch," said Laurence, desperate at the failure of each attempt at enliven-ment. The basket was produced, the sandwiches esten, but neither gingerbread nor claret served to brighten the gloom. Little Mah nibbled her biscuit like a frightened mouse, and even Lan-rence cracked his egg-shells in silence. It was no me. The Hend was not like itself

It was no use. The Hend was not like itself that day. The foam was white, the distance blue as ever, the waves dashed and churned with the same melodious ravings—but the charm was gone. Long before the usual time they turned to go, and, for the first time, without one sigh of regret. Hilds and Amy far in advance, and Laurence and Dr. Sterling lifting Mab up the

The old grandmother stood as before in the door of her cottage. She looked more grim and stern than ever; Amy thought perhaps offended at the rejection of her morning's hospitality, and at the rejection of the stopped to speak.

"It's a beautiful day on the rocks." The
"It's a beautiful day on the rocks." A sed thing has stern face grow sterner. "A sad thing has happened since you passed here this morning, young ladies," she said, in a harsh voice. "What was that?"

"A little boy has been drowned."

"A little boy! Whose?"

"My son's—there, in that well."

"Good Heaven!" cried Hilda. "How long was he in the water?"

"A quarter of an hour." You are sure he is dead?"

"So the men say; they tried all they knew.

Kate turned. Hilds was already half across the field—her flying feet retracing the path they had so lately trod. Just as little Mab was carehad so lately trod. Just as little Mab was carefully lifted down the last steep place by her two rany insed down the last steep pince by her two escorts she reached them—panting, breathless, her ire all gone. She rushed to Dr. Sterling as to a haven of refuge, and grasping his arm cried, in breathless accents: "Oh, Frank! Hurry! hurry! You may be

"Hilda! Good God! What is it?" "The well! One of the children! Oh,

The quick professional instinct awoke. Without another word he was gone. The others, fol-lowing rapidly, saw him clear the fence at a bound, and disappear into the cottage before they were half across the field.

Amy was on her knees by the bedside where the child lay. A fair, pretty fellow, three years old. She had taken off his dripping clothes and out. She had taken our as dripping cooles and wrapped him in a blanket; the drip still hung heavily on his hair. What had been done to reasimate him could not be guessed—the fire was out; and in a corner of the kitchen sat the mother helplessly sobbing, while the other chil-dren clong about her knees.

Busily and belpfully Mab and Amy went to work lighting the fire, warming blankets, hest-ing water, and quieting the frightened children. Hilda, usually so active, seemed frozen to her place. With tightly-clasped hands she stood by the bedside motionless and silent, watching Laurence and the Doctor busied over the poor who lay with his little head hanging helplersly on one side like a snapped flower. With tender on one side like a snapped flower. With tender touch they were lifting him, first into one position, then another, at regular intervals; and now and then breathing in his mouth to inflate the longs. The old grandmother stood in the door, her rigid face and attitude full of hopeless misery. "It's no use, no use," she said, low to herself, more than once. Noiselessly the girls would creep up stairs with freshly-warmed blankets or bottles of hot water; and Laurence, meeting them, would express by a shake of the head his own waning As time went on the shakes grew sadder and sadder. But Hilda never moved; and her eves, steadfastly fixed on the Doctor, were full a new meaning.
It seemed to her that she had never truly seen him before. Perhaps she never had. The gray eyes were no longer cool, they were warmed into tenderness by the compassion that filled them. The firm mouth quivered a little as the dextrous hands pursued their task, the face was very pale; but it wore a sweetness never there be fore. Hilda's own lips trembled with a tearful smile as she eatched him. Her eyes closed. In the depths of her heart she breathed a silent thanksgiving. "He is not cold, he is not cruel; wretch that I was to think so. Oh, Frank, my Frank; thank God, yes are my Frank."

All was vain. The limbs hung lifeless, the eyes did not open, life and breath would not return. At last the Doctor paused. Gently he pressed down the blue-reined lids and composed the little form quietly upon its pillow. The old grandmother turned abruptly and descended the stairs. A burst of sobs arose in the kitchen, Laurence hurried down, and Hilda and Frank Hairence hurred down, and Fluda and Frank found themselves alone.

He breathed a long, tired sigh. Perhaps nothing could have touched her so deeply as this unusual weariness. He was always so strong. Gently she moved forward and stood beside him. He turned, their eyes met; and in a "flash of silence" all was told and comprehended.

stience" all was told and comprehended.
"My darling," he said. That was all. He clasped her hand. She put her head down on his shoulder. It had never rested there before, but never nest felt more home-like to a tired hird. Hand in hand they stood, and without another word all was right between them. By the side of the dead child they entered into their new

Out of the blue and sparkle of the day-in the out of the one and sparse or use day in the midst of their restless, eager discontent—this piteous spectacle confronted them. Death has irresistible eloquence. They saw the truth—their love—their danger—and rebuked and softened, they thanked God. There was no need of further explanations.

was a sober party enough, which at last took the familiar road through the woods. tle was spoken. Mab and Amy had red circles about their eyes, but for all that they contrived to notice the chasped hands on the back sent, and the new and peaceful look, which rested like a glory on their Hilda's face, and they felt that was well.

And it was well. The vow breathed silently that morning in the fisherman's cottage has been fulfilled, and still the sweet story is going on. times. Care and disappointment belong to all; sove one another, and face ill together. For men or for women few things can be hoped for better than that. Many strive to attain thereto, and never enter in. In my own dreams I picture no happier fate—do you?

EGYPT AWAKENED.

Histores through old, husbed Egypt and its sands, Like some grave, mighty thought threading a dream; And time and things, as in that vision, even Keeping along it their cternal stands.

WHEN LEIGH HUNE, who never dreamed of LESSETS and his canal, wrote the beautiful son-net from which the above lines are taken, he had a vision of Egypt asleep: our artist, in the fine illustration on page 804, shows us Egypt awakened from the alumber of ages by the hand of the genius of modern civilization, and rousing herself to the practical work of the and reasing sersell to the practical work of the nineteenth century. She reposes against a fall-en column; on one side stand the eternal Pyra-mids, the mystical Sphinx, and a solitary repre-sentative of the sacred bird of old Egyptian mythology. These are types of the part, and are finely contrasted with the types of modern energy and progress — the steamboat, the rail-way, the factory—to which her eyes are directed. The same idea is repeated and enforced in the drawings underseath, in which the shores of the Red Sea, strewn with the dead of Phanaon's host, are contrasted with the same shores en-livened by the commerce and the industrial energy of the present age.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Is the late election in Chicago, when the coptest was between the regular Republican or "Barnacle" ticket, as it was called, and the Citizens' ticket, Phil Hoype, our old United States Consmissioner here, was a candidate on the "Barnacle" ticket for Alberman, and was, as was the late of the "Barnacle" ticket generally, defeated. The snowing after the election a friend went into the Consmissioner's office, and asked, "Thil, how was it that you did not got elected?" "which Phil replied, gmffy, "The folks in our word thought I had better attend to my duties as United States Commissioner than this with a lot of common secondrels, jobbers, and omiractors."

minister at an eating-house gave the order, east beef, well door, good and faithful servant."

A young man who had come into possession of a large property by the death of his brother was asked how he was getting abone. "Oh," said he, "I em having a dreadfait time! What with getting out let-ters of administration, and attending a probate court, and settling claims, I sometimes wish he hadn't died?"

Morgan Work or Flories-The prospectus of an all company.

A young enthusiast was talking to his intended, urging upon her speedy survings, and a start to speed the honer-moon in California. —I tell you," said he, his face glowing with enthusiasm, "California is the paradise of this earth. There's no use talking?" "No use folking?" excludined the lady, with a look of some surprise. "No use of talking," be explied, "Well, if there's no use talking," said the lady, "wast in the name of senses do you want of women there? I don't go!"

"Lottle," said a little visitor, "what makes your kitty so cross?" "Oh, "cause she's cutting teeth, I s'pect."

"Gentlemen of the jury," said a Western lawyer, "I don't mean to instruste that this man is a covet-ous person, but I will but five to one that if you should halt a steel trap with a new three-cour piece, and pisce it within six inches of his mouth, you would eatch his soul. I wouldn't for a moment instruste that his would steal, but, may it pieces the court and gentlemen of the jury. I wouldn't trust him is a room with red-bot millistones, and the angel Gabriel to watch 'em."

"What shall I do?" exclaimed a superfastidious exquisite, as he paced his elegant apartment in fine frency; "what is to be done? I have scenned up hish d is violet, and my laundress has sent me my shirts d in none?"

"Is that clock right, over there?" asked a visitor, the other day. "Right over there," said the boy; "'tain't nowhere else!"

BRIEF BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

Jenter Casas. Sen of old man Casar. Was been at Rome in his infancy, and, upon arriving at the estate of his manhood, became a Roman. Was a fighter and a writer of some note. His friend Brutos asked him one morning how many eggs he had eaten for breakfast, and he replied, "Et to Brute?" His friend, curraged at being called a brute, stabbed Casar quits dead.

dend.

Moramem—Author of the "Korn," an exciting romance, written in the Mammoth Care at Mecca. He was the originate, of a religious creed with which he stuffed Turkey, said tried to get up a broil in Greece, but failed. Many of his earlier followers suffered great persecution. Some of them were bound in Morecon, and borned at the stake. He had three temples while living—one at Mecca, and one on the other side of his bead. his bead.

Eving—one at Mecca, and one on the other side of his bead.

Buts or Watterswoo—An officer of the British army. Mr. Longfellow makes honorable meanten of him as the "Warden of she Cinque Parla." Cinque means five, and he was the protector of five principal ports, or strainginal points, usually denominated the Five Points. He lived to a ripe cild ago and died.

Gor Fawers—A warm-bearies, impulsive Englishman, who believed the British Parlianeess too good for this earth, and devised an expeditious method of elevating the members to a better sphere. He was interrupted in his good intentions, but for which circumstance he doubtless would have made a great noise in the world. He was excepted for his disinterested benevolence, and was subsequently burned in a place called Effigy.

DOWN AGAIN!

MR. PEABODY'S FUNERAL.

Wk give on page 800 an illustration of the funeral of the late Mr. George Prancoty, which took place in Westminster Abbey, where, on the 14th of November, his remains were deposited to await their removal to this countries. await their removal to this country. The ceremony was unusually impressive. Seldom has the venerable Abbey been so densely crowded on a funeral occasion. Nearly every one present, including many representatives of the working-classes, was dressed in mourning; and some of the English papers remark upon the absence of whispering and tittering, and uneasy shifting about, and the general hush that prevailed in the audience, as something singular and unusual; as if even the most thoughtless and frivolous, if any thoughtless and frivolous, if any such were there, were for once awell into silence and decorum. The seats of the choir were draped with black cloth, and the space be-tween the stalls was covered with a black carpet; the pulpit and reading-desk were hung with black, and beneath the lantern there was placed a bier covered with black velvet, relieved by a white border, on either side of which seats were reserved for the mouraers. The socrarium was inclosed by harriers of black cloth, and only a few highly privileged spectators were admitted to seats within its area.

Before the doors of the Abbey were opened many persons were waiting for admission, and, al-though there was little crowding and no confusion at the entrances, very soon every sent in nave and choir and transept was filled, a very considerable proportion of the occupants being lulies. Soon after twelve o'clock the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs arrived, elad in their scarlet gowns, and at once pro-ecoled to the seats reserved for them in the sacrarium. Lord CLARESPOS, Secretary of State for 41. AREKNES, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, General Gary, and Mr. Hears, representing her Majesty, had anticipated their arrival, and were already seated; and not long afterward Mr. Glanstox: passed quickly through the nave, and took his place by the noble earl. Neither the Premier nor any other member of the Government was in official costume. All were plain mourning dress. All wore plain mourning dress, and all, like the rest of the sperdeceased philanthropist.

The grave, as shown in the illustration, had been prepared in the middle of the nave, not far from the west door; and here, with the usual ceremonies of the Church of England, the body was temporarily deposited. It will be brought to this country in her Majesty's ship Moserch, a turnet ship of the most recent construction, conveyed by national ships from the American and French navies. The Moserch was to leave Poetsmouth on the 8th of December, and is probably now on her way to our shores. deceased philanthropist.

carried some mark of mourning for the

GEORGE PEABODY.

The portrait of Mr. Peanony on this page is from an excellent photograph of the distinguished philanthropist by Mr. Henni Clauder, of London. The view of the house in which he was born is from a photograph by Beack, of Salem, Massachusetts, and represents the building as it-now stands. It was creeted near the beginning of the seventeenth century, and, except new covering, has since undergone very little alteration. The building on the left is part of the well-known glue manufactory of Mr. E. W. Urrow, which, with its several departments, occupies an area of about thirty acres of ground. an area of about thirty acres of ground.

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEBRAL, IN NEW YORK.

WE give on page-812 an engraving of St. Patrick's Cathedral, on Fifth Avenue, between Patrick's Cathedral, on Fifth Avenue, between Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets, New York, as it will appear when completed. This magnificent structure, the corner-stone of which was laid in July, 1858, will be the largest ecclesiastical edifice in America, and will compare favorably, in size and architectural beauty, with the most celebrated cathedrals of Europe. The material of which it is constructed is white marble, with a substantial filling of height in and without, with a substantial filling of brick masonry between the inner and outer walls. The style of archi-tecture is highly ornamented me-dieval Gothic, not the usual Ro-manesque or Byzantine to be found in most of the Roman Catholic churches in this country.

Catholic churches in this country.

The area covered by this building, including the walls and buttresses, is 46,500 aquare feet.

The space within the walls will affect ample room for fourteen thousand people; and it is compated that even nineteen thousand could be accommodated, should a great occasion ever draw so large a congregation together. The outside length of the edifice is 330 feet from buttress to buttress; inside the walls, 301 feet. The breadth at the transept is 172 feet, 120 above and below the point of intersection of transept and nave. The height from floor to the crown of the arched ceiling will be 110 feet, while the ceilings of the side sisles while the ceilings of the side aisles are 54 feet from the church floor, Along the aisles will be a row of chapels, fourteen in number, the height of each 17 feet. There are to be eight sacristies and two hap-tisteries at the east end of the church.

The high altar is to stand 48 feet east of the line of intersection of nave and transept. Back of this is to be a chapel, 48 feet in length, dedicated to the Virgin, richly and elaborately ornamented.

Our engraving shows the rich-ness of the architectural design, The central portal, on Fifth Ave-nuc, which is already erected, is 50 feet in height, and, like the others, is richly decorated. Over the great door a great circular window will admit the light to the interior through deaths page of interior, through double panes of rich stained glass. Rising above this window will be a crocketed gable and finial cross. On each gable and finial cross. On each side of the great portal, and over the side doors, two towers will rise square at the base, but finish octagonally. They are to be 320 feet in height, and crowned with a finial cross. The transcpt doors, which will open on Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets, are to be 25 feet wide by 43 high, over each a cross.

Fifty-first streets, are to be 20 feet wide by 43 high; over each a grand window, ornamented with tich tracery, surmounted by a paneled gable, and terminated by a paneled gable, and terminated by a paneled 130 feet from the ground.

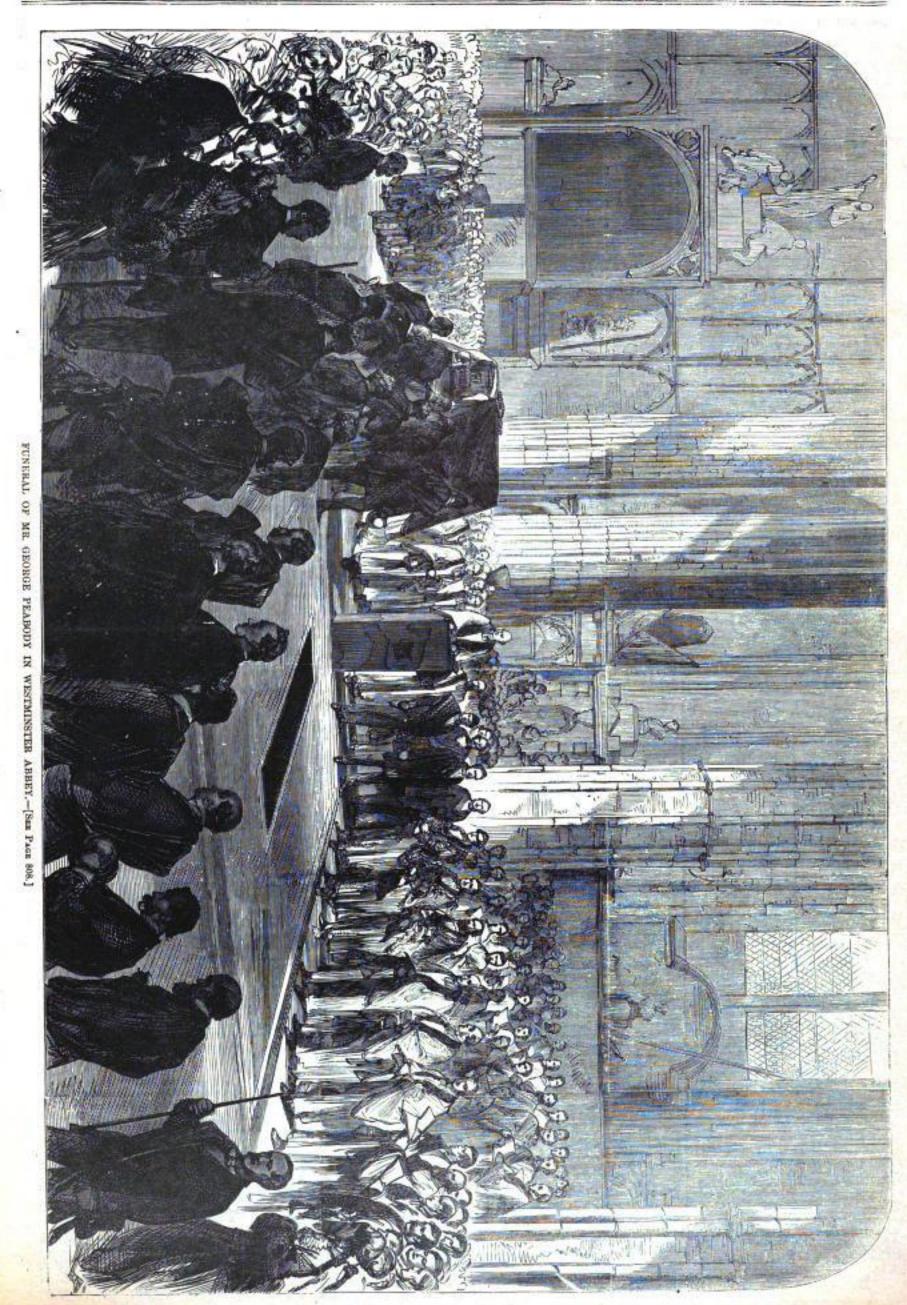

The number of large windows in the huilding will be feety-seven in the rear, thirteen on each side, and thirteen in the clear-story, to light the nave or central aisle. These windows are to have two thicknesses of glass, the outer frame being set two inches from the inner one. The interior will be richly ornamented. In one of the towers over the grand portal on Fifth Avenue the great bell is to be hung, and in the other the chimes. The cathedral will be heared by steam.

by steam.

The cathedral walls have attained a height of about 50 feet, and the work of building is stead-ily progressing; but several years must elapse before the completion of the edifice.

BIRTH-PLACE OF GEORGE PEABODY, SOUTH DANVERS, MASSACHUSETTS, -[PROTOGRAPHED BY BLACK, SALEN, MASSACHUSETTS.]

Digitized by Godge

WHEN YOU WERE SEVENTEEN.

WHEN the hay was mown, Maggie, In the years long ago,
And while the western sky was rich
With senses's rosy glow,
Then hand in hand close-linked we passed The dewy ricks between, And I was one-and twenty, Mag,

Your voice was low and sweet, Maggie; your votos was low and sweet, Maggie; Your wavy hair was brown; Your cheek was like the wild red rose That showfied its petals down; Your opes were like the blue speedwell, With dewy moisture sheen, When I was one-and-twenty, Mag, And you were seventeen.

The spring was in our hearts, Maggie,
And all its hopes were ours;
And we were children in the fields,
Among the opening flowers.

Ar! Life was like a summer day
Amid the woodlands green,
For I was one-and-twenty, Mag. And you were sevente

The years have come and gone, Maggie, With sunshine and with shade, And silvered is the silken hair That o'er your shoulders strayed In many a soft and wayward tress-The fairest ever seen— When I was one-and-twenty, Mag. And you were seventeen.

Though gently changing Time, Maggie, Has touched you in his flight, Your voice has still the old sweet tone, Your eye the old love-light; And years can never, never change The heart you gave, I ween, When I was one-and-twenty, Mag, And you were seventeen

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

En gfbe Boots .- Boot HEE.

CHAPTER V.

A SHADOW ACROSS THE SCHARING.

THE summer passed away monotonously at Ville Chiari. The host increased stendily. reached a climax, and then began as steadily to abate. All through the blazing months Sir John remained at the villa. The house backed in the glare of the long day with closed blinds, like a living thing asteep in the saushine. Then, toward evening, doors and windows were thrown open, and figures were seen soated beneath the loggia, or paring the shadiest garden walks, and the sound of footsteps echoed on the flagged court-ward.

As the days and weeks and months went by, and brought no tidings from Maud or the vicer, Varonica grew restlessly discontented. For some Varonica grew restlessly discontented. For some time anger supported her spirits. But by degrees she became tomested by apprehensions for her father's health. The apprehensions were only momentary, but they returned oftener and off-ener. She debuted the possibility that none of her letters had been received, and twisted the matter this way and that way in her mind, Once she spoke to Sir John on the subject. It was after a fit of depression and tears, and she was unable to suffer alone. She felt impelled to make him share her pain.

"I do wonder how papa is!" she said, unexpectedly, as they were sitting alone together in

Sir John made no answer, but turned pneasi-ly in his chair.

"I do wonder. I want to know. I must know !

"What is the meaning of this sudden anx-lety?"

1. It is not sudden. Because I have kept it to myself so long, you can not understand that I have been suffering all this time!" Veronica really thought for the moment that she had been generously sparing him. She knew herself to have been unhappy at intervals, and omitted to observe that the first moment she had felt the desire to speak of her unhappiness to Sir-John, she had yielded to it without a thought of restraining herself for his sake.

"Well, what can I 30? Can I help it if they to be anxious about? No news is good news."

"I wrote to Mand, I did think she would have answered me!"

"Bah! You are infatnated with that girl.

I wonder that a person of your intellect should be so taken in by her missish airs."
"You know nothing about Mand!" cried Ve-rouls, quickly. "You can not understand her one his."

one bit."

"Neither, it seems, can you," retorted Sir John. Praise of Maud always displeased him. Veronica's reverence and admiration for her irritated him peculiarly.

Veronica started up with a little childish exclamation of impatience, and walked to the win dow.

"I must know how pape is!" she said. Her voice was changed now. There were certain deep tones in it which the mention of Mand colled forth.

Her pettishness disturbed Sir John much less

"Amor salo," he said, soothingly, "rest as-sured that if any evil had happened to your fa-ther, or if any evil threatened him even, you would not fail to hear of it. There are picuty of kind, pious people in that Arcadian village who would cheerfully take on themselves the duty of imparting any thing disagreeable."

She was willing to be put on good terms with herself at any body's expense—save Mand's—and she smiled contemptuously at the recellection of the Shipley people.

"Can't you fancy their gloating over such a chance of punishing you for having had the courage to escape from among them?"

"If Principe Cenare de Barletti," announced a servant at this moment, and the title-k-title interview was at an end.

terview was at an end.

The prince was a constant, and nearly the nly, visitor at Villa Chiari throughout the sumonly, visitor at Villa Chiari throughout the summer. One or two other men came occasionally; a stray attaché, left behind in solitary responsibility during the absence of his chief, and bewailing his fate; a belared Prussian grandee, passing through on his way from the sea-baths at Leghorn to the northern side of the Alps. No English came, and no ladies.

Early in September people began to return to Florence. Veronica made various indirect attempts to see and to be seen by such of the fashtempts to see and to be seen by such of the fash-ionable world as were already to be found driving in the Cascine toward the sunset hour, and ing in the Caseine soward the senset hour, and inhaling the evening missma heroically. But Sir John opposed her desire in this particular. And had it not been for a hope which never abandoned her altogether (though it flickered low at times), and for Prince Cesare de' Barletti, she would, she told herself, have found the retain of the sectional life intelerable. ennui or her secluded life intolerable

Sir John encouraged Barletti to come. If he had not desired Barletti's presence at the villa, Sir John would unquestionably have been restrained by no delicacy from making his senti-ments manifest.

There were several causes which made our John willing to receive Barletti. The first was, that the Neapolitan amused him, played picquet fairly well (in truth, he could play much better than his host, but had not and temper enough never to hint at the fact), and brought up from never to hint at the fact), and brought up from There were several causes which made Sir never to hint at the fact), and brought up from the city little gossiping stories which Sir John the city little gossiping stories which Sir John relished. The second was, that Veronica was either pleasantly gay and good-tempered under the excitement of the stranger's presence, or, if she were otherwise, vented the haughty self-asserting humor of the hoar on Barletti, whom she treated at times with absolute insolence. Both these moods of hers were agreeable to Sir John the latter especially so. Then there was the circumstance that Barletti, with all his poverty and plancy, was undoubtedly the scien of an illustrious race. Now Sir John was not the scion of an illustrious race. He would not have openly admitted the fact, but he knew it. And it was neeffably soothing to any irritating doubts which he might occasionally entertain as to his own importance in the world, and as to the supremacy of wealth, to contemplate a penniless prince flattering him for a dinner.

As we are all apt to believe what we wish,

As we are all apt to believe what we wish, Sir John rather overestimated the attractions of his dinners, and the impression that his riches made on Bar Early in October Sir John announced his inrearry in October Sir John amounced his in-tention of going to Naples for the winter. Ve-runics was genuinely delighted at the news. But, with a petty perversity which she some-times indulged in toward Sir John, she received it very coldly. He had made her summer pass in inexpressible boredom; and she was resolved not to gratify him by any too great readiness to be amused, the moment it suited him to amuse

"We shall be able to have a little gayety and soriety in Naples," said Sir John. "You de-serve some compensation, poverina, for the dull-

This provoked Veronica, and she answered without deigning to turn her eyes toward him : "I doubt the power of Naples to give me compensation.

Sir John happened to be in a good temper.

His dinner had been varied, savory, and digustthic—three conditions not often combined—and he hamoved her with an exasperating estentation. of furbearance.
"Michante! Did you in truth find the summer spent alone with me so dull?

"Yery!"
"Ha! I wonder, then, that you do not show more pleasure at the prospect of a change."
"I see no prospect of a change."
The words were barely uttered before she repeated them. Sir John's good temper, too roughly strained, had snopped. It was at all times brittle and entrustworthy.

He growled out an inerticulate onth. It was not the first she had heard from his line addressed to herself.

"What a fool I am?" she thought; "I never take advantage of his good moods, could but command myself!"

The truth was, that his "good moods" were almost the only moments in which she was not alraid of him. And the moments in which she was not afraid of him tempted her to revenge heared for her missions. horself for her subjection at most other times. There were other moments when, being roused to possissente anger, she lost fear and prudence. But such moments were still race in her inter-course wish the man whom she had made the moster of her fate. She came and knelt beside him, resting her hand on his as it hung over the cushioned arm of his chair,

"What will you do for me at Naples?" she nsked, coaxingly.

He was about to unswer—not, as it seemed by his frowning brow and sneering smile, very gra-ciously — when his face changed, he made a strange inarticulate sound, and leaned back, gasping, in his chair.

Verenica flew to the bell to summon assistance, then she lathed his forebead with some perfume from a bottle that stood near at hand, and fanned him with her handkerchief. "What is it? What is the matter?" she kept asking, wildly. She reiterated her questions when Paul came into the room. Paul wasted no time in reassuring her. With I'sel wasted to time in reasouring her. With a swiftness very surprising and unexpected in one whose movements were habitually so deliberate, he loosened his master's cravat. Then he ran to Sir John's bedroom and returned with a traveling flask, from which he poured a few drope of brandy down his master's throat.

When he had done so, he answered Veronica as calmly as though she had that instant put some ordinary question to him.

"A feature would! He will be have now as calmly as though she had that instant put some ordinary question to him.

"A faintness, miladi. He will be better now.
It is passing."

Veronica stood by, scared and trembling.
Paul istched some cold water, and threw it sharply on his master's checks and forehead.

"Shall I not call some of the other servants?" said Veronica, clasping and unclasping her hands nervously. "Some one must be sent for a doc-tor."

tor."

"Better not, just yet. We shall hear what he says. He is coming to himself."

Sir John did revive. Some semblance of life returned to his face, which had grown strangely

His eyes fell on Veronica, and he turned them away with a look of impationce.

"What is it?" she cried, bending over him.
"Can you not speak to me?"

"Can you not speak to me?"
Sir John feebly tried to raise his handkerchief to his mouth, and failed. He looked appealingly at Paul, who immediately wiped the water from his master's face, in a steady matter-of-course way. Still Sir John did not speak.
Paul watched him intently; and at last said to Veronica: "You had better go away, miladi.
I shall call Ansano by-and-by, and help Sir John to his room. He will be down and repose for an hour or so, and then he will be quite well.

an hour or so, and then he will be quite well again. The beat made him faint."

During this speech Paul kept his eye fixed on his master's face, and seemed to read in it approval and confirmation of his words; for he added, almost instantly: "Yes, yes; that is it. The heat made him faint. It is nothing; and yon had better go away, miladi."

Veronica obeyed in bewilderment. She was glad to escape from the room; and yet she somethat resented being sent away what resented being sent away.

She was walking quickly along the corridor that led to her own room, when she heard a voice close behind her: "Miladi!"

Her heart leaped at the suddenness of the ound, and she turned round in terror. It was "Pardon, miladi. I fear I startled you. The matting is so soft, it deadens footsteps. I only wanted to say that Sir John much wishes that the other domestics should not be told of his little indisposition. He dislikes a fuse, he says,

"Oh! he has spoken to you, then! How is

"Sir John is much better, miledi. The best

"Sir John is much better, miladi. The heat made him faint. It is nothing."

Vercoics sat down in her boudoir, and tried to think steadily of what had just happened. She did not believe that it had been a more fainting fit. There had been a strange look in Sir John's face, unlike any thing she had ever seen before. Was he very ill? Was he going to dis?

She rose and moved restleasly about the room Then she stopped suddenly, and reflected that Paul had shown no apprehension. Paul had even recommended that no doctor should be sent for. Paul knew Sir John well. He must know Monther there were danger or not!

If—oh, if Sir John were going to die!

Her knees shook under her, and she threw herself on to a sofa. She lay there, stresched as full length, with her face buried in the cushions; her hair pushed aside, and her hands covering her ears, as though to shut out some terribi one derivation of a heavy door echoed through the house, and for many minutes after the last reverberation had died away her heart beat with drendful rapidity, and she waited in the tremor of suspense and fear, expecting to be summoned by Paul's voice. No one came. The afternoon was waning, and at last she heard one of the women-servants singing a Tuscan love-song, as she moved about the house at her work. That was a reassuring sound. Veronica sat up, feeling dizzy and half blind as she faced the There were no tears on her face, but it was deadly pale, except one crimson streak where she had pressed her cheek against the cushion. Her first act was to lock the door which communicated with the corridor. There was another door in the bondoir leading to her bedchamber, to which there was no other acbederamber, to which there was no other ac-cess. Then she went to the looking-glass and contemplated herself.

"What a gloss I look!" she thought, "and how I have been tormenting myself! And per-haps for nothing, after all!"

She hesitated for a moment, but finally took a book from the table, unlocked the door of the bondoir, rang the bell, and returned to the softs.

"Miladi rang?" said her maid, coming to the door. Veronica had taught all the servants to door. Veronica h Yes. What o'clock is it? I shall not dress for dinner. I fell askeep over my book, and have made my head ache. Get me some cau de cologne. Put on my peignoir, and shut out that glare. How red the sunset is! You must brush my hair in the dark as well as you can.

I can not bear the light."

It was not dark when the maid had closed the persiennes, but it was dim. Veronica's white wrapper gleamed in the twilight. The maid stood patiently brushing out her mistress' thick tresses in silence.

"Did you ever faint, Beppins?" asked her

"Faint? No, miladi."
"You have seen people in fainting fits, per-

Yes; I saw a girl once, who was in a dead

"There is no danger in them, of course?"

"Who knows!" answered Beppins, with an expressive shrug.

"What made the girl you saw faint?"

"Hunger, miledi."

"Hunger!"

"Yes. Her dame" had been a Garibaldino, and be got wounded in the ware; and when he came back to Florence, weak and sickly, he could get no work, and his people were too poor to help him, so Gigia—she was a dress-maker's could get no work, and his people were too poor to help him, so Gigia—she was a dress-maker's apprentice—kept him, and gave him nearly all her food. And one day, when she was going to her work, she turned giddy, and fell down in the street, and they took her to a hospital, and the doctor said she had not had enough to eat; and that that was all that was the matter with er."

"How dreadful! It must be awful to be so

"Eh, che vaole? She couldn't have loved him more if she had been rich! And she saved his life, and that was a conschaione di Dio." "Sir John's love, miladi, and will you excuse him from coming into the dining-room? He will have the honor of joining you in the evening afterward."

Paul said these words from the boudoir, holding the door that communicated with the room in his hand.

"How is Sir John?" asked Veronica, in En-

"Sir John has reposed, miladi, and is quite well, only a little fatigued with the heat." "I shall not come down to dinner. Tell them to serve it in the little blue room next my bou-

"Yes, miladi. Then I shall tell the signor principe that miladi does not receive this evening?"

Very less was embeldered by the fact that Veronics was embeldened by the fact that, while Paul's face could be seen illumined by the setting sun, whose light streamed into the bou-doir, her own face was in shadow. She had sometimes been vexed with herself for being in sometimes been vexed with herself for being in a kind of awe under Paul's grave glance, and for having allowed more than one caprice and manifestation of willfulness to be chacked by its silent influence. Now she resolved to consult her own will and pleasure, and she threw a lit-tle superfluous asperity into the voice in which the appropried.

she answered: "No; certainly not! I have given you no such directions."

"Miladi wishes to have the dinner served for two in the blue room?"

"Yes. No! I will dine in the dining-saloon, and—is the prince here?"
"The signor principe is under the west loggia, smoking a cigar."

"Have you mentioned to him that Sir John was—was not well?"
"Sir John does not choose me to say so, miladi.

"That will do. You will have a cover laid for the prince. I shall try to persuade him to stay to amuse and cheer Sir John a listle this

After all, she had not succeeded in simply is-suing her commands without apology or expla-nation to Paul.

The latter bowed and withdrew. Veronica waited until his footsteps had died away in the corridor; then she said, putting her hand to her furchead with the gesture of one struck with a sudden remembrance; "Ch, I rgot to give Paul a message for Sir John! "Shall I go, miladi?" asked Beppina. "No, never mind. I will go myself. Give me a lace searf, or something to wrap over my head. That will do. Lay out a dinner dress— any thing light and cool. I shall return in a minute Veronica passed through her boudoir and de-scended the staircase leading to Sir John's apart-ments, which were on the ground-foor. Ar-rived at the basement story, however, she en-tered one of the long suit of reception-rooms which occupied the whole west side of the villa; opened a glass door, and stepped out into the loggia. Cesare de Barietti was smoking in the loggis, as Paul had said. As soon as he per-ceived Veronica, he threw away his cigar and advanced toward her, has in hand.

THE PARRICIDE.

A LEGEND OF THE ROMAGNA.

L-THE SENTENCE.

"Ha is guilty, beyond all doubt!" The deep voice of the new Baron di Cruvelli rang eternly through the silent hall. The pale youth in the custody of the guards locked anxiously around, but found no friend.

but found no friend.

"He is guilty," continued the Baron. "I tremble—I shadder to assign so dread a crime, and so fearful a punishment to one so near and dear. But the law must have its course, and justice must be done.

A low marmar of assent arose from the audience.

It was in the principal hall of the Castello di Cruvelli. Six days before the late Baron had been found dead in his bed. Evident marks of poison were about him. His son had been the only one seen about the room. The Baron's brother had charged him with the murder, arrested him, thrown him into the lowest dungeon, and vowed vengeance on him. He had then as-sumed the title and power of Baron di Cruvelli, and his first act had been the trial and condemnation of his nephew.

* Sweet-heart.

"Parricide!" cried the Baron, in an awful voice. "Look at me. What have you to say voice. "Look at me. What have you to say for yourself?"

"Wresch!" cried the youth. "Do you dare to look me in the face? Murderer of my father, do you dare to murder the son also? Where is my mother? Have you slain het too?"

"Wretched boy! You but add to your crimes. Do not try to lessen your guilt by imputing it to me. As to your mother, she has fied, and has escaped for the present from the penishment due for her share in this fool crime."

"Thank God!" cried the youth, ferrently;
"she, at least, is safe from you. For my part you can but kill me. Kill me, then, as you killed my father. But remember this, that there is a time bereafter when he and I and all of us is a time bereafter when he and I and all of us will rise up against you!"

The Baron's eyes blased with fury.

"Fool!" he cried, "every word that you sater only makes your face the worse."

"My fate can not be worse," calmly returned the other. "But oh! can it be possible that among all my father's followers there is not one who will help his can!" who will help his son!"

who will help his son!"

He looked around appealingly over the assembly. But fear rested upon the hearts of those who otherwise might have helped him.

"There is no sympathy for the particide, but there is a terrific punishment," cried the Baron, awagely. "Hear what our laws assign:

"He who is quilty of the foul and unnatural crime shall be inclosed noted in a suck with an crime shall be inclosed naked in a suck with an aps, a cut, a fox, and a serpent; he shall then be thrown headlong from a high cliff into the running water, to the end that the sarth be not political with his blood.' Such, wretched youth, is the doom of the particide, and such shall be your fats. Prepare then for this, for I swear by St. Anthony that ere another hour you shall die."

The young man looked defautly at his tyrant, and was led away by the guards. An hour afterward a number of men were as-

The Baros stood on one side. His attendants, six in number, were near him. They held the young man firmly, so that he could not escape. The tower overlooked a river, which now, swolling with rain, reshed swiftly to the sea.

In a short time four more came up. They irew with them a leathern bag of large dimensions. In this was the horrible collection—a serpent, a fex, a cat, and an ape. At a sign from the Baron the attendants drew the youth toward the sack.

The others held it partly open.

The young man was thrust in.
There was a fearful turnult inside. The stern guards themselves averted their eyes.

"Away with him!" cried the Baron, in a oarse voice.

In another instant the bag was hurled from the ower, and falling like lightning it spinshed luse the river below.

"Any way, he's got one chance," muttered a guardsman between his teeth; "I gave him my kuife!"

II .- ESCAPE.

A raw hundred yards below the Castello di Cruvelli there was a thick-grown copen which projected into the river. Here, not long after the scene just narrated, a young man had con-cealed himself. He was naked. Blood issued from different wounds, and in his hand he held Here, concealed from view, he looked out upon the world around him. The vast pile of the Castello di Cruvelli arose not far away, built upon a high bank of the river which forms nation of a projecting spur from the Apen-At its base a little collection of houses nines. At its base a little collection of houses was clustered. In the distance the wide Roman Campagna spread away.

Evening was now coming rapidly on, and soon the sun sank down below the western horizon. Then the young man left his lurking-place, and stole on cautiously toward the castle. Darkness stole on cautiously toward the castle. Darkness soon covered the whole land, and be reached the little hamlet unobserved. One of the cottages stood a little spart from the others and outside the limits of the hamlet. There were voices within. He knocked at the door. Soon steps were heard, and a man appeared.

"Who is there?" said be, as he opened the door and peered out into the dark.

"An unfortunate," said the other, "who has been robbed by brigands, and stripped even of his clothes. Have you an old coat to spare, so that I may conceal my nakedness?"
"Brigands!" gaid the other. "prove death!

that I may conceat my makedness?"

"Brigands!" said the other; "poor devil! I think I may promise you a coat, though it is a ragged one. Wait a moment."

The man went in, and soon returned with several articles of clothing, coarse but serviceable, and the young man received them and put them on with ferrent expressions of gratitude.

"Come in, friend," said the cottager, at last.
"No." said the other: "do you come out: 1

"No," said the other; "do you come out; I have a word to say to you."

"Ah!" said the other, cautiously; "can you not say it here?"

"Do not fear; It is something which I do not wish to be overheard."

After some hesitation the cottager stepped out and went off to a little distance with the other.

"Well, what is it that you have to say?"
"Do you know me?"
"No."

The state of the s

"Do you recognize my voice, Maffeo?"
"Holy Saints!" cried the other, in a voice of rror. "Who are you? What is it that you ant with me?"

"Maffeo, is this your fidelity?"
"Are you not dead, then? Oh, my dear master?" cried Maffeo, incredulous at this wonder.

"God has delivered me," said the other, sol-elmoly, "by almost a miracle."

"But you were thrown into the river," said the other, wonderingly.

"But you were thrown into the river," said the other, wonderingly.

"Ay, but I had a knife, and I cut the bag. I am safe. I am here. I will be avenged."

"And I will lay down my life for you, my lorl and master," cried Maffeo, kneeding down and kissing the hand of the young man.

"How are the peasantry? "Are they faithful to me, or traitors?"

"Exceptions."

"Faithful, my lord, to your father's memory and to you. They mourn over your fate, and exercise burderer."

"The servants in the house are false."
"No, my lord; most of them would gladly have saved your life. But they were afraid. They could only pity you in silence, and pray to Heaven to avenge you."

"I must let them know that I am alive "Then there is no time to lose," said Maffee, in an altered voice.

"What do you mean?" cried the young Baron, startled at the change in his tone.

Maffeo was silent for a moment.
"Tell me," urged the other, "Do you think, after what I have suffered, that there is any thing h I can not bear?"

Maffeo besitated

"Tell," said the other, vehemently.
"They have captured the Countess."
"My mother!" exclaimed the other, in a dospairing voice.

Maffee was silent.

"No time is to be lost. I must save her or perish. If I can not save her, then I will die. Doath will then be better than life. Maffeo, Death will then be besser track and you must stand by me."
"Until death," said Maffeo, fervently; and he kissed his master's hand.
"It is well," said the young Baron.

III .- THE EXECUTION

YES, the Baroness di Cravelli had indeed been captured. Flying for her life from the marderer of her husband, she had been pitilessly pursued; and the pursuit was too close for her to escape. They had seized her at a piace which was three days journey from the eastle, and brought her back on the very evening of the day when her son had been thrown over the battlements.

The Baroness had never dreamed that such a nate could possibly be in stees for her son. The Barone, who was incapable either of pity or remores, received her with a malignant smile, and told her of her son's fate. The horror of this told her of her son's fate. The horror of this overwhelmed her, and she fell senseless to the ground.

"Carry ber away and restore her," said the

The attendants carried her away, pityingly. They were under the power of the Baron, and dared not refuse. Yet there were few in that castle who would not have gladly raised their hands against the tyrant, if only some leader could have appeared and given the word. They enticipated the fate which was in store for their love, and gentle mistreas, and shuddered.

On the following day the Baron summoned his prisoner before his mock tribunal, and subjected her to a cruel examination. He charged upon her the guilt of her hasband's death, informed her that her son had justly been punished, according to law, for sharing in her trime, and told her that her sex alone saved her from a similar fate. He told her that he would be merciful, and, instead of dooming her to a death like his, he would allow her a milder fate: She should only be behended.

The Baroness was too much overwhelmed by

The Baroness was too much overwhelmed by

The haroness was no much overwheathed by her despire to utter a word.

She stood up, with her pale face and mournful eyes, and looked all around upon those who were present. The faces of the servants were around persent. The faces of the servanes were around her. They looked at her with glances full of deepest sympathy. A low marmur was heard among them. The Baron silenced it with a ter-rible frown. And the Baroness was led away

Her execution was to take place on the morning of the following day.

The morning came.

In the court-yard there was a block fixed, which had been placed there on the preceding night. The executioner stood there waiting, with his axe. He was one who had presented himself on the previous day, with high recommendations from the Duke of Ferrars. The Baron was delighted to receive so accomplished a performer. a performer.

he said, he never was allowed to take off, on ac he said, he never was allowed to take off, on ac-count of a religious vow. At this time he took his station by the block, and waterd. Soon the condemned made her appearance. She was accompanied by a priest. She took her stand near the block, while the priest whis-pared a few words to her. Her eyes were down-cast, but there was a flush on her cheek which did not look like the face of death. did not look like the fear of death.

Soon the Baron came forth, and all the servitors in the castle followed. A large crowd stood all around. The Baron advanced close to the block. The executioner stood motionless, pois-ing his glittering axe.

"Come, hasten," said the Baron; "I want

"Come, hastes," said the Baron; "I want my breakfast, and you are delaying me." The Baroness advanced to the block. The Baron looked at her with a smile of triumph, which he did not care to conceal, The Baroness knelt down.

The executioner stooped and whispered a few words in her ear. Again the red flash glowed on her cheeks. She said nothing, but laid her

M.

The executioner lifted his axe, and looked at

TO THE SECURITY OF A SECURITY

"All right. Strike!" said the Baron.

The executioner whirled the ponderous axe around like lightning, and flung its keen edge full against the Baron's neck. So tremendous was the blow, and so well simed, that the Baron's head, severed from the body, went spinning off through the air, the blood spouted up from the neck, the lifeless body sank down.

The executioner tore off his mask, and rushed up to the Baroness. The servitors stood paralyzed.

"Caitiffs!" he cried, "I am your lord; I am the Baron di Cruvelli

They recognized the face of the son of the murdered Baron. The priest toro off his roles, and revealed the form and features of Maffeo.

For a moment there was bewilderment. Then a load shout rent the air. Not one refused to join in that show

Take this carcass," said the young Baron, after he had embraced his mother, who was now leaning, trembling and half fainting with joy, on his arm—" take this carcass, and bury it outside. Let no priest say prayers over it. Let it be ac-

So the young Baron arenged his wrongs.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Gavesstance is the name of a certain Swedish pro-tessor, who, if his own account may be credited, has intely made a discovery which bide fair to confer in-calculable benefits upon the human race. By a secret process he can put a living surport to steep, readering it rigid as if carved from marble, yet the vital spark may be reanizabled at any moment. Encouraged by his sources, the Professor is desirous of experiment-ing upon a higher order of living creatures, and has applied to the Swedish Government for the loss of a condemned criminal, engaging to transform bin: into a caryatides for the façade of the Stockholm Town Ball for two years, and to restore him to life and mo-tion at the end of that time! Supposing the authori-ties of Sweden accords to this proposal, and supposing the experiment is successful, what wonderful amelior-ations might be introduced into our existence! How Gavesnasco is the name of a certain Swedish pro ations might be introduced into our existence! How allons might be introduced into our existence! How convenient it would be to avoid all the difficulties of life by suddenly transforming one's self into a block of store for an indefinite period! If a man has but little money he can put it out at compound inter-est, and take a Grusselbachian map until a sufficient fortune is accumulated. Divorce courts could be about their, for it as illusaction counts over all one of ischaid, for if an ill-associad couple quarrel, one of them can agree to undergo the Grasselbachian process until the other dies a natural death, and afterward be brought back to light. In short, new uses for such a system would be discovered every day—the great point being that care must be exercised to arrange that the restriction bound was constant beautiful to restrict the restriction about yet constant in range that the petrifaction should not continue ion

Captain Allen, of the Swemak Bride, which recently arrived at this port, has seen the Great Sea-Serpent—a monater whose existence can now no longer be de-aled. It was about two hundred miles off Delaware nied. It was about two hundred miles off Delaware Bay, on the edge of the 6th Stream, in latitude about 18 and longitude 18, that the sea-serpent appeared. The day was dark and cloudy, but the water calm. The creature was about twenty-five feet to length, and proportionately thick; its bead was very large and flat, while at each side, on the extreme edge, were set two bright, scintillating eyes, which looked dangerous and wicked. Its back was covered with large scales, like the crocodile, about three luches in length, which booked together and formed an impenetrable scales, like the erocodile, about three loches in length, which booked together and formed an impenetrable armor. Its belly was of a taway-yellow color, and altogether hideous. It was accompanied by a smaller specimen of its own species, only a few feet in length, but in shape and color closely resembling the large cos. The monster was about four feet from the vessel, and distinctly seen. The captain gave orders to have a boat lowered, and to stack it; but suddenly the presence of the vessel seemed to alarm it, and it dropped into the ocean, head downward.

It is asserted that there is not such a city in the world as London for vagrancy and vagaboudism of the worst kind, despite the fact that there are 1000 po-lice in the metropolitan district. Bestdes the force for prevention, the work-houses on the West District Turnish relief to 18,000 persons. The North District provides for 54,520 persons. The Central District rowsides for 18,127 persons. The Central District rowsides for 18,127 persons. furnish reflet to 18,000 persons. The North District provides for 18,197 persons. The Central District provides for 19,197 persons. Twenty-eight thousand, seven handred and thirteen persons are cared for in the East District, and in the Southern District 38,407 persons. The result is a total of 198,890 men, wemen, and children, occupants of the union work-houses of the metropolis of London, with a popula-tion of less than three and a half millions. Besides this number, there are thousands of casuals who re-ceive lodgings in the work-houses; and outside this fearful aggregate there are reaming in and about London at least 15,000 vagnants who do not frequent the work-houses from various reasons, and consequent-ly have to "bunk out," as it is called in New York.

The peirifaction theory concerning the Onondays giant has exploded. Professors and learned men. who ought to know about such matters, say it is too absent to talk about; skillful sculptors detect the tools of their craft, and those tools not very ancient either. In fact, although at first it was appreciated ones, either. In fact, although at first It was suggested that the mouster might be perhaps three hundred years old, now Dv. Soyuton counts his possible existence by days, making the gypeum giant—perhaps—outly a little more than a year old '—which is quite a difference.

A "big thing" has been discovered in Dupage County, Illinots, which is prenounced no swindle. The bones are genetics, belonging to a mastuden or some huge creature of kindred typs, which must have, been accretible like sixteen feet high and twenty-long. These rails were discovered by a farmer while digging a well, and have created quite an excitement. Another remarkable flowed sheleton has been found to Mariposa County. California. that of a measurement.

in Mariposa County, California—that of a monstrous animal twenty-six feet long; a borned creature it was with a skull which weight five hundred pounds. What s particularly curious is, that surrous on when found, there were forty or fifty apparently hamen skulls! Was the monster carnivorous?

An excursion to the Elephantine issand, where stands the ancient Nilometer, bulls many centuries before Christ's birth, has been proposed by the Vice-roy of Egypt. The Nilometer has not been visited be-fore since 1798. It consists of some gigantic calcareous blocks on the shores of the river Nile near the tropic of Cancer. The ancient Egyptians built it to mark the rise and fall of the Nile, and to know when to avert an invadation. The island on which it stands is uninhab-introdution. The island on which it stands is cathinab-lied; but, strange to say, is almost a paradise, gieri-ous with tropion becauty.

Jenny Lind recently made her public appearance be-fore a large andience at Exeter Hall, London. She re-ceived a warm reception, and surprised her hearers by the freshness and displayed. She made her first dibut in London in May, 1847; and that, after twenty-two years, she should be able to captivate a critical audi-cuce by her vocal powers is truly wonderful.

One immediate result of Enginiers expedition to Egypt was the invention of a new color—the "Waters of the Nile"—a changeable, wavering, glittering, sheep green. The shade is much beautiful in rich silk. A Particla Maddams has invented a novel get of button to be worn with a custome of this color, and they are regarded as a cleri-drouve of the jewslers' art. They are regarded as a cleri-drouve of the jewslers' art. represent a whole family of little trocodiles, with staly and elastic backs and movable tails; the largest of the set is not more than a continetre in length, and they diminish in size as they approach the throat. As e-creativity in tolicitie is predicted to be the style during the coming scanes, other novelties besides Keuz du Nii and crocodile buttons may be expected.

A couple of American gentlemen did a cool thing not long since at Baden-Baden. They were disting with two Parisian ladies at an hotel, when a Russian prince, who, perhaps, wished to pick a quarrel, purchased two handscene beoquets and sent them to the ladies with his compliments. The Americans merely glanced over to his table, howed cordially, and sent him back, by the waiter, two Napoleons. He was so much chaptined that he left the room.

The new and magnificent has been the contract of t

The new and magnificent building of the Young Men's Christian Association on Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street was dedicated on the evening of December 2. The large half was densely crowded with an intelligent and enthusiastic andience; and on the platform appeared many of the most distinguished men of our State and nation. The szerciese, consisting of reading the Scriptures, dedicatory hymra and addresses, were exceedingly interesting Ginlia Grisi, who died last week in Berlin at the Ginha Grisi, who died last week in Berlin at the age of fifty-server, was a native of Milan. Her spicodid voice was not early developed, her first public appearance being when she was seventeen; and though she attracted some attention at that time, it was not still three years later that she won a real triumph at Milan in her representation of "Norma." Her wonderful personation of the character of Norma gave her the title of "Diva." He lived in retirement many many before her death. years before her death.

The days of fair hair are about to be numbered. Report whispers that those who rule in the realms of fashion have resolved to suppress it, and brown hair is to be recalled from banishment. The Egyptian lo-tins, it is said, will be the favorite flower for dressing the hair; but the lotus is becoming to dark persons only—which will be a said perplexity to the fair.

The "Grand Army of the Republic"—an extended organization of the officers and soldiers of our late army—has adopted the following plan for securing truthful details of the history of the Rebellion. At truing details of the history of the Rebellion. At each meeting of the various "Posts" a commide is an-pointed to prepare a paper, to be read at the next meeting, containing reminiscences of the war. These are to be founded on facts and occurrences which came under the personal observation of the writer. These papers are to be filed, and in course of time transmitted to Head-quarters, and preserved as the transmitted to Head-quarters, and preserved as the "Grand Army Papers."

By this method officers and privates can each tell his own story, furnishing reliable histories of special battles, incidents in camp life, eketches of comrades who fell in action, and descriptions of specific tours of duty. It is anticipated that this plan will result in securing valuable additions to the history of the great state of the control of the great state civil war.

The Alaska Times sends forth an earnest appeal on The Alasks Trees sends forth an earnest appeal on behalf of the Russian and Alcutian oppolation of that territory. It states that the people are in a state of great destitution, induced largely from the disruption of the Russian Fur Company, from which many de-rived their support, directly or indirectly. Other changes have come in with the treaty, which have deprived citizens of their means of support. And the Trees calls upon the Government to cease to consider the country worthless, but to do its day toward in.

Chicago is about to have a new tunnel built under Chicago he about to have a new tunnel brilt under the Chicago River for the purpose of connecting the two divisions of the city. The tunnel is to consist of three passage-ways. The east one for foot-passengers, and the other two for horses, and vehicles drawn by horses. The distance across the river at La Salie Street, where the central line of the tunnel is to be piaced, is three hundred feet. The open approaches to the tunnel on each side are to be paved with wooden to the tunnel on each side are to be pared with wooden block pavement. The total cost of this work is sett-mated to be upward of $475,000.

The notorious Wild Man of Steuben County has been translated to another sphere of action. It is asserted by an exchange, whose veracity we dare not doubt, that he "climbed into a tall sycamore, pulled the tree up after him, and that was the last that any body saw of him."

There are three wrecking companies in New York city, which were organized for the purpose of rendercity, which were organized for the purpose of reader-ing assistance to vessels arbore on the rocks and reefs ing assistance to vessels arbore on the rocks and reefs of our creat, or otherwise disabled. They are the Athantic Submarine Wrecking Company, the Coast Wrecking Company, and the Keptane Submarine Wrecking Company. They are constantly prepared for any contingency Wrecking steames are fitted out for a ten days' cruise, and are particulty equipped with all necessary wrecking materials. Bering the two years from October 1, 1987, to October 1, 1989, eighty-six vessels were wrecked in the immediate vicinity of this city. Their entire values was nearly seven milition dollars. A large propertion of this seven million dollars. A large properties of this property was saved by the New York wrecking companies, who were also instrumental in reguring about panies, who were also instrumental in reaching about three thousand persons from drowning.

To enumerate all the articles which the intelligent grocer can add to his ground codies would be an act beyond human capabilities. But what halo be done now that there is a large manufactory in the south aide of the Thames where coffee is manufactorized in the barry? Another grocers' trick is developed in the paper with which some of them are secured of wrapping up the articles in which they deal diagar-bags that are weighed with the sugar afferd actionable instance of this. An enterprising individual after using pounded stone in the manufactory of his piner pulp, pounded stone is the manufacture of his paper pu has taken out a patent for making these bags of is

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, FIFTH AVENUE, BETWEEN FIFTIETH AND FIFTY-FIRST STREETS, NEW YORK,-[SEE PAGE 808.]

REV. JOHN LANAHAN .-- (PHOT. BY ROCKWOOD, BROADWAY, NEW YORK.)

THE REV. JOHN LANAHAN, D.D.

THE Rev. JOHN LANAHAM, one of the "Book The Rev. John Lanaran, one of the "Book Agents" in charge of the Methodist Publishing House in this city, is a Virginian by birth, though of Irish ancestry. In the year 1838, being then a youth of eighteen years, he joined the "Old Baltimore Conference," so famous inthe annals of the Methodist itinerancy. His ministerial life has been spent mostly in Washington, Georgetown, Alexandria, Baltimore, and the adjacent-districts. This region, from the year 1845 until the break-ing out of the late civil war, comprised the de-batable ground between the Northern and South-em Methodist Churches, known as "the border." It was, in its way, a battle-ground. Harassed by the popular excitements which in the Slave States accompanied the progress of the interminable slavery controversy, the border preachers experienced all the bitterness of the ecclesiastical strife which preceded the contest between armed forces. Dr. Lananas's life during this period forces. Dr. Lanahan's life during this period called for the atmost firmness and decision, and gave these traits, which are predominant in him, constant exercise. Upon the breaking out of the war the prenchers of the "border" were subjected to trials of still greater severity. Some of them, with their congregations, went over to the South, others adhering to the National cause. Congregations, families, and social circles were divided without hope of reconciliation. In this crisis Dr. Lanahan soon became conspicuous as an unflinching patriot. During all the war his an unflinching patriot. During all the war his relations with the government were those of a trusted adviser. It has been his good fortune repeatedly to rements for his services to the national cause.

At the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which met in Chicago, May 1, 1868, Dr. LANAHAN Was, quite unexpectedly to himself, elected Second or Assistant Book elected Second or Assistant Book Agent. The Publishing House, of which the agents have charge, wields a capital of nearly $700,-000, publishes a large list of per-riodicals, besides supplying the Church with denominational books. In this position Dr. Lanaban's habits of close ob-servative smalled him to detect LAXBRAN'S hibbts of close ob-servation enabled him to detect imperfect business methods; his investigations led him, step by step, to the discovery of the "great mismanagement" and "serious losses" which have ex-cited a painful interest in the public mind.

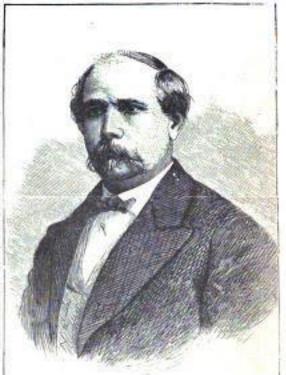

As a uneacher De Laxanax

As a preacher Dr. Lanahan is carnest, and at times highly impassioned. As an administra-tive officer he is remarkable for his unswerving integrity and his iron-nerved adherence to the decisions of his judgment. A ster-ling patriot, a faithful minister, he has deserved well of his Church and his country.

GENERAL ALCORN.

GENERAL ALCORN.

GENERAL J. L. ALCORN, Governor-elect of Mississippi, whose portrait will be found on this page, was born in 1816, in what was then the Territory of Illinois. At an early age he entered college, but remained there only a few terms, leaving his studies to enter upon active life as deputy to his uncle, the sheriff of Livingston County, Kentucky. He subsequently became sheriff, and was afterward elected by the Whigs to the Lower House of the State Logislature. In 1846 he removed, with his family, to Mississippi, and settled in Coahoena County, where he has since resided. Here he commenced the panetice of law. He was soon afterward elected to the State Logislature; and at the same time was chosen by the Whigs in his old district to represent them in the Legislature of Kentucky. He was a member of the Mississippi Legislature for twenty years. Strongly opposed to secession, he was cleared to the Convention of 1801 as a line. twenty years. Strongly opposed to soccession, he was elected to the Convention of 1861 as a Unionist; but finding his efforts to prevent the seecssion of the State unarmiling, he cast in his fortunes with the South, and was appointed a fortunes with the South, and was appointed a Brigadier-General. After serving some time in the field, he retired from active duty, and was elected to the State Legislature, where he strong ly opposed the policy advocated by the more desperate leaders of the rebellion. At great present irisk he protested against the law exempting slaveholders from service in the Confederate army, and declared the wholesale conscription measures referred throughout the Southern tion measures enforced throughout the Southern States to be a confession of failure.

GEN. J. L. ALCORN, GOVERNOR-ELECT OF MISSISSIPPI. [PROTOGRAPHED BY GERNEY, NEW YORK.]

On the close of the war General ALCORN was elected to the United States Senate, but was not allowed to take his seat. He has since identified himself with the Depublican party of his State, and has recently been elected Governor by a large majority. a large majority.

THE FIRST COTTON-GIN .- DRAWN BY WILLIAM L. SHEPPARD .- [SEE PAGE 814.]

FIRST USE OF THE COTTON-GIN.

Our engraving on page 813 represents the primitive cotton-gin, which preceded the saw-gin invented by Eus Warrsey toward the close of the last century. This simple contrivance consisted of two cylinders resolving in opposite directions, which admitted the fibre readily but prerections, which admitted the nore readily but pre-vented the passage of the seed and larger "trash," but not so thoroughly cleaning the cotton as Warrway's machine. The scene represented by our artist is the introduction of the gin on a plantation, amidst the excited curiosity of the negroes, who see in the machine a welcome re-lief from the inhorious process of cleaning the cotton he hand. cotton by hand,

Arrantion is directed to the advertisement of Tanners & Co., in this paper, of the Eight per Cent. Gold Bonds of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Co., which speaks for itself. These bonds are also for sale by Messrs. Converse & Co.—[Con.]

A Commerce on New Year's Pennery.—A monthly or a weakly publication for young people makes size of the most acceptable presents that can be given dering the holdings, and for this purpose the Yearn's Consequence of Baston, is admirably adapted. It will make its appearance new and fresh with each accreding weak, is always sprightly, entertaining and practical. Some of the most brilliant writers in the country contribute to its columns.—[Cons.]

Custress Hause are Part, Sons Live, &c., cared at cace by the new of Heavesa's Computer for with Algorithm. It keeps the hands suft in the collect weather. See that you got the genuine. Soid by Paragleta. Price 25 cents per loss. Sond by racid on receipt of 50 cents.—Heavesa & Co., New York.

Is your hair is cossing out or turning gray, do not moreone over a misfortane you can as easily awar. Aven's Hara Vinea, will remove the cause of your grief by restering your hair to its manual color, and (herewith your good looks and good nature.—(400s.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TOR BLACK WORMS and PIMPLES F on the PACE, no Pray's Courses; and Pray's Remark. Prepared only by Dr. R. C. Paser, & Bord St., New York. Soil every where.

HOLIDAY GOODS.

No. 652 Broadway.

SWISS WATCHES, of all styles and prices.

PARIS AND GENEVA JEWELRY, FRENCH CLOCKS, BRONZES, MANTEL ORNAMENTS.

FANS, OPERA GLASSES,

MUSICAL BOXES, and a large selection of PARIS AND VIENNA NOVELTIES, well adapted for HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Ve J. MAGNIN, GUEDIN, & CO.,

Importers and Wholesale Dealers. Sole Agents for the NARDIN WATCH.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

AT THE PURNITURE STORE OF G. L. & J. B. KELTY & CO.

861 BROADWAY, Opposite Bond St.

FANCY CHAIRS of every description.
Emerson's PATENT ROCKING CHAIRS, without rickers.

FLOWER and WINDOW STANDS, and Flowers.
Pedestale, Swiss Carved Woods, and Jardineros.

Also, at the Curtain Store, 447 Broadway: LACE CURTAINS, LAMBREQUINS, and all kinds of Curtain Marert is and Trimmings. TABLE and PIANO COVERS, &c.

A FOOL

can not be chested, for no one need buy WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT till they by it, fore of cost, at 1/31 Checham Square, N. Y. A plut soul, fire of express charges, on receipt of $0; or a gallou for $20, double strength.

SANTA CLAUS At 98 Chambers St. Toys, Fancy Goods,

HOLIDAY PRESENTS

For the Million.

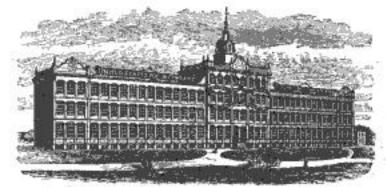

WM. A. BARWOOD.

GREAT OFFER.

HORACE WATERS, No. 451 Breedway, N.T., will dispose of One Hundred Plance, Melodeces, and Organs, of six functions makers, at extremely low-prices for Caseh dursing the Holldays, or will take from 30 to $25 monthly until paid; the sense to let, and real money applied if parchased. New 1-Octave Plance for $45 and appeard; New Organs for $40 and upward, for cash.

RENEW 11 RENEW 111-Rither Hancus's WERKLY, Moswilly, or Bahan, 54, and The Pura-solution of Jorkwan, 25, sent to one address for 55, by S. R. WELLS, 350 Broadway, New York.

$20 A DAY! Business new. Samples and Circu-$20 lars free. J. C. RAND & CO., Biddeford, Me.

the Feet Francisco, and Glass.

WORKS OF THE

UNITED STATES WATCH COMPANY.

(GILES, WALES, & CO.), MARION, N. J.

GILES, WALES, & CO.,

IMPORTERS, MANUFACTURERS, and JOSEERS,

United States Watch Company, 13 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers Watches, Pendant Winders and Key Winders, BOTH NICKEL AND PROSTED MOVEMENTS.

The faset grades all having there pairs Coulcal Pivota, Cap Jeweled, in Gold Settings, and accurately adjusted to Hest, Cold, and Pashion; and all, even in the chespest grades, have the STRAIGHT-LINE Exceptment, with Exposed Pallet Jewels, and Hardened and Tempered Hair Springs; and for one late improvement in STRM-WINDING mechanism, we claim a STRAIGHTH, SIMPLICITY, and SMOOTHNESS hitherto unsattained in any other manefacts re, at bome or abroad.

Constantly on hand, full lines, all slove, in Gold, Silver, Diamond Set, and Magic Cases, Minute Repeaters, Independent 1-4, 1-6 Split and Fty-back Seconds, for taking three different times.

187 Price-Lisis furnished the trade on application, enclosing husiness card. For sale by the trade generally.

Wholesale Warerooms, 13 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK, And GILES, BROTHER, & CO., 142 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

Water No. 1881 - bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherson & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Waith Co., has been carried by me four months; its total variation from mean time being only five seconds per month. P. A. HASEELL, Con. Hadson River R. R.

Waren No. 1117 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherion & Co., Marton, N. J.," manufactured by United States Waith Co., has been carried by me fi-ties mosaite; its total variation from mean time being only an average of two thirds of a second per day. B. F. PHELPS, Con. N. J. Central E. S.

Waven No. 1837 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherton & Co., Marion, N. J.," meanifactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me chose June, 1867; his total variation from mean time being only free seconds per month. HENRY SMITH, Trees, Pansana R. H., 88 Wall St.

Warren No. 1963 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Athernon & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me 25 term months; its total variation from mean time being only one second per month. WILLARD DEBBY.

Warna No. 1934 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Athernon & Co.," manufactured by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by me six months; its total variation from mean time being only six seconds.

A. L. DENNIS, Fresiden N. J. R. R. T. & T. Co.

Warna No. 1935 — bearing Trade-Mark, "United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by the months; its total variation from mean time being only eight seconds of the country, from New York to Pass'pr Ag't Toledo, Wabash, & Western R. R.
Waren No. 1859 — bearing Trade Mark "Frederic Atherton & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me vix months: Its rotal variation from mone time being only eight seconds per month. Have been traveling through different sections of the country, from New York to Galveston, Terms, and bark, by steamer and railroad,
E. RICE, of Whitney & Rice, 179 Broadway, N. Y.

Boxstay, P.A., Feb. 96, 1869.
Warris No. 1116 — bearing Trade-Mark. "Frederic Attention & Co., Marken, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me three spenties; it visited variation from mean time being only free seconds. ive records during that time. HENRY DE LANCEY, Engineer Phils. & Erie R. R.

Warcu No. 195 — bearing Trade-Mark "Prederit Atheron & Co., Marlog, N. J.," manufactured by United States Warch Co., has been carried by me elevest membrs, its total variation from mean time being only seven seconds in the entire time.

A. H. KING, I Park Place, N. Y.,
Vice-Pres V. Hastic Core Spring Co., N. J. Car Spring and R. Co.

WATCHES

manufactured by the UNITED STATES WATCH CO.,

Of MARION, N. J., retailed and sout C.O. D. to any part of the country by C. A. STEVENS & CO., Jewel-ers, 40 East 14th Street, Union Square, New York.

A Reliable Watch.

"THE UNITED STATES WATCH CO. make the

Send to C. A. STEVENS & CO., 40 East 14th

EXAMINE FOR YOURSELVES,

AND RES IF IT IS NOT DECEMBER. THE DES

BE Call or send for Price-List.

Street, New York, for Price-List.

best Time-keepers."

" Pall of practical and unchal matter.

and we make it good by the numberless communica-tions from practical farmers in all parts of the eventry. Taxas: Weekly, $250; Monthly, $150, per year. Send stamp for specimens and premium if

The Maner Panners gives this unsolicited endorse sent to the NEW ENGLAND FARMER.

NEW YORK OBSERVER. $0 50 PER ANNUM. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

SIDNEY S. MORSE, JR., & CO., SI Para Row, New York.

$290 for first-class mean 7-Octave Planton.

BOYS! The "JERSET BLUE" contains Stories, $290 for first-class mean 7-Octave Planton.

BOYS! The "JERSET BLUE" contains Stories, $200 for first-class mean 7-Octave Planton.

BOYS! The "JERSET BLUE" contains Stories, $200 for first-class mean 7-Octave Planton.

BOYS! The "JERSET BLUE" contains Stories, $200 for first-class mean 7-Octave Planton.

BOYS! The "JERSET BLUE" contains Stories.

EXTREMELY LOW PRICES

UNION ADAMS & CO.

FOR LADIES.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Merino Hosiery, Kid and Castor Gloves.

FOR MISSES.

Patent Merino Vests. Patent Merino Drawers, Patent · Union Dresses, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Cashmere Hosiery, Roman and Fancy Sather.

No. 637 BROADWAY.

Eight per Cent. Gold.

The undersigned, as representatives of the ST, JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COM-PANY, have the honor to offer for sale the

$1,500,000

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

(PAYABLE IN GOLD)

ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD CO.,

Bearing Eight per Cent. Interest in Gold, Pree of Government Tax, secured by a first and only mortgage on the railway, which runs from St. Joseph to Fort Kearney.

Total length of road, 371 miles.

Distance mortgaged, 111 miles: and at the rate of only $13,500 per mile on a completed road, costing to build and equip more than double the amount mortgaged.

Trustee for Bondholders: FARMERS' LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

This line of railroad is the extension of the Hon-North and East, and the St. Louis and St. Joseph Railroad, with its convections South and Best, both lines converging at St. Joseph, and connecting at once with the St. Joseph and Denoer City Railroad, running West, through Ecutern Ecusons, into the heart of Schracks, and connecting with the Union Fuelfic Ballroad at the City of Fort Kearney, making the shortest route k to California and the Pacific States.

These bonds have thirty years to run from August 14, 1809. Payable at maturity, in Gold, in the City of

The interest is payable in Gold on the 18th of Pebreary and August in each year, at the rate of 5 per cent., free of Government Tax, in New York, London, and Prenkfort-on-the-Main, at the holder's option, without notice, and at the following equivalents:

ON $1000 BOND.

In Frankfort-on-the-Main 100 flor.

On $500 Bond, one half these amounts respectively. The Bonds are in denominations of $1000 and $500. They are Coupen Bonds, but may be registered in the owner's name at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Com-pany, and, by the surrender of the Coupons, can be converted into a Registered Bond, with interest payable to the registered owner.

Company's Capital Stock, $10,000,000,

to which nearly $2,000,000 is subscribed and paid up by local subscriptions, which amount has and is being expended on the road,

The Company have $1,000,000 acres of superior land immediately adjoining the line. This was a grant di-rect from the United States Government to aid the Company in their work, and, at the Government price of $2.50 per zero, has a value of $6,000,000, while the ions is only $1,000,000, and is the only drbt against the Congrang.

The issue of $1,500,000 of these Bonds is all that can be issued by the Company.

Bonds cent and packages received free of express charge, and marketable securities converted w commission, to parties investing in these Bonds. We offer these Bonds at the low price of 97% and accross interest in currency, with the reserved right to advance the price without notice.

Pamphlets, maps, and information furnished on ep-

Parties desiring safe and intrative investments should lose no time in investigating these securities.

> W. P. CONVERSE & CO., Commercial Agenta, 54 Pine Street, New York.

TANNER & CO.,

Fiscal Agents, 49 Wall Street, New York.

Having had all the papers and documents relating to the loan examined by competent counsel and pronounced complete and sufficient, and having personally examined the same, which we find regular and perfect, and having had our own engineers examine the road and property, whose reports are satisfactory, we do, with the utmost confidence and satisfaction, recommend the EIGHT PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE GOLD BONDS OF THE ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILBOAD COMPANY ... A SAFE, SURE, AND PROFITABLE IN-VESTMENT, worthy the attetition of capitalists, investors, and others.

> W. P. CONVERSE & CO. TANNER & CO.

S. W. GEERY.

IMPORTER,
Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Teas, Wines, Cipare, and CHOICE PARILY GROCERIES, No. 119 Security,

Formerly I. & W. Geery, No. 117 Broadway, Established in 1804. New York. The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has seen the special business of this house for years. My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquoes in be country.

My stock comprises some of the Country.

Constantly on hand, a full assortment of every thing appertaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Orders will be called for (in the city) every merning, if desired.

Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

Preparatory Medication.

The human system, the most delicate and sensitive of all created things, should be duly prepared to meet the shock occasioned by a sudden change in the tem-perature of the air. Even the solid metals contract and expand under cold and best-so that if man were composed of iron, instead of frail tissues and fibres, circulating finids, and brittle osseons matter, his frame would not be proof against the vicinitudes of climate. As it is, it behooves every one, especially the feeble, to feetify the frail tenement of mortality against the inclemency of the present season. A wholesome, strength-supplying vegetable tonic and alterative is the preparatory medicine required, and among medic-

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS

stand supreme. In a successful career of nearly a quarter of a century, the preparation has never been saled or approached, and its sales are now larger than those of any half dosen articles, purporting to be-long to the same class, that have ever been advertised in this country. As a remedy and preventive of Drurevers and all its complications, it may be said to have lived down overpetition, and to be the standard specific of the Western Bemisphere. A course of this genial restorative at the commencement of Winter is the surest safeguard against all the complaints which are cansed or aggravated by exposure to cold.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING!

Novelty Job Printing Press.

Novelty Job Printing-Press.

The only Low-Priced Press ever invented that will do good printing. Printing can be done as well and as rapidly on the press as on the best that printing offices where artistical power is not used, or for business mes, apothecaries, grocers, country traders, and others who desired to do their own printing, it is equirely without a rival. The first Heising Other Reps. Price of Presses 41.5, $40.822, and $50.860 for full descriptive illustrated circulars, with testimoulais from all parts of the country, and specimens of plats and color printing done in the press, and aportmen sheets of types, borders, onts, rules, &c., to BENJ. O. WOODS, Proprietor, 301 Federal Street, Boston, Mess.

M USEC for HOLEBAY GUPTS.—Boser's Minatard Plans-forte and Vocal Works, singantly bound, situation Plans-forte and Vocal Works, singantly bound, situation Presentation. Besthoren's Somatas, complete, $1; Monart's Sonatas, complete, $1; The Operate Aboun, containing 106 genus from the principal Operas, $6; Drawing-Broom Music-Book, $3; Christenas Rdittor of the Meestah, $2; Mondelmothe's Songe Without Words, complete, $1; Chople's Masurkas and Valors, complete, $1 each; Schomann's Album for the Young, $1 in B. Ball-Rosen Music-Book (10 Bances), $2; The O.d Songs of Ireland (06 Songs), $2; The Genus Song-Book (26 Songs), $2; Opera Song-Book (26 Songs), $2; Opera Song-Book (26 Songs), $2; Opera Song-Book (26 Songs), $2; Consplete Operas, Oratorios, and large collections of Vocal and Plans-forte Music, in Books, $6 cts, each, Alo, just coulty free to any address, Booser & Co.'s Cavaloges or vere survey strategy, the to any address, Booser & Co.'s Cavaloges or vere survey strategy, $2; Co., $44 Brondway, N. Y.

CATARRH.

RELIEF AT ONCE 1-A PERFECT CURE! NORTON'S NEW REMEDT FOR CATARRH AND MODE OF TREATMENT

AND MODE OF TERATMENT

Is an improvement, and a parfection never before attained. It consists of the alternated inhalation of harmless liquids—they are paintess, cleaning, deedering, southing, and powerful curatives. Helief and comfact follow from the first day's use, and a permanent curve in due course of time. It penetrates through the absorbents to the very seat of the disease—breaks it up at its fountain head—emoves all the wretched symptoms, such as pain in the temples, noises in the bead, obstruction of the air passages, offensive discharges from the nostrils, and dropping of moress into the threat, "soid in the head," succeing, districes, loss of memory, dismass of vision, and restores the sense of teste and smedi. It literally extinguishes this losth-some malady in all its forms forwer, and cores the most bopeless case known. Send a Stamp for Paraphlet to GERBIT NORTON, office II Ann St., K.Y.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, $8, $12, $15. Offices, $15, $20, $20, $20, $20 for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

FURNITURE COVERINGS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

Many etyles not sold at any other establishm
Also, CURTAINS of ALL KINDS,
G. L. & J. B. KELTY & CO. 447 BROADWAY, N. Y.

L AMM HORSES.—Contracted feet permanently cared. Corns, Sprang Ences, Thresh, and all diseases arising from contraction. Every Arrae-county should know this severe. $22,000 peld by the War Dep't. Used with great success for more than five years. Recommended and practiced by the sould emband Accounts to the county. Eachone $1 to R. B. YOUATT, Drawer 586, Buffalo, N. Y.

PERFUMERY,

FLAVORING EXTRACTS, and TOILET SCAPS. C. B. WOODWORTH & SON, Rechester, N.Y. S. Y. Office: 335 Broadway, Rosen 18.

THE CELEBRATED

IMITATION GOLD HUNTING WATCHES,

"COLLINS METAL,"

Improved Oroide.

These justly erisberated Watches have been so thee oughly tested during the last four years, and their reputation for time and as imitations of Gold Watches is no well established, as to require no recommendations. Prices:—Horizontal Watches, $15, equal in appearance and for time to Gold Watches worth $100; Full-Jeweled Levers, $25, equal to $150 Gold ones; Full-Jeweled Levers, extra fine and superior finish, $20, equal to $200 Gold ones.

We have just commenced making a very fine American Watch, full jeweled, Patent Lever, chronomeor behance, adjusted to heat, cold, and position, 4½ combes down weight, equal in appearance and for time to a Gold Watch costing $250.

We charge only $250 for these magnificent Watches, All our watches are in hunting cases, gents' and ladies' stees. Chares, Collins Metal, $2 to $5. Also, slikings of Jewelry, equal to gold, at one-tenth the price.

CALIFORNIA DIAMONDS.

We are now making Jeweiry of the California Diamonds. These are real stones of great brilliancy and hardness, and can not be distinguished from the genuine atoms, even by good judges. They are particularly brilliant at night by artificial light, do not scratch or become duit by use, and retain their brilliantly for an lodeful terime. The following are the prices:

Ladics' and Genus' Pinger Rings, single stones, one carst w't $6 each.

Genus' Pins, single stone, according to the sine of the stone $4 to $6.

Ladics' Chatter Pins. $7 50.

Ladics' Chatter Pins. $7 50.

TO CLUBS, ... Where Six watches are ordered at one time, we send a Seventh watch free. Goods sent by Express to be paid for on delivery,

C. E. COLLINS & CO., No. 335 Broadway, New York.

ALEXANDRE'S SEAMLESS KID GLOVES.

HAVE JUST RECEIVED.

A HANDSOME ASSORTMENT OF THE ABOVE.

Equal, if not superior to ANY THAT HAVE BEEN OFFERED.

PRICES THE SAME AS ALEXAN DRE'S REGULAR MAKE,

WHICH ARE

GREATLY BELOW THOSE SOLD ELSEWHERE.

BROADWAY, 4TH AVE., and 10TH ST.

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the United States. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Dealers. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., 50 BEREMAN ST., N. Y.

NEWMAN & CAPRON'S Establishment for the sale of

HOUSE FURNISHING

Goods and Plated Ware, in great variety, is still to-1172 Broadway, oor. Sith Street.

Also, Builders' Hardware, Locks, Electro-Bronsed and Flated Work of their own maintacture. Old household articles requiring Regulating dose on short notice. They are also prepared to contract for Reil Work and Speaking Tubes in Hotels and Private Dwellings.

TWO NICE NEW GAMES:

"Words Within Words" and "Blowing Cotton." Pieseing and entertaining for Old and Young. They are sure to be favorities in every family circle. They two games, in a neat flor, for 50 cents. Sent postipaid on receipt of price, by the publishers, G. M. WHIPPLE & A. A. SHITH, Salem, Mass.

1870. THE NURSERY, the best, cheapest, and MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN. $150 a year, in advance. Sample number, 10 cents. Subscribe sew, and get the last two numbers of this year FIRE. Address JOHN L. SHOREY, 13 Washington St., Boston.

CURL YOUR HAIR! A BOTTLE of MAGNETIC CURLIQUE sent PREE.
If carls straight hair to beautiful carls on the reservation are successful and the strain.
Prov. BY BON, Garley ville, Outo.

A WELL-PAYING BUSINESS is offered to Agents every where, by the Attarns Printing and Commercial Institute (General Russell's School), New Haven, Ct. Winter term begins Jan. II.

School, New Haven, Ct. Winter term begins Jan. II.

Stammering cured by Bates' appliances. Per descriptor our estra bideral terms to E.G. Sconze, Auturn, N.Y.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest varieties to be found in the city, and are offered at Low Prices.

ty Sign of Gold Telegraph. _41

OVIL WORK NO CLASS, We are now propered to

TO Will WORKAGO CLASS — We are now prepared to fur-mission used with consumit compleyment of builts, the whole of the time or for the space incomests. Business new, light and prohibits. Persons of either sees could now form for the fall of receiving, and a proportional sum by develop their whole fine to the business. Buys and print curry perty or track as new. That is the one thin national and would be regions, and to the business, we make this unpacticled class. To seek place to de-well artifation, we will spend of the proper for the traphs of wifting. Pull perticulum, valuable seconds, which will do be commented work on, and a copy of the Postph's Liberty Commented work on, and a copy of the Postph's Liberty Commented work on the largest read but fundly necessary as bibliotic——II sendfree by mall. Business, I found went persons only probable work, address S. C. ALLEN & CO., Augusta, Motos.

Carbolic Salve.

Prepared with Carbolle Acid, which is used in Hospitals, by direction of Physicians of most eminent standing every where. Possesses the most re-markable healing properties ever dis-covered. 25 cts. per Box. John F. Hen-ry, Proprietor, 8 College Place, N. Y.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR

PRIEST and NUN

Apply at once to CRPTTENDEN & McKINNEY, 1868 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

TOYS FOR THE HOLIDAYS, at and Toy Sazaar, 476 Broadway, between Grand and Broome Streets. LEWIS P. TIBBALS.

A HANDSOME FULL-GILT Photograph Album, bolding 20 fall-size pictures, mailed, post-paid, for 25 cts.; 5 for 81; 53 % per dozen. Circulars free. Address C. SEYMOUR, Bolland, N.Y.

MAGIC PHOTOGRAPHS, wonderful and amosing, 50 cents a package. Limitary or Love, 50 cents. Send to W. C. Wamvis, 3 Aster Pince, N. T.

PHANTOM MOTTORS.—A package sent on receipt of 30 cents. Catalogue of holiday articles free on application. Assures Menyman, Box 364, Chicago, Ill.

1870 CHEAP READING! — Attactic, Harpey, Gal-ton ass, or other $4 publication, and Mall's Journal of Health ($2), 176 Broadway, N.Y., both sent for $4 00.

VINEGAR.—HOW MADE PROM CIDER, 10 hours, without using drugs. For circulars, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Conn.

FOGGAN'S GENUINE CROIDE GOLD HUNTING - CASE WATCHES

Are manufactured on scientific principles; none but experts can detect them; they have all the brilliance, since them are detect them; they have all the brilliance, or retrieve, and extend them; they have all the brilliance, or retrieve, and extend them; they have all the brilliance, or retrieve, and extended the forecast, have theoregist description of General Gold Watches. Retrieved the Streecht, Durability, Accounts, and Chility of the Fise-Steind Watches, and pronounce them translated as reliable this keepers. Ladies and Continuent in Swiss Movements, $15 cach; Gentlemen's Pull-Jeweld Platent Levers, $25. $50, and $50 cach; Platent Steins, $50 and $55 cach; Gentlemen's Pull-Jeweld Platent Levers, $40, 800, and $60 cach. Each Watch guaranteed by a special certificate. The Latest Styles of Challas for Ladies and Gentlemen, $50 to $10 such. Seat by express, to be paid for on delivery; cationers must pay all charges. Chibs ordering 6 Watches at once will receive one extra as a present. Boware of inflators, as we can not be responsible unless orders are sent direct to JOHN FOGGAN, Pres't Oroide Gold Watch Co., 79 NASSAU St., N.Y.

"A BLAZE of BEAUTY."-1870.

THE JANUARY NUMBER of the PICTORIAL PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL appears in bright array. A new form, new types, numerous rich Blustrations, with sound and sensible reading-matter, render this the best ever freued. Among the contents are the following :

the following:

Ferdinand De Lesseps, the chief promoter of the Seas Canal, with a powtrait and sketch of his life. Hon. Samuel S. Fisher, Called States Commissioner of Patents, with portrait and biographical sketch, and a glimpse of the workings of the Patent Office. Carlos Manuel Cespeder, the President of the Cuban Republic. George Peabody, the saccessful merchant, banker, and philanthropist. Dr. Tiechendorff, the sentent Ebideal discoverer and critic—bis life, travels, and writings, with portrait.

The Koffir Hece—Physically and Mentally considered; with engravings from life, of young and old natures. Northwestern Australians—Appearance, customs and peculiarities, dress, ornaments, food, weapons, &c.

The Progress of Science—Steam, electricity, invention, scientific discovery, austomy, physiology, medicine, phrenology.

Brain Warves—Progression of thought, here thereach!

tion, scientific discovery, anatomy, physiology, medi-cine, phrenology.

Brain Warves—Progression of thought; how thought and destinant are transmitted. What can I Do Beit?—Or, the requirements of the teacher. Who believes Phrenology?—Are there among its followers persons of eminence and influence? Pages we Meet.—What they tell us and how they affect us. An Afternoon at "269"—A glunper at the specturess in our cabinet. Small Caulioususess—"Just for Fun," or trifling with death.

Small Cautiousness—Geath.

Confessions of a Smoker; what he suffered in consequence of the habit; how he reformed, and the happy results. The Wasp Waist—its metaphysics and physiology. Application—The necessity for its culpayments a survey of our Country's Agricultural Resources. A survey of our Country's Agricultural Resources. A survey of our productions during the past fifty years, with tables. Facts in Natural History. Will a horse-hair become a snake? The Hedge-hop.—What it is, how it lives, and where it is found. Illustrated. The Spongs.—Its origin, growth, and uses. Educational Mainzra.—Cornell, Harvard, Yale, Michigan. Cathedral of Rheims—The coronation place of the old French Kings; Joan of Arc.

This favorite JOURNAL has now reached its 50th Vol., and appears in the nand magazine form. We think it will prove even more popular than ever before. Terms, only $1 a year. 50 cents a No. Newsmon have it. Now is the time to subscribe for 1970.

Address S. E. WELLS, 509 Broadway, N. Y.

The CHAS. A. DANA, Entrop.

The chapped, enarine, and best Rev Toke assupaper, Everybody Blon E. Three cellstones Dally, 861 Reserved Werexty, 823 and Wesexty, 81 a year. All The Reve of half-price. Foll resorts of markeds, agriculture, Farmers' and Frid Grysnes' Chale, and a consected story in creey Weekly and Semi-Workly marker. A present of valuable plants and visce to every subscribers indecenses to constitute on a property of the control of the constitute of the control of the buller and by H. ENGLAND, Publisher Sun, New York.

HANKLEY KINT INCHINE

For Pamily use—simple, chemp, reliable. Enits every thing. AGENTS WANTELL Circular and sample stocking FREE. Address BINKLEY ENITYING MACHINE CO., Bath, Me., or 170 Broadway, N. Y.

HORRIBLE: 1—I suffered with CATARa; 1."

Tuirty Vears 1—was cirred in six weeks by a simple remedy, and will send the receipt, posinge free, to all afficted. Address Rev. T. J. MEAD, Drawer 176, Syracuse, New York.

Dyapepsia, Liver Complaint, and General Debility tured by using the SELLOON SPRING WATER.
Book of thirty pages, with certificates, sent free.
Address J. W. BEALS, Treasurer, Boston, Mass.

H OWE'S Never-Falling Ayus Over and Toole Billion.

How's Ownerstrated Syrup cares terrible diseases.
Inciplest Consemption, Catarth, Cancer, &c., every frac. 81 such. C. E. How's, M.D., Seneca Falls, N. Y.

A GENTS wanted every where, Brown's Patent Don-ble-Cone Ventilleting Damper gives the most heat with the least fiel. No Express charges. Send for Cir-culars. O. R. BHIGGS & CO., 184 Weshington St., N.Y.

SALESMEN. Wanted, a few refiable, energetic salesmen, to sell by sample standard goods, Address H. H. RICHARDS & CO. 453 Chestaut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

$75 to $200 per Month to Agents, salary or com-575 mission, to sell our Paient White Were Colden Lines. Address Hudon River Wive Works, 18 William St. N. Y., Chicaga, E., Richwood, Fa., or Memphis, Teen.

A GENTS can make $250 per month by selling our Silver-Plating Fluid. $3 per dozen. RICHMOND & HONTER, Seneca Falls, N. Y.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1870.

HARPEN'S MANAZINE, ONE YEAT.......$4 00
HARPEN'S WASSAN, ONE YEAT........ 4 00
HARPEN'S BAZAR, ONE YEAT....... 4 00
HARPEN'S BAZAR, ONE YEAT....... 4 00
HARPEN'S MANAZINE, HARPEN'S WESSAN, and HARPEN'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.

The Postage within the United States is for the Manazine 14 cents a year, for the Wazart or Bazar 20 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Description for the Manazine, or 20 cents for 24 cents additional for the Manager, or 20 cents for the Wesser or Basas, to prepay the United States

we came anomices for the Mananez, or 10 cents for the Wester or Baias, to prepay the United States postage.

The Volumes of the Mananez commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wester and Banan commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order.

When the subscriber's address is to be changed, both the old and new one must be given. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Geder or Deaft payable to the order of Hanran & Bacouras is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Deaft be next or a stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

23" Subscribers singly to either of Harper's Periodicals farnished from the present time to the close of 1970 for Four Dollars.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

C. G. Gunther's Sons,

502-504 BROADWAY.

Offer a very Elegant Assertment of Novelties in

SEAL AND ASTRAKHAN SACQUES,

TURBANS.

Boas, Ties, &c.

Two Months

FREE! FREE!!

The Most Popular Juvenile Magazine in America.

THE

LITTLE CORPORAL.

Entirely Original and First Cla

All new subscribers for THE LITTLE CORPORAL for the new year, whose names and money are sent in before the last of December, will receive the November and December Nos. of 1869 PREE! THE LITTLE CORPORAL has a Larger Circulation than any other Juneaule Magazine in the world, and in better worth the price than any other magazine published. Decause of its immense circulation, we are enabled Single number, 12 cents, or free to any one who will try to raise a club. Beautiful premiums for clubs. Subscribe NOW. Back numbers can always be

ALFRED L. SEWELL & CO., Pentasneas, CHICAGO, ILL.

The Advance.

Of which Rev. Beary Word Beacher says: "I repart it as standing fairly on the highest ground yet reached by Religious semi-papers in America;" and which Dr. Bernes Bushnell proportiess "Gue of the ablest, best, and sout outpoken Religious Journals published," is clubbed with Harper's Monthly, or Harper's Baser, at $5.00 per year, making the ADFANCE, whose regular subscription price is $2.00, cost only One Bellar to these who are about to renew their enterription to either of the Harper periodicule. Take is an excellent and inexpensive opportunity to make the acquaintance of this bold and aggressive, yet genial and justicless religious family journal, published at the metropoits of the Interior. For both periodical, at club rates, or for sample copies of the Advance, address

THE ADVANCE COMPANY,
25 Lombard Block, Calleage.

25 Lombard Block, Chlesgo.

THE PARLOR. UR TARGET PINTOL. No dirt, dust, nor danger: uses compressed sis. No cost for amountailou; from one charging it shoots from two to no shots, from not charging it shoots from two to no shots, from not charging it shoots from two to no shots, from 10 to 50 feet, securate as any pistol. A great favorite with Ladies and Gentlemes for practice and smasement, Price $5 00. Sent C.O.D.
AGESTS WANTER. P. C. GODFREY, 119 Nassau St., Room 26, New York.

Send for terms of 'Linden Hall,' Litiz, Lancaster Co., Pa.

CAUGHT

buying a Cunistwas Present for your friends and children until you have seen the

Lozo Pendulum Board

which is the best Panton Gaser Boann ever invented, being only 314 feet long and 12 inches wide. It is lined with the finest billiard cloth, and contains BAGATELLE, POCKETS.

TEN PINS, and RING TOSS.

We invite every body to call at our salesroom and examine it. If you can't come yourcel, write to some friend in New York asking them to call.

Seof for a descriptive estalogue and price-list. It can be sent to any part of the United States before the Holidays.

NOVELTY GAME CO.,

14 MURRAY ST., New York

THE BEST! THE BEST!

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN. 41

A weekly illustrated journal of 16 pages, devoted to Machinery, Agricultural Improvements, Chemical Science, and NEW Discoveries.

$1500 Cash in Prizes will be paid for clubs of subscribers, on the 10th of February.

A handsome large stose-paths ENGRAVING of 19 distinguished American Inventors presented to subscribers.

scribers.

Specimens of paper, prospectases, and blanks for names, sent free. Terms, $5 a year; $1.50 for six months. Discount to Clubs. A book of importance to all about to apply for patents sent free. Write for full porticulars coherening prices and patents, to MUNN & CO., Publishers and Patent Solicitors, 57 Pake Rose, New York.

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

Depot, 211 Washington Street, New York.

AT LOW PRICES. A Large Assortment of ROBES DE CHAMBRE and HOUSE COATS, For HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

> E. A. NEWELL, 727 Broadway, Cor. Waverly Place.

CATALOGUES, by Mail, 10 cents each. MATRIANGUES, DJ MAIN, 119 PAGES.

OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, TO PAGES.

MAGIC LANTERSS and STEREOPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 34 PAGES. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 934 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Pianos is fully estab-lished as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase.

Circulare and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Sairis & Nixos, Chicago, Illa: H. N. Harrstran, Milwankee, Wie.: Louis Tairr, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McCleux, Nashville, Tenn.: Kowers. Baca., St. Louis, Ma.: C. M. Munco, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. R. Jackson, Sandosky, Ohio; Brankand & Sons, Cieveland, Ohio; H. D. Munco, Zanesville, Ohio; J. E. Goule, Philadelphia, Pa.; C. Burne, Pittsburgh, Pa.; L. B. Powell, Scranton, Pa.: Cluert & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. T.; J. T. Hamior, Rhinebeck, N. Y.;
H. S. Macale, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Uvley, Buffalo, N. Y.; Repression & Howe, Syntemson, N. T.; Waire, Smith, & Prant, Boston, Mass.; Corry Bros., Providence, R. L.; C. M. Looses, New Haven, Coun.; Matstrans Grav, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordenberg, Toronto, C. W.; E. Petler & Bros., St. John, N. B.

BISHOP & REIN,

JEWELERS, Under Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, OFFER FOR SALE

DIAMONDS, EMERALDS, PEARLS, CAMEOS, Roman, Florentine, and Byzantine MOSAICS, and other

FINE JEWELRY and SILVERWARE. WATCHES of all the principal makers. Sole Agents of M. F. Deut & Co. (Wothmakers to the Queen), 33 Cockapar Street, London. We call particular attention to our fine assortment of CORAL JEWELRY.

HEARTH AND HOME,

AN LLLUSTRATED

Rural, Literary, and Family Weekly, OF 16 LARGE, HANDSOME PAGES,

EDITED BY DONALD G. MITCHELL,

Assisted by an able Corps of Associates in all Departments.

HEARTH AND HOME meets the wants of all members of good families every where, and contains the best of every thing for every body in city, vilinge, and country. It gives practical instruction, by the most experienced writers, upon all rural topics : Farming, Fruit-Growing, Flower-Culture, Ornsmental Gardening, Bural Architecture, Country and City Homes-their Furnishing and Adernment, Domestic Economy, Housekeeping Hints, &c. &c.

It has Choice Stories, Sketches, Essays, Poems, Wit and Humor, The News, Money and Market Reports, Beautiful Pictures, by the best artists, and, in short, all the features of

A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY WEEKLY.

It contains so much room that every number has an abundant variety for Fathers, Mothers, Sons, Daughters, down to the youngest child!

REDUCED RATES FOR 1870.

INVARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

Single Copies, $4 00; Three Copies, all at one time, $9 00; Five Copies, $12 00:

making HEARTH AND HOME, to a Club of Five or more subscribers at $2 40 each, the Cheapest, is it is the Most Complete

FAMILY WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

in the world. Subscribers before the first of January next, will get all numbers to that date Free, and their year will end January 1, 1871. Specimen num-PETTENGILL, BATES, & CO., 37 Park Bow, New York.

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This one Bell, located in the simplified of the bones. Thousands who are using it testify to its merits. Send for a Pamphlet. E. HOLMES, T. Marray St., N. Y.

C. A. STEVENS & CO., JEWELERS,

No. 40 East 14th Street, N. Y., are Agents for the UNITED STATES WATCH CO.'S

CELEBRATED WATCHES.

"Equal to say in the world."

Call or send for Price-List.

Ahearn's Patents.

Purchasers wanted for every State and County not yet sold. $1000 and expenses can be made monthly on every $200 invested. For particulars, address J. AHEARN, 5 P. O. Avegue, Baltimore, Md.

HUDSON RIVER INSTITUTE and Clayersck College. Term opens December Sith. Rav. ALONZO PLACE, A.M., President, Claverack, N. Y.

DWARD SEARS'
ENGRAVING ESTABLISHMENT,
60 BEEKMAN STREET, New York.

NEW GOODS NOW OPENING

PARIS, LONDON, AND BOHEMIA.

Gilt-Mounted Vases and Jardinieres.

GILT AND BRONZE CLOCKS, FIGURES, &c. JEWEL-CASES, BONBONNIERES, TABLES, &c.

CHINA DINNER AND DESSERT SETS, VERY CHEAP.

SILVER-PLATED WARE, EXTRA QUALITY.

CHANDELIERS AND GAS-FIXTURES from OSLER, London, and of our own manufacture. AGENTS FOR ROGERS GROUPS.

E. V. HAUGHWOUT & CO., 488, 490, and 492 BROADWAY, corner Broome St.

WEBB'S ADDER.

OHLY PRACTICAL ADDING MACHINE IN THE WORLD.

THE WORLD.

This little machine, no less wonderful in its simplicity than in its efficacy, has wen a more speedy soccess than any other invention of the day. While the sewing machine had to strength through long years for adoption, Webb's Adding Machine was accepted at once. Where numbers are called off, it gives instantaneous additions. It carries up the columns of a ledger account, two at a time, with mechanical accuracy. The President of the First National Bank of New York writes in his bestimonial, "IT RELIEVES THE MIND ENTIRELY, AND REDUCES ARITHMETIC TO A SIMPLE MOTION OF THE HAND!" The machine took the first medals and diplorms at the last American Institute Fair, New York, and also at the last American Institute Fair, New York, and also at the last Mass. Scate Fair, in Boston. It is guaranteed to do every thing claimed for it, and the report comes from nearly all who use it that not events in the desired—that it does more. Price 50 and 210. Sout by mail on receipt of grice and posings (31 cereb), or by express, C. O. B., at the ensterner's expense. To remit (post-office order, registered letter, or draft) caves the return-money charge. For circular, testimonials, &c., enclose starng. State and County Rights (excinsive) for sale.—WEBS ADDING MACHINE CO.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., Selling Agents, 113 Broadway, New York.

Hatter and Furrier. DANIEL D. YOUMANS.

717 BROADWAY, offers at low prices:

LADIEN FINE FURS in every variety: SEAL and ASTRAKHAN SACQUES AND TURBANS; WHITE FOX MUFFS AND BOAS; CHILDREN'S FURS, GENTS' FURS, &c. Importer of ENGLISH HATS for Gentlemen's Wear.

Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co., MANUFACTURERS OF

IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE, WITH

PURE SILVER.

The experience of FORTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpson, and the use of new and ingenious labor-saving machinery, enable us to offer to the trade a line of goods in ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS, which, for BRAUTY, FINISH, and DURABILITY.

Can not be Excelled. All goods bearing our trade-mark,

Improved Electro Treble Plate," ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED: and, if found defective or not as represented, can be returned, and the money will be refunded. OFFICE AND FACTORY, WALLINGFORD, Comp.

SAMPLE AND SALES ROOM, 19 JOHN ST., N. Y. $20 A DAY to MALE AND FEMALE Agests to introduce the BUCKEYE 200 SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Stitch slike on both sides, and is the only LICENSED SHUTTLE MACHINE sold in the United States for less than 34t. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to prosecution as i imprisonment. Orray Fars. Address W. A. HENDERSON & CO., Cleveland, O.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING,

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md. Send for Price-List.)

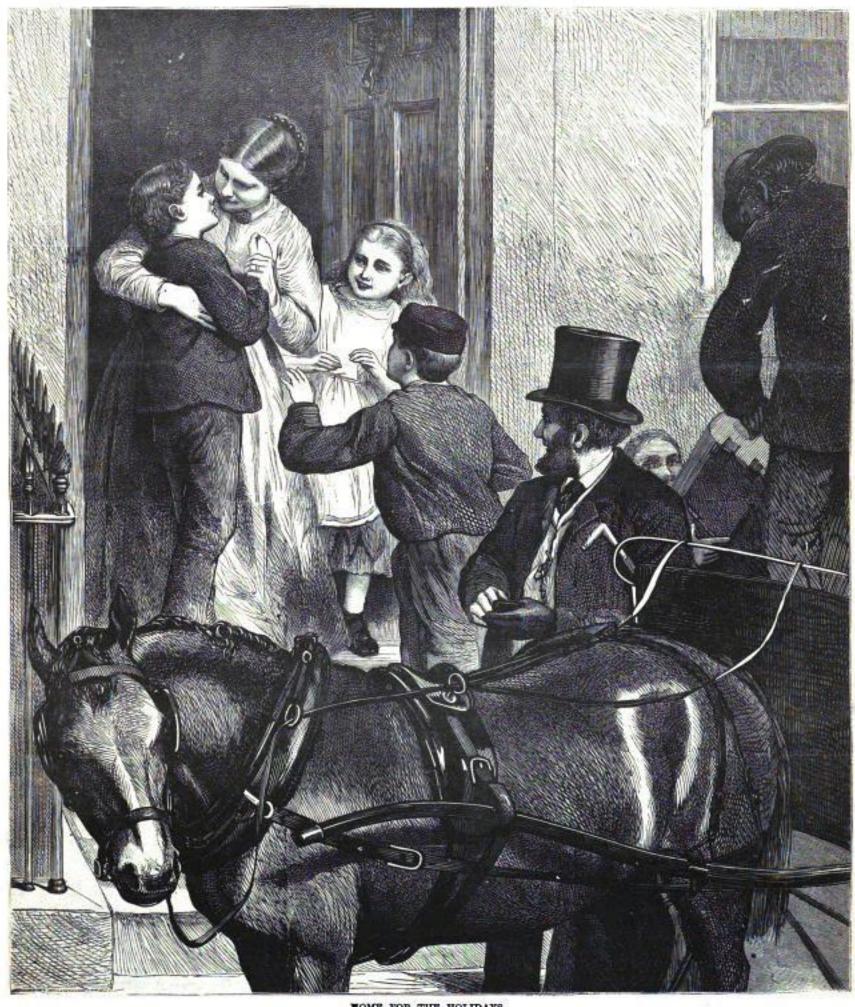

A Bioliday Present —Polisk & Son manufacture warranted Gen-sine Meerschaum Goods. Stores: 519 Broadway, St. Michelas Hotel, & 317 John St., middle of block. Send for drealar to Letter-Box 5846. Also, Repairing and Boiling done.

Vol. XIII.—No. 678.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1869.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1808, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS,

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, DECRMBER 25, 1869.

THE UNITED STATES AND ENGLAND.

THE President, in his singularly satisfactory Message, which renews the confidence of the country in his simple good sense and sagacity, makes two allusions to the Alabama question. One is incidental, in speaking of enforcing the neutrality laws, which, he says, has been done in good faith, although it was very empleasant, in consequence of "the suffer-ing we have endured for lack of like good faith toward us by other nations." The other allo-sion is the firm statement of the American view of the Alabama difficulty. The President says, in general, that the nature of the injury to our commerce, industry, and produc-tion separates the Assause claims from or-dinary commercial demands. Yes, great as is the difference, nothing was said in the treaty, and not an inference could be drawn from it to prove the sense of the unfriendliness of Great Britain in our struggle for existence. He approves, therefore, the rejection of the treaty.

In a late brief pamphlet upon Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON and the Alabama negotiations, Mr. George Besse, a master of the controversy, and an accomplished student of internations law, reviews the conduct of Mr. Jonnson and the instructions of Mr. SEWARD in a most conclosive manner against both of those gentle men. He shows that Mr. SEWARD changed his ground upon the subject after Mr. ADAMS left London, and that Mr. Jonnson wholly misconceived his instructions, and stultified himself by his assertions and admissions. The pamphlet of Mr. BENES is a very timely and useful contribution to the debate. The original ground of the United States is, that there was a wrong to the Government as well as in-jury to individuals. Mr. Sawano wrote to Mr. Adams, in January, 1868, that he had been very unfortunate if he had not made it clearly understood that a violation of neutrality by the Queen's proclamation and kindred proceedings of the British Government "were a national wrong to the United States; and that the lowest form of satisfaction" would be an indemnity without reservation to the individual losers, " in consequence of a failure of the British Government to preserve its neutrality."

Six months later, in July, 1868, Mr. Saw-ARD'S instructions to Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON are pitched in a much lower key. He tells him first of all to open the Naturalization and St. Juan questions. If they can be satisfactorily setrled, he is to "advert" to the Alabama claims; for it seems to the President that an adjustmen can be made "without formally reviewing former discussions." Mr. SEWARD then states that a joint commission might be agreed upon to settle mutual claims of the citizens of the United States and British subjects. No word of wrong to the Government; no implication of any thing but ordinary claims. Mr. Saw-ann informs Mr. Jonnson that he is not au-thorized to commit the Government by such a proposition, but that he may "sound Lord STANLEY" upon the subject when he is satisfied that "the two more urgent controversies" are in process of adjustment. Upon these instructions Mr. REVERUT JOHESON proceeded to make the Convention of November 10, which was such a surrender of the American demands that even ANDREW JOHNSON'S Cabinet unanimously disapproved it. On the 14th of January, 1869 he made the treaty which the Senate rejected, and which Mr. Journou said obtained "all that we have over asked." Yet, notwithstanding that it covered merely mutual individual claims. Mr. Jourson, after the inauguration of President GRANT, and when he knew that he was to be recalled, made an offer to Lord CLARENDON of "only so far altering" the treaty as to include the claims of the Government! Lord CLAR-ESPOS asked his authority, and declined to do any thing until he knew what the new Admin-istration wished. Why did Mr. Jonesos propose this most important supplement, if the treaty already covered "all that we have ever asked?" Any answer to that question convicts ty es a Minio

President GRANT now substantially affirms the original American position. This, as we have often previously said, involves a question of honor as well as of money. The "moral demages," for financially computing which Mr. SUMBER was asseiled with ridicule, are still claimed. But we must all distinctly understand that moral damages can not be settled by money. England evidently understands this, and she therefore asks by the month of every intelligent Englishman, "What is it that you wish?" There is not such an Englishman who does not say, "We wish to be friends, and we will do any thing short of confessing bad faith." If we in the United States mean, therefore, to demand that England shall own that her conduct was dishonorable, we have only to look into our own hearts to read the answer. There is not an American who does not know that, sooner than allow that the United States had acted dishonorably, the longest and fiercest war would be welcomed. The honor of England is not less dear to Englishmen than our own honor to us; and we assume, therefore, that unless we are resolved upon war with England in any case, we shall not ask her to admit that her conduct was rescally.

From the moment of such an understanding the settlement does not seem very impracticable. The exact international legal point, so to speak, must be waived, and become the subject of future conference. It may be waived, upon our part, under the broad declaration of President GRANT in his Message, that "this nation is its own judge when to accord the rights of belligerency either to a people straggling to free them-selves from a government they believe to be op-pressive, or to independent nations at war with The British Government should then express the sincerest regret for the escape of the Alabana, and its consequences; decline to enter upon the question of international law, but invite a future understanding upon the points involved; and propose to pay individual claims upon an authorized statement of the United States Government, Such a settlement involves no concession which it is not the highest policy of both nations to make in the inter-ests of liberty and civilization. The offer of such a settlement proceeding from the Govern-ment of which Mr. GLADSTONE and Mr. BRIGHT are the members most known in this country, would be an act of statesmanship not only most honorable, but leading straight to a more friendly understanding than has ever existed between the two countries since the separation.

The subject has been sadly confused by Mr. SEWARD's change of position, and by Mr. REV-EMPT JOHNSON'S absurd determination to have every thing pleasant by celling it so. He was unanimously confirmed as Minister. He came from the Senate itself, the treaty-ratifying body. Ho was approved after other gentlemen had been rejected. The chief question between England and the United States was the Alabawa controversy. It was a very natural con-clusion upon the part of Englishmen that Mr. JOHNSON represented the policy of his country; and when every proposition he made was ac-cepted, and the President and Secretary of State approved the result, it was, at least, not extraordinary that the treaty was regarded as our treaty, and that its summary rejection was an astounding surprise to England. Still, the British Government knew that the Senate was the ratifying power; that Mr. JOHNSON was not in political sympathy with it, however his confirmation might have seemed to disprove that fact; and that as Mr. JOHNSON'S convention of November 10 had been unanimously rejected by a cabinet politically friendly to him, it was certainly not impossible that the later treaty would be rejected by a senate politically

It was a deplorable muddle; and it is due chiefly, as we said when the treaty was reject-ed, to the very foolish practice of the Senate in confirming any Senator who is nominated by the President to office. But the work is to be done over again; and there is no intelligent Englishman or American who will not heartily repeat the wise words of the President: "I hope that the time may soon come when the two governments can approach the solution of this momentons question with an appreciation of what is due to the rights, dignity, and honor of each; and with a determination not only to remove the causes of complaint in the past, but to lay the foundation of a broad principle of public law which will prevent future differences. and tend to firm and continued peace and friend-

A TRULY "DEMOCRATIC" POLICY.

THE gentlemen who ordain the policy of the Democratic party in this State met recently at the Governor's in Albany to decide what should be done by the next Legislature. Those who have read the messages of Mr. Horrman as Mayor, and who have seen his speeches upon municipal affairs, have observed the vehement denunciation of the system of governing the city from Albany. It has been supposed, there-fore, by some unreflecting persons that the Commissions would be instantly abolished. This is indeed the simple logic of the situation. very unreflecting reader, indeed, who supposes that the Tammany chiefs are painfully exercised about good government in the city. The difficulty has not been the Commissions, but that the chiefs did not control them. objective point of those chiefs, in the fine periods which Mr. HOFFMAN rounded in their interests, was the patronage and what is some-times called the plunder. If all the power and possible profits of the Commissions had been in the hands of the Tammany chiefs, does any reader, however unreflecting, suppose that Mr. HOFFMAN would have lamented over the city as deprived of self-government?

It is, therefore, by no means certain that there will be any serious change in the present policy. Should there be an entire revolution, and the police system of the great and good FERNAN-no Wood be restored, there would be a public apprehension in the city so profound that the Democratic vote, in its strongest hold, would I cations of a foreign demand for the balances be so seriously reduced as to imperil a continued Tammany ascendency. This result the chiefs naturally wish to avoid; and if they can bury their hands in the public purse by obtaining control of the Commissions, yet without disturbing the public confidence in the present system, they will be very likely to prefer that plan. This is plainly intimated in the accounts of the Albany council of the chiefs, and in the tone of their papers.

There is, however, one intention of the party which is, as it were, officially announced; and that is the withdrawal of the assent of the State of New York to the Fifteenth Amendment. This will undoubtedly be recommended by the Governor, and it will be done. This, moreover, is a clear illustration of the real character of the Democratic party. After a long and ornel war, springing from a denial of the equal rights of a large part of the population, slavery is abolished and its defenders vanquished. Common-sense and patriotism suggest that the question shall be finally settled by removing every disability founded upon color merely; but the Democratic chiefs refuse, and insist that, if a man is of a certain color, it is conclusive proof that he should not have an equal voice in the government. He may be ignorant, drunken, degraded, idle, brutish; but if his skin can be called white, he is a proper voter. He may be intelligent, industrious, sober, and the best of citizens; but if his skin can be called black, he is not fit to be a voter. This is Democracy; and this is its great cardinal principle to-day. And because of this, the ignorant and vicious, as a class, naturally belong to the Democratic

Of course the papers and orators of the party affect to argue the point upon other grounds. It was what they did during the angry debate upon slavery. They used to say then that whatever might be their opinion of the morality and expediency of slavery, it was a State institution, and the State recognizing slaves as property, its citizens might lawfully take their property with them into the territories. Prop-erty in the territories! Why, the entire Democratic party in the Northern States was the property of the slaveholders, and they did with it as with their slaves, just what they chose. Slavery was confirmed, intrenched, extended, and finally struck at the national heart, because of the support of the Democratic party of the North, appealing to this kind of argument. Now it is said by the same old party, which is still carried in what remains of the pockets of the slaveholders, thet, whatever may be their opinion of the voting of the colored population, it is a subject for the States to decide, and not for the National Government. And when Con-gress proposes to settle it in the conceded con-stitutional manner by an amendment approved by the necessary number of States, they assert virtually that Congress has no right to propose such an amendment which is simply saving such an amendment; which is simply saying that the people of the United States have no right to amend the Constitution in the manner that the instrument itself provides. We shall, therefore, probably see this party in the State of New York gravely trying to save all that it can of the remains of the most inhuman and atrocious system in history. Although the final result is inevitable; although the conscience and good sense of the world and of this country basten to equalize the rights of all citisens of the commonwealth; although it is plain that no other policy in this age and in our civillization promises peace and presperity, yet the same inhumanity, harred, prejudice, and dull-ness which, as the Democratic party, defended and sustained slavery, now struggles to retain as much as possible of its infamy and injustice.

THE SITUATION.

THE immediate advance in gold in Wall Street, and the fall of bonds in London, on the promulgation of the financial views of the Administration, may be said to indicate disappointment, but the partial recovery which has since taken place somewhat neutralizes this effect. The truth is, that there are speculators in both markets of immense power, whose action is due to their respective interests, and is founded so much more upon temporary than upon general officences that best 1 market reports.

It is certain that there is to be no contraction of the currency at this session of Congress, and prices, therefore, will, as the year 1870 advances, he influenced as they have been by the amount of paper-money in circulation. circumstances which for the present keep down the price of gold are these: that the Government will throw upon the market for the installment of half-yearly interest due in January nearly thirty-two millions of dollars in gold, deducting what will be paid on the Sinking Fund and other bonds lately purchased by Mr. Bourwell; that large shipments on account of cotton, grain, and provisions are still to go forward; that January sales of coin may possibly be ordered by the Department; that, although exchange is constantly absorbed, the price of it on the closing of the second week of December is low, and that there are no indi-temporarily invested on foreign account in Wall Street, and none for the present that our bonds held abroad will be returned.

If these indications continue, Wall Street may be induced to wait until after the January payments of interest shall be absorbed before undertaking to put up the price of gold to the point at which it has beretofore been maintain-ed as the effect of the continued circulation of seven hundred millions of paper currency. But by reason of enlarged circulation in the South, and somewhat to the unfortunate tendency in California to allow the displacement of its gold circulation by one of paper, the power of the latter here is partially reduced.

Jacon, in his work on the precious metals, dedicated to Mr. Hubbarson, then British Minister, stated that the long-continued habit of the great commercial nations at that time to rely upon paper issues had disturbed the industry in the few mines then worked in Mexico and South America; and it may be that California may be so debauched with paper as that the same effect may be produced. Money may be same effect may be produced. Money may be made so much more easily with the printing-press than with labor in the mines that this effect is not impossible. But a failure to keep up the supply of bullion would be lamentable; for it renders the return to specie payments more difficult. The advantage of the Pacific Bailroad to California will be greatly neutralized if it shall induce laborers to withdraw from the important industry in her gold and silver mines. The feature of an increase in the promises to pay bullion on the part of important nations, and of a simultaneous diminution in its production, would again be repeated in the history of commerce,

Italy and Russia are largely increasing their sper circulation, which produces a glut of specie in countries more wisely regulated. The United States, notwithstanding these events which are favorable for a return toward specie payments, seems inclined to postpone for the present all steps in that important direction. There will consequently be a powerful tendency toward expelling bullion to the non-banking countries, such as Chins, India, and Japan, there to be hoarded. Our true relations to the world at large are not wisely considered in this decision of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BOUTWELL, in his annual report, reco mends that the three per cent. certificates, amounting, with compound interest notes co vertible into them, to a fraction short of fifty millions of dollars, shall be redeemed, and that, as a compensation for their withdrawal from banks which now hold them as a reserve, thirtyfive millions of new bank capital and circulation be authorized by Congress. The Comp-troller of the Treasury, who more nearly agrees with the committee appointed by the national banks, in his annual report, recommends free banking and unrestricted issues. The door to expension is thus opened to Congress, and the next few months will inform us what will be done in pursuance of these plans. Will the proposed limitation of the Secretary be obeyed, or will the New York system of free banking h established?

We long ago stated that neither at the last for at this session would any steps be taken to enforce contraction. Next year members of Congress are to be elected, and on both sides success is deemed of too great consequence. The complexion of the next Congress is relied upon to fix the issues for the Presidential campaign; and this great question of finance is consequently postponed.

The eurplus of grain which is expected to Great Britain fixes the price in full seasons of the whole production. Our farmers are be-ginning to find out that, while they sell at gold prices, they produce at extravagant currency prices, which will educate them into sound notions of money and industry. We hear in all quarters of a greater willingness to return to specie payments than before the late, and to them hurtful, fall in gold. It is an extraordinary state of things that a mechanic can carn a barrel of flour per day. The grade of flour which is shipped for the consumption of laborers in England sells for only about $4 75 per barrel. It was unwise on the eve of great activity of our shipments of cotton, flour, and provisions to best down the price of gold, when see was no intention to fol eounl contraction of the currency.

Cotton and pork are less affected by the fall in gold, because they stand on special grounds. The production of cotton is supposed by English manufacturers to be insufficient for the wants of the world; and being insufficient, the producers of it may control the market. Pork, by reason of the demand for lard and oil, and because of the present difficulty in producing bogs in the South—they are stolen and used by one class of the community—is held by Western farmers with unusual firmness; but their wheat can not be sold at remunerative prices.

We lately referred to the cable telegram annoncing failures in England. The Messys. Prs., one of those who failed, had establishments in England and Ireland, and their business was on an extensive scale. "This fail-ure," says the Manchester Guardian, "is looked upon as a serious matter, and an impression prevails that the recent beavy fall in the value of grain will cause much embarrassment in the trade. Possibly, however, the difficulties arless serious than are represented, and the actual position of the trade may not be more unsound then it was at this time last year. It will be recollected," the paper adds, "that during the closing mouths of 1868 a rapid fall, amounting to about 20s. per quarter, from the highest point of the year, took place in wheat." The whole importation of wheat into the ports of Great Britain, from the first of September to the 20th of November, was 11,002,372 cwt. against 6,929,161; and of flour, was 1,615,115 cwt. against 819,659 for the corresponding period last year. But as their chief reliance for their supplies of grain is upon chipments from the United States, including California, the depression is due as much, if not more, to the fall of grain in our market than to the excess of importation. Unusual supplies will be required in England up to the period of the next har-vest. The country, therefore, will readily see to what influences we are-indebted for our present condition.

If the persistent pressure to lower the price of gold to the limits fixed by the Treasury, which is affecting trade in all its departments most injuriously, were accompanied with the permanent relief which will arise from firmly proceeding toward specie payments, no just complaint could be made of the policy, for it will ultimately bring all to the same platform; but no such indications appear—on the contrary, prices must mount upward, and the same experiments upon our industry must be repeated hereafter.

The great lesson should be impressed upon our great farming interest by these events, that so long as their prosperity is anspended "upon the wings of paper-money," they will be sub-jected to these vicissitudes of change, and that their safety depends altogether on reaching the solid ground of specie payments.

THE PRESIDENT AND CUBA.

Ir has been so vehemently asserted that the President favored the recognition of Cuban belligerency or independence, that the sensible, conclusive, and truly American remarks upon the subject in his Message must have greatly surprised somebody. General GRANT says what has been constantly maintained in these columns and in many others, as by all who have fairly studied the subject, that "the contest has at no time assumed the conditions which amount to a war in the sense of international law, or which would show the existence of a de facts political organization of the insurgents sufficient to justify a recognition of belligerency." He says, moreover, what we stated at the time was all that the United States could honorably do, that the Government has offered its mediation, but, of course, without a threat, and that it is to be hoped that our good offices may yet be of service.

The position of the United States is thus accurately and authoritatively defined. It is its traditional position; and it is because of its faithful adherence to it that the neutral fame of the country is so spotless. The President says what HERRY CLAY as Secretary of State said nearly fifty years ago, that while we sympa-thize with all people struggling for liberty and self-government, yet we do not enforce our views nor take part without invitation, and that our course should be always governed by "strict justice and law, international and local." Indeed, the more the Message is considered the more satisfactory and truly patriotic it seems; recalling the sense and honesty of Mr. Lincoln's, and nobly contrasting with the special pleas for injustice which the messages of Democratic Presidents had become. Since the lackeys of slavery disappeared from the White House the whole country breathes a fresher air. The Government no longer invents excuses for infamy. At last the President speaks like the chief magistrate of a truly free and self-respecting people,

THE MARSHAL OF SOUTHERN NEW YORK.

THE New York Tribuse stremuously urges that the United States Marshal of this district be removed, and General Stone appointed in his It does not allege that the Marshal is an incompetent or dishonest officer, nor that he is not a faithful Republican; but it asserts that General Storm's "consent to run for Secretary of State" saved the Republican party from "utter rout and demoralization" in the late election. General Store's services to the country are part of our history. His nomination for Secretary of State was heartly approved by the Republican party of New York, as the vote showed. He is a gentleman against whom no eval is breathed. But we very greatly mustake General Stonz, and the great body of intelligent Republicans who supported him, if they think that a most efficient and admirable officer of the United States, of the General's own party, should be removed in order to make a place for him. They know that this is the very worst practice of our civil service, and that alle sheets a

nothing has done so much to degrade and demoralize our politics as the course which the

It is true that Marshal Hanlow has not been confirmed. But he was appointed by the President upon grounds of character, experience, and fidelity. He is as good a Republican as there is in the State; but his appointment was not what is technically called political, any more than that of his predecessor, General Barrow, Indeed there was, as will be remembered, a loud outery against General Bancow because he refused to do the bidding of certain committees. Undoubtedly similar influences oppose the confirmation of Marshal Harlow. can not, however, be opposed because he is not in every way fit for the place, nor because he is not a good Republican, but solely because he is not the choice of a certain political clique.

Upon the other hand, it is not said that General Stort would not be an efficient Marshal, nor that he is not an equally faithful Republican, and there are thousands of good men in the State of whom the same might be said. But it is precisely in such a case as this that an admirable officer should be retained, if ever the deplorable system of our civil service is to be corrected. It is the very case in which President GRANT can stand fast by that most admirable and independent declaration in his Message: "Nor has there been any hesitation in sustaining efficient officials against remonstrance wholly political." The President may be sure that the must intelligent and patriotic men of his own party will heartily and hopefully support him in every firm stand that he may make against the prostitution of the public service to the merest party purpose.

CHARACTER.

WHEN it was asserted that General GRANT had been an accomplice in the gold scandal, although the assertion was eagerly repeated in many quarters and insidiously deprecated in others, the country did not believe the report for a moment. The President's character was his armor from which the shafts of venomous hostility dropped harmless. In like manner, if it should be alloged that Bishop Sturson had an interest in some vast scheme of forgery of the currency, a smile of contemptuous disbelief would averspread the whole country. The bishop's character defends him from slander, Against a vague assertion, therefore, undoubtedly a man's character or good name protects But is it equally sure to screen him under other circumstances? If by misapprehension of any kind, meaning any thing but ill, he is placed in an equivocal situation, is it not a quite universal fact that the circumstances are interpreted against him? Is be not very likely to be hunted, under a cry of protecting public virtue, with a ferocity and sheer injustice which are infinitely more prejudicial to the public virtue than any specific act which might be proved agninst him or any man whatever?

Suppose he has been misinformed, suppose as acted hastily, or expressed himself warmly, is the worst view of the case likely to be the truest? and must a man, who is at the most mistaken, be treated as if he were a conspirator against social order and common morahty? Is his character of no avail against insumuations and accusations that could not be more malignant if they were urged against the most notorious reprobates? Undoubtedly, the higher a man's standing, and the purer his fame, the more careful he should be, because of his greater influence. He has become a representative man, and other men correct themselves by his conduct as they dress themselves before a glass. But we appeal to ex-perience whether, when the doubtful circumstance gathers about such a man, the tone of the censure does not suggest a suspicion of the gratification of mean feeling, rather than regard for the public virtue. Public virtue requires, first of all, that the truth be told, not that a sensation be created, nor reckless vituperation powred out. Public virtue imperatively demands the steady declaration that if circumstances seem to implicate a man of unspotted fame, his character is his sure defense until ill intent be proved; and if no ill intent, but more misapprehension be established, then public virtue requires that outrageous insinuation and infamous insult not only cease, but that the most ample reparation and spology be made.

The power of the press in this country is tremendous. But are "newspaper men feared for their power or respected for their use of it? A chorus of great journals can produce a thunder in which the after still small voice of truth is utterly lost. They may join in a vehement denunciation of any man, and if there be any apparent reason, he can only bow to the blast, and await the judgment of a calmer hour. But a wise man, in the stormy crisis of assertion, will oppose character to character. Here, on the one hand, may be a man whose good name and blameless life and lofty princaple are known of all men; on the other, a chorus which yesterday perhaps saluted a rich man as if he were therefore a public benefactor. Suddenly the chorus turns, we will suppeec, upon the man of good name, and denounces him as a betrayer of the religion he ! professes, and a biasphemous subverter of so-cial order. Until the facts are known, and the purpose proved, which stands strongest in the storm—the character of the man or that of his denouncers? And if misapprehension be at last proved, and with it an act to be regretted, what rancorous epithet or strain of mad denunciation is left for intentional evil-doors?

RELEASE OF THE GUN-BOATS.

THE Spanish gun-boats have been released pon the same ground with the Peruvisa monitors eighteen months ago, that no active war exists between Spain and Peru. If this be the fact, the pledge of the Spanish Minister that the thips were not to be used against Peru is wholly superfluous. For why should he promise that they will not be turned against a government with which Spain is at peace? If, for any reason, the United States had wished to detain the gap-boats, there was undoubtedly sufficient ground in the admissions of the Spanash and Peruvian Ministers in the summer of 1868. If, on the other hand, it wished to release them, it had grounds enough in its permission for the departure of the Peruvian mon-Indeed, upon its own showing the l'eruvian Government had no case. If it was fair, as it alleged, that the United States should release the Peruvian monitors nearly two years ago, it can not be very unfair in its view to release the Spanish gun-boats now.

The action of the United States in releasing the Peruvian monitors proceeded upon the prin-ciple stated by Mr. Sawand to Mr. Gosi, the Spanish Minister; "Wer can be raised without authoritative declaration of war; peace may be restored by long suspension of hostilities, without peace being made. History is full of examples. What time should elapse to justify presumption of peace has not been settled. In must be determined with reference to collateral facts and circumstances. 'Yet at the very time that Mr. Sawand wrote, the Peruvian Miniscer asserted that war had ceased in fact only, not in principle, and might at any moment be re-

By releasing the gun-boats, therefore, the United States seem to declare that, although war may still exist in principle between two nations, yet a suspension of hostilities, which 'may be renewed at any moment" relieves a neutral from its obligations. Thus if Spain, upon obtaining her fleet, should immediately proceed with the fresh strength so acquired to reopen the war with Peru, with every prospect of speedy triamph, the United States would not have violated their neutrality. The practical improvement would therefore seem to be that if a European nation, waging war with any American power, finds herself at a disadvantage, she has only to suspend hostilities, build a fleet in our ports, secure its departure upon the plea that active hostilities do not exist, and when the fleet is fairly at sea renew the war.

This is certainly a very liberal interpretation of neutral duties. But it would be interesting to know, under the circumstances, why the United States should not have demanded of Spain some proof that the war would not be renewed, or some explanation of the fact that, notwithstanding the alleged peaceful disposition of the countries, there is as yet no treaty, no formal and recognizable security of peace.

Governor Hospman made a little speech at the opening of the building of the Young Men's Christian Association, which he airily ended by saying: "And, my friends, notwithstanding I saying: "And, my friends, notwithstanding a bave said something in favor of legislation, I beg to assure you if you need any thing this winter to belp you with this enterprise—if you come to Albany, unless the bill is a very objectionable one, I will promise not to veto it. If, for instance, the bill should continue in office directors who were elected for a specified term, there would be nothing in the least objectionable to an airy Executive who signed the Erie bill.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CONCRESS.

December 6.—The second session of the Porty-first Congress commenced at noon, a quotum being present in both Houses. Beyond reading the President's Message, very little business was done. Among the bills introduced in the Henzis was one to prohibit the importation or immigration of Chinese under contracts, and one providing for the execution of the investaginat polygamy in Utak.—In the House, a resolution, declaring Virginia entitled to representation, was referred to the Recommendation Consulting.

December 1.—In the Senate bills were introduced to smeat the Civil Rights bills; to amend the Banking att and provide for a return to specie payments; to amend the Bonesteds bill, so as to require the planting of trees on the reservations; and a bill for the relief of members of Congress and bends of Departments from the importunities of office section; making it a penal offense for Congressmen to assist applicants for office, allowing them only to give information when requested to do so, in writing by these holding the appointing power. Bills were introduced in the House to repeal the Tenure-of-Office act, in accordance with the suggestions in the Message; to abeliah the franking privilege; to repeal the duty on salt, tea, coffee, and on printing and writing paper; to excelled a uniform system of naturalization; to pervent members of Congress from accepting or boilding positions of trust under the President, and a bill to jeolabilit the sale of only by the Government.

Livewater 8.—In the Senate a joint recolution was offered by Mr. Williams, of Oregon, to the effect that a State Legislature having once railfied a constitutional amendment, my further action on it shall be void. A bill, repeting the laws requiring the test-cath, was introduced by Mr. Ferry, of Connecticut.—In the House, Mr. Morrill, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill to fund the National debt at a lewer rate of interest. The Consus bill was taken up, and Mr. Garfield, of Othic, explained wherein it differed from that under which the common of 1860 was taken. He said that the number of Representatives had been fixed by the Committee at 200, as by taking this number in State would have a member of Congress.

Decreber 9.—No business of imperiance was transacted in the Senate. In the House a resolution was offered, directing inquiry to be made into the cause of the recent gold panic.

Decreber 10.—The Senate was not in session. Among the bills introduced in the House was one to reflere political disabilities, and an additional uniform Naturalization bill. A petition for the recognition of the Cubans as belligerents, signed by 13,000 chieses of New York, was prescuted.

Executer 11.—In the House the Census bill was debeted, and was ordered to be printed. A bill was introduced to dispense with spice and informers in the Internal Revenue service.

THE MESSAGE AND DEPARTMENT REPORTS.

THE MESSAGE AND DEPARTMENT REPORTS.

The first amusal Message of Precident Grant was read in Congress on the 6th Instant. Il furnishes a brief but comprehensive summary of the domestic affairs of the country and its foreign relations. It calls attention to the general prosperity of the nation, to the fact that seven of the flains that passed ordinances of seconsion have been fully restored to their places in the Union; that the freedmen are making rapid progress in learning and the industrial arts; that the means of paying the interest on the public debt and meeting all other expenses of the government are more than ample, and congests that immediate attention should be given to the state of our commerce. The Message recummends such legislations as will insure a gredula return to specie payments, and put a sing to fluctuations in the value of currency. It also recommends the reaswall of the income tax, at a radaced rate, for three years. In regard to foreign relations the message rectives the successful measures adopted by the flowers ment to preserve neutrality in the contest between lipsia and the South American republics and the insurprens in Chas, and calls attention to the present state of the Alcohem negociations with Regisard. The President calls attention to the flowers insure a first the product of the Alcohem treaty, may soon be resumed and brought to a favorable termination. In regard to occan telegraph cables the President calls attention to the enclusion of American citizens from this assumption. He rights of American citizens from this assumption. He also extens that he will endeavor to secure by negotiation as absendentened of the principle of monopoly in occan telegraphic cables.

The Secretary of the Treasury calls attention to the reduction of excenses in his denartment, amounting rights of American citizens from this assemption. He also states that he will endeavor to secure by negotialities an abandouncest of the principle of monopoly in occan selegraphic cables.

The Secretary of the Treasury calls attention to the reduction of expenses in his department, amounting to over half a million dollars per amoun. He has made arrangements for the manufacture of paper for the currency and other obligations of the United States of the Children in the printing of the cenne, which will increase the security against counterfeiters. He states that, including interest camed and not paid, and deducting cash on hand, the debt of the United States on the let of March last was $2,250,500,100 of, and subject to the same conditions it was $2,430,50,100 at on the let of March last was $2,250,500,100 of, and subject to the same conditions it was $2,430,50,100 at on the let of the present month, showing a decrease of $1,500,500 at 5. The Secretary proposes to delay resuming specie payments until a part of the Fiver Twenty bonds can be funded in a new 44 per cent. gold lean, which be would limit to $1,000,600,00, or a most $1,500,600,000, one-third after twenty and within them; over years, one-third after twenty and within theirty years, for which Five-Twenties should be exchangeable, which Matlons backs should be required to krop set the base of their circulation, which should be payable after them and within theirty years, for which Five-Twenties should be exchangeable, which Matlons backs should be required to krop set the base of their circulation, which should be payable after them or at the leading money centres of Europe, as might be decired.

The Postmaster-General reports that there are in the United States $7,100 postmasters, an increase desired to past year of sin. Of these $20 are appointed by the Freedest and Sensie, and the last year here were received at the Dead-Latter Office $2,500,500 lecters. The money-order system has been a gratifying success. The brainess has grown from $1,500,100 in 100

ORNERAL NEWS ITEMS.

OBSERAL NEWS TIEMS.

In accordance with instructions from Washington the Spanish gun-hoats, detained at New York, were discharged from the custody of the United States authorities on December 10, and were taken possession of by the Spanish officials.

The season just closed presents a sad record for the Gloucester, Massachusetts, fishermen. Surteen vessels were wrecked, involving a pectiming loss of more than $34,000; and fifty six fishermen were drowned, leaving twenty-two widows and twenty-cipht faiberless children.

A San Francisco police justice has declared the California State law denying the Chinese the right to testify in the course to be in conflict with the Four-teenth Amendment.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Tue Genmenical Council was opened on the sch inst. by the Pope. The streets leading to the Vatican inst. by the Pope. The streets leading to the Vatican were crowded by the people as his Boliness, at the head of a procession of 100 hisbops, preceded to the half of the Council. The galleries of the half were tiled by sovereigns and princes and members of the corps stylematics. The ceremonies are described as excelling any thing in Rome for a century. On the 9th the Pope delivered an allocation before the bishops, in which he claimed that there was nothing to be feared in "false human science and worldly implety," because "the Church was stronger oven than Hearner." The Council has been adjourned until after Epiphany, and much opposition in expected to its reasonabling. The Pope reflex much on the support of the American Bishops.

The French "Yellow Book" says that Prance used her influence with the United States to bring shout the sympathy in the United States and South America with the Cuban insurports complicated the settlement.

Browney Abotics are the order of the fact in the

with the Cuban inserpents complicated the settlement.

Stormy debates are the order of the day in the French Corpe Legislatif. The irrepressible M. Rochmist on the 10th demanded the impressionant of M. Forcade, the Minister of the Interior. The scene which followed is described as unparalleled in the annals of the Chamber, and an adjournment was effected amidst great excitement.

The Lendon Press suggests the appointment of such men as George Ticktor Cirtis and William M. Everts to state the facts and the law in the Alebane case. The Edinburgh Sestemen has a report that Lord Claration will scour reopen negotiations for the estimation of the claims.

The Vicarcy of Egypt has yielded to the nithusium of the Baltan, and accepted the conditions imposed.

THE WAR IN CUBA-A DASH THROUGH THE WOODS.

THE WAR IN CUBA-THE CUBAN SCOUT.

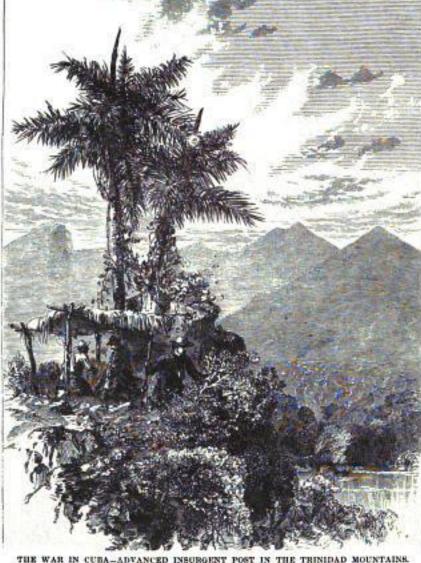

. THE WAR IN CUBA.

The war in Cuba presents many interesting and romantic features, some of which are depicted by our artist, whose sketches will be found on this page. The character of the country where the insurrection began, and has been carried on more successfully than in any other part of the island, is illustrated in the sketch showing an advanced post in the Trinidad Mountains. Wild and bold, and covered with dense forest, it is just the region for the operations of the scattered bands that compose the bulk of the insurrectionary forces. Under the protection of these mountains are organized raids into districts held rectionary forces. Under the protection of these mountains are organized raids into districts held by the Spanish troops; and to their friendly shelter the guerrillas return when their work has been accomplished. Another illustration represents a band of these guerrillas making a dash through the woods. The Spanish troops are sometimes drawn into ambusendes in these mountains, and are made to pay dearly for their termerity. Many stirring adventures are related. temerity. Many stirring adventures are related of "El Chico Balladares," a celebrated scout, who is constantly employed on this duty by the insurgents.

The most effective auxiliaries of the insurgents The most effective auxiliaries of the insurgents are found among the freedmen whom they have liberated from slavery on the plantations. These men, as shown in our illustrations, are armed with any weapons they can pick up—old flint locks, hayonets fastened to the end of a stick, lances, bayonets fastered to the end of a stick, lances, cane-knives, etc.; but in general they are employed for more efficient work than service in the field. They are sent out among the slaves on the Spanish plantations, where their presence is less likely to excite suspicion than that of white men would be, for the purpose of inciting them to insurrection. They are also employed, in connection with Chinamen, in the work of burning plantations, and do very effective service in this kind of warfare.

SPECTRUM ANALYSIS.

Or all recent discoveries in science, that cer-Or all recent discoveries in science, that cer-tainly is the most wonderful which enables us to ideftify a particle of matter almost too mi-nute to be conceived of, and to pronounce upon the composition of a body existing in remotest space. Such a power is given to us in spec-trum analysis, by means of which we detect the presence of 180,000,000th of a grain of sodium, and learn the constitution of the Dog-star, 130,000,000,000,000 of miles away. But what is the spectrum analysis? the unscientific reader may ask. The answer is difficult to give in pop-ular language; but we will attempt one. Every one has observed the band of color produced when light falls upon the triangular piece of glass we call a prism. That is a spectrum. Sir Isaac Newton first discovered that this band of glass we call a prism. That is a spectrum. Sir Isaac Newton first discovered that this band of color is produced by the decomposition of white light into its component colored rays. All white light—that of the sun, a candle, or a gas flame—shows this colored band, beginning with rod on the one side, and terminating with violet at the other. But if we introduce any single substance capable of glving color to a gas flame, the continuous band of color is broken up, and we see only a few bright lines of the same color as the flame. Further, if two or more substances capable of imparting different colors are simultaneously introduced into a flame, each substance is found to exhibit its characteristic lines of color in the spectrum, and thus an analysis is made of the mixture placed in the flame. An observer with a spectroscope at a fire-work display would be able to tell all the ingredients employed to produce the colored fires which excite so much wonder. The discovery that every element in nature gives a characteristic spectrum was soon fraitful of consequences; for as chemists have now the habit of observing every thing that comes to hand by means of the spectroscope, lines have been remarked which did not apparently belong to any known substance. Then chemical analysists took up the matter, and sepapparently belong to any known substance. Then chemical analysis took up the matter, and sep-arated out the unknown ingredient; and in this way, within the last few years, we have been made acquainted with five new elementary substances, and we may conjecture that others still remain to be discovered by the same means.

THE WAR IN CUBA-ADVANCED INSURGENT POST IN THE TRINIDAD MOUNTAINS.

AIMLESS EDUCATION.

HERE is a rich man's son, who has been edu-cated at great expense and pains, and who has graduated from college, and has come out a gen-tleman. He has studied, not with a view of theman. He has studied, not with a view of fitting himself for any avocation in life, but with a view of being a gentleman. He reads, not for the sake of knowing any thing, but for the sake of being a gentleman. Soon his father breaks down; and he, when he is about twenty-five years old, finds himself a poor man's son, and dependent on his own exertions. And he says to himself, "What shall I do for a living?" He asks his feet, and his feet say, "I do not know." He asks his hands, and they say, "I do not know." He asks his head, and it says, "I never learned any thing about how to get a living." There is bot one man that can befriend this poor wretch, and that is the sexton. Could any thing be more useless than such a person? Can there be any thing more pitiable than such histories?

THE WAR IN CUBA-INSURGENT PICKET OF FREEDMEN.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF GENERAL ADOLPH CAVADA, MILITARY DISTRICT OF CIENFUEGOS.

(Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1865, by HARVER & BROTHERS, in the Clerk's Office of the Dutrict Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.)

MAN AND WIFE.

By WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "The Monasone," etc., etc.

WITH ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

SECOND SCENE.-THE INN. CHAPTER THE NINTH. ANNE.

"Ye'll, just permit me to remind ye again, young leddy, that the Hottle's full—exceptin' only this settin' room, and the bedchamber younder belonging to it."

So spoke "Mistress Inchbare," landlady of the Craig Fernie Inn, to Anne Silvester, standing in the parlor, purse in hand, and offering the price of the two rooms before she claimed negroing to cover them.

permission to occupy them.

The time of the afternoon was about the time when Geoffrey Delamayn had started in the train, on his journey to London. About the time also, when Arueld Brinkworth had crossed the moor, and was mounting the first rising ground which led to the inn.

Mistress Inchbare was tall and thin, and decent and dry. Mistress Inchbare's unlovable hair clung fast round her head in wiry little yellow curls. Mistress Inchbare's hard bones showed shemselves, like Mistress Inchbare's hard Presbyterianism, without any concealment or compro-mise. In short, a savagely-respectable woman, who plumed herself on presiding over a savagely-respectable inn.

There was no competition to interfere with Mistress Inchbare. She regulated her own prices, and made her own rules. If you objected to her prices, and revolted from her rules, you were free to go. In other words, you were free to cast yourself, in the capacity of houseless wanderer, on the scanty mercy of a Scotch wilderness.
The village of Craig Fernie was a collection of hovels. The country about Craig Fernie, mountnin on one side and moor on the other, held no second house of public entertainment, for miles and miles round, at any point of the compass, No rambling individual but the helpless British Tourist wanted food and shelter from strangers, in that part of Scotland; and nobody but Mistress Inchbare had food and shelter to sell. A more thoroughly independent person than this was not to be found on the face of the hotel-keeping earth. The most universal of all civilkeeping earth. The most universal of all civil-ized terrors—the terror of appearing unfavorably in the newspapers—was a sensation absolutely nuknown to the Empress of the Inn. You lost your temper, and threstened to send her hill for exhibition in the public journals. Mistress Inch-bure raised no objection to your taking any course you pleased with it. "Eh, man! send the bill whar ye like, as long as ye juy it first. There's nee such thing as a psycapore eary darkers my mae such thing as a newspaper ever darkens my doors. Ye've got the Anid and New Testaments In your bedchambers, and the natural history o' Pairthshire on the coffee-room table—and if that's no' reading enough for ye, ye may een gae back South again, and get the rest of it there." This was the inn at which Anne Silvester had appeared alone, with nothing but a little bag in her hand. This was the woman whose relactance to receive her she innocessily expected to evercome by showing her purse.

"Mention your charge for the rooms," she said, "I am willing to pay for them beforehand."

Her majesty, Mrs. Inchbare, never even looked at her subject's poor little purse.

"It just comes to this, mistress," she answered. "I'm no' free to tak' your money, if I'm no' free to let ye the last rooms left in the hoose. The Craig Fernie hottle is a faimfly hottle—and has its ain gode name to keep up. Ye're over-well-looking, my young leddy, to be traveling alone."

The time had been when Anne would have traveling alone."

The time had been when Anne would have answered sharply enough. The hard necessities of her position made her patient now.

"I have already told you," she said, "my husband is coming here to join me." She sighed wearily as she repeated her ready-made story—and dropped into the nearest chair, from sheer inability to stand any longer.

Mistress Inchbare looked at her, with the exact measure of compassionate interest which she might have shown if she had been looking at a stray dog who had fallen footsore at the door of the inn.

the inn.

"Weel! weel as let it be. Bide awhile, and rest ye. We'll no chairge ye for that—and we'll see if your hasband comes. I'll just let the rooms, mistress, to him, instead o' bettin' them to yow. And, sae, good-morrow t' ye." With that final announcement of her royal will and pleasure, the Empress of the Inn withdrew.

Anne made no reply. She watched the landfady out of the room—and then signigled to control herself to longer. In her position, suspicion was doubly insult. The hot tears of shame gathered in her eyes; and the heart-nethe wrung her, poor soul—wrung her without mercy.

mercy.

A triffing noise in the soom startled her. She looked up, and detected a man in a corner, dusting the faratiture, and apparently acting in the capacity of attendant at the inn. He had shown her into the parlor on her arrival; but he had remained so quietly in the room that she had never noticed him since, until that moment.

He was an ancient man—with one ever filmy

He was an ancient man—with one eye filmy and blind, and one eye moist and merry. His head was held; his feet were gouty; his nose was justly celebrated as the largest nose and the reddest nose in that part of Scotland. The mild wisdom of years was expressed mysteriously in his mellow smile. In contact with this wicked ms menow same. In contact win this wicases world, his manner revealed that bappy mixture of two extremes—the servility which just touches independence, and the independence which just touches servility—attained by no men in existence but Scotchmen. Enormous native impadence, which amused but never offended; impadence, which amused but never offended; improvements and in the service of the serv measurable cunning, masqueroding habitually under the double disguise of quaint prejudice and day humor, were the solid moral founda-tions on which the character of this elderly person was built. No amount of whisky ever made him drunk; and no violence of bell-ringing ever hurried his movements. Such was the head-waiter at the Cruig Fernie Inn; known, far and wide, to local fame, as "Mnister Bishopriggs, Mistress Inchhare's right-hand man." "What are you doing there?" Anne naked, sharply.

Mr. Bishopriggs turned himself about on his gouty feet; waved his duster gently in the air; and looked at Anne, with a mild, paternal smile, "Eh! Am just doostin' the things; and settin' the room in decent order for ye

"For me? Did you hear what the landlady

Mr. Bishopriggs advanced confidentially, and pointed with a very unsteady forefinger to the purse which Anne still held in her hand.

"Never fish yoursel' about the landleddy!" said the sage chief of the Craig Fernie waiters. Your purse speaks for you, my lassie. Pet it p!" cried Mr. Bishopriggs, waving temptation With that seasonable pleasantry the venerable Bishopriggs winked, and went out. Anne looked at her watch. By her calculation it was not far from the hour when Geoffrey might be expected to arrive at the inn, assuming Geoffrey to have left Windygates at the time agreed on. A little more patience, and the land-lady's scruples would be satisfied, and the ordeal would be at an end.

Could she have met him nowhere else than at this barbarous house, and among these barbarous people?

No. Outside the doors of Windygates she had No. Outside the decre of winaygans are not not a friend to help her in all Scotland. There was no place at her disposal but the inn; and she had only to be thankful that it occupied a sequestered situation, and was not likely to be violed by any of Lady Landie's friends. Whatsequestered situation, and was not likely to be visited by any of Lady Landie's friends. What-ever the risk might be, the end in view justified her in confronting is. Her whole future de-pended on Geoffrey's making an honest woman of her. Not ber future with his-—that way there was no hope; that way her life was wasted. Her future with Blanche—the looked forward to nothing now but her future with Blanche. Her register was house and home. The team lifer spirits sank lower and lower. The tears rose again. It would only irritate him if he came and found her crying. She tried to divert her mind by looking about the room.

There was very little to see. Except that it was solidly built of good sound stone, the Craig Fernie hotel differed in no other important respect from the average of second-rate English inns. There was the usual allierery black wife. inns. There was the usual slippery black so constructed to let you slide when you wanted to

The door from the passage opened, and Arnold Brinkworth—shown in by Mr. Bishoprigge—emtered the sisting-room.
"Nobody here!" exclaimed Arnold, looking round. "Where is she?"

of the moment she flew to the bedchamber and locked herself in.

Mr. Bishopriggs pointed to the bedroom door.
"Eh! yer good leddy's joost in the bedcham-ber, nae doot!"

Arnold started. He had felt no difficulty. Arsold started. He had felt no difficulty (when he and Geoffrey had discussed the question at Windygates) about presenting himself at the inn in the assumed character of Anne's husband. But the result of putting the deception in practice was, to say the least of it, a little embarrassing at first. Here was the waiter describing Miss Silvester as his "good lady;" and leaving it (most naturally and properly) to the "good lady" husband to knock at her befroom door, and tell her that he was there. In despair of knowing what else to do at the moment. Arof knowing what else to do at the moment, Ar-nold asked for the landlady, whom he had not seen on arriving at the inn.

"The landleddy's just tottin' up the ledgers o' the hottle in her ain room," answered Mr. Bish-opriggs. "She'll be here anon-the wearyful opriggs. "She'll be nore anon—the wearyns wessan!—specin" who ye are and what ye are, and takin' a 'the business o' the hoose on her aim pair o' shouthers." He dropped the subject of the landlady, and put in a plea for himself. "I ha lookit after a' the leddy's little conforts, Sir," he whispered. "Trust in me! rust in me!"

Arnold's attention was absorbed in the very serious difficulty of announcing his arrival to Anne. "How am I to get her out?" he said to himself, with a look of perplexity directed at the bedroom door

He had spoken loud enough for the waiter to hear him. Arnold's look of perplexity was instantly reflected on the face of Mr. Bishopriggs. The head-waiter at Craig Fernie possessed an immense experience of the manners and customs of newly-married people on their honey-moon trip. He had been a second father (with excellent pacualary results) to innumerable brides and bridegrooms. He knew young married couples in all their varieties:—The couples who try to behave as if they had been married for many yours; the couples who attempt no concealment, and take advice from competent authorities about them. The couples who are hashfully talkative before third persons; the couples who are bushfully si-lent under similar circumstances. The couples lest under similar circamstances. The couples who don't know what to do; the couples who wish it was over; the couples who must never be intraded upon without careful preliminary knecking at the door; the couples who can eat and drink in the intervals of "blist," and the other couples who can't. But the bridegroom who stood helpless on one side of the door, and the hride who remained locked in on the other, were new varieties of the nuptial species, even in the vast experience of Mr. Bishopriggs himself.
"Heo are ye to get her oot?" he repeated, "I'll show ye hoo!" He advanced as rapidly as his gouty feet would let him, and knocked at the bedroom door, "Eh, my beldy! here be is in flesh and bluid. Mercy preserve us! do ye lock the door of the nuptial chamber in your husband's face?"

hand's face?"

that unanswerable appeal the lock was heard turning in the door. Mr. Bishopriggs winked at Arnold with his one available eye, and haid his forefinger knowingly along his enormous nose. "I'm away before she falls into your arms! Rely on it I'll no come in sgain without knocking first!"

He left Arnold alone in the room. The bedroom door opened slowly by a few inches at a time. Anne's voice was just andible, speaking cautionels habited.

cautiously behind it.
"Is that you, Geoffrey?"

Arnold's heart began to beat fast, in anticipa-tion of the disclosure which was now close at hand. He knew neither what to say or do-he remained silent.

Anne repeated the question in loader tones:
"Is that you?"
There was the certain prospect of alarming ber, if some reply was not given. There was no help for it. Come what come might, Arnold answered, in a whisper:

"Yes." The door was flung wide open. Anne Sil-vester appeared on the threshold, confronting

"Mr. Brinkworth!!!" she exclaimed, standing petrified with astonishment.

For a moment more neither of them spoke.

For a moment more nesther of them spoke.

Anne advanced one step into the sitting-room, and put the next ineritable question, with an instantaneous change from surprise to suspicion.

"What do you want here?"

Geoffrey excuse for Arnold's appearance in that place, and at that time.

"I have got a letter for you," he said—and offered it to ber.

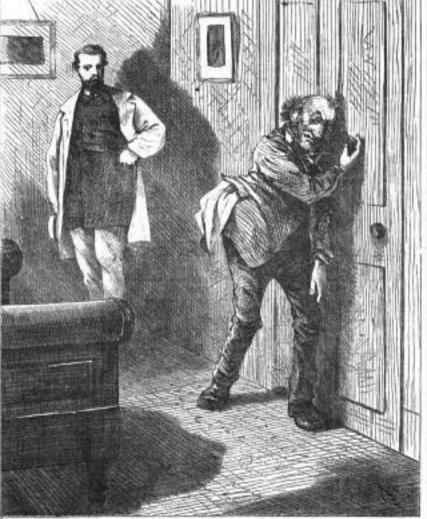

She was instantly on her guard. They were

She was instantly on her guard. They were little better than strangers to each other, as Arnold had said. A sickening presentiment of some treachery on Geoffray's part struck cold to ber heart. She refused to take the letter.

"I expect no letter," she said. "Who told you I was here?" She put the question, not only with a tone of suspicion, but with a look of contempt. The look was not an easy one for a man to bear. It required a momentary exertion of self-control on Arnold's part, before he could trust himself to enswer with due consideration for her. ," Is there a watch set on my actions?" she went on, with rising anger. "And are you the spy?"

"You haven't known me very long, Miss Silvanda."

"You haven't known me very long, Miss Silvester," Arnold answered, quietly. "But you ought to know me better than to say that. I am the bearer of a letter from Geoffrey." She was on the point of following his example,

"EH, MY LEDDY! HERE HE IS IN PLESH AND BLUID."

away from him with the doster. "In wi' it into yer pocket! See long as the warld's the warld. I'll uphend it any where—while there's siller in the purse, there's gude in the woman!"

Anne's patience, which had resisted barder trials, gave way at this.

"What do you mean by speaking to me in that familiar manner?" she asked, rising angrily that familiar manners to her feet again.

Mr. Bishoprings tacked his duster under his arm, and proceeded to satisfy Anne that he shared the landlady's view of her position, without sharing the severity of the landlady's princi-ples, "There's me man livin'," said Mr. Bish-opeiggs, "looks with mair indulgence at human frailty than my ain sel". Am I no to be familiar opeiggs, "looks with man frailty than my ain sel". Am I no to be familiar wi ye—when I'm anid energh to be a fether to ye, and ready to be a fether to ye till further notice? Heeh! Order your bit dinner, lassie. Husband or no husband, ye're got a must een eat. There's fesh stomach, and ye must een eat. There's fesh and there's fewl—or, maybe, ye'll be for the sheep's head singit, when they've done with it at the tabble dot?"

There was but one way of getting rid of him:
"Order what you like," Anne said, "and leave the room." Mr. Bishopriggs highly approved of the first half of the sentence, and totally overthe first half of the sentence, and totally over-leoked the second.

"Ay, ay—just pet a' yer little interests in my hands; it's the wisest thing ye can do. Ask for Maister Bishopriggs (that's me) when ye want a decent 'sponsible men to gi' ye a word of advice. Set ye doon again—set ye doon. And don't tak' the arm-chair. Hech! hech! yer husband will be coming, ye know, and he's sure to want it!"

rest. There was the usual highly-varnished arm-chair, expressly manufactured to test the en-durance of the human spine. There was the usual paper on the walls, of the pattern designed isial paper on the wais, of the pattern designed to make your eyes ache and your head giddy. There were the usual engravings, which humanity never tires of contemplating. The Royal Portrait, in the first place of honov. The next greatest of all human beings—the Duke of Wellington—in the second place of honor. The third greatest of all human beings—the local member of parliament—in the third place of honor; and a hunting second in the dark. A door conceder hunting scene, in the dark. A door opposite the door of admission from the passage opened into the bedroom; and a window at the side looked out on the open space in front of the ho-tel, and commanded a view of the vast expense of the Craig Fernie moor, stretching away be-low the rising ground on which the house was Anne turned in despoir from the view in the room to the view from the window. Within the last half hour it had changed for the worse. The clouds had gathered; the son was hidden; the light on the landscape was gray and dull. Anne turned from the window, as she had turned from the room. She was just making the hopeless attempt to making the making the hopeless attempt to making the hopeless attempt th tempt to rest her weary limbs on the sofa, when the sound of voices and footsteps in the passage caught her ear.

Was Geoffrey's voice among them? No.

Were the strangers coming in? The landlady had declined to let her have the rooms: it was quite possible that the strangers might be coming to look at them. There was no knowing who they might be. In the impulse and of speaking of Geoffrey by his Christian name, on her side. But she checked herself, before the word had passed her lips. "Do you mean Mr. Delamayn?" she asked,

"What occasion have I for a letter from Mr. Delamayu?

She was determined to acknowledge nothingshe kept him obstimately at arm's length. Ar-nold did, as a matter of instinct, what a man of larger experience would have done, as a matter of calculation—he closed with her boldly, then

Miss Silvester! it's no use beating about the bush. If you won't take the letter, you force me to speak out. I am here on a very unpleasant errand. I begin to wish, from the bottom of my heart, I had never undertaken it."

A quick spasm of pain passed across her face, She was beginning, dimly beginning, to under-stand him. He hesitated. His generous nature stand him. He besitated. His gene shrank from burting her. "Go on," she said, with an effort.

"Try not to be angry with me, Miss Silvester. Geoffrey and I are old friends. Geoffrey knows he can trust me "Trust you?" she interposed. "Stop!"

Arnold waited. She went on, speaking to her-lf, not to him.

"When I was in the other room I asked if Geoffrey was there. And this man answered for him." She sprang forward with a cry of

Has be told you-

"For God's sake, read his letter!" She riolently pushed back the hand with which Arnold once more offered the letter. "You don't look at me! He has told you!"

"Read his letter," persisted Arnold. "In justice to him, if you won't in justice to me,"
The situation was too painful to be endured. Arnold looked at her, this time, with a man's resolution in his eyes—spoke to her, this time, with a man's resolution in his voice. She took

"I beg your pardon, Sir," she said, with a sudden humiliation of tone and manner, inex-pressibly shocking, inexpressibly pitiable to see. "I sudderstand my position at last. I am a wo-man doubly betrayed. Please to excuse what I said to you just now, when I supposed myself to have some claim on your respect. Perhaps you will grant me your pity? I can sak for nothing

Arnold was silent. Words were useless in the face of such utter self-abandonment as this. Any man living—even Geoffrey himself—must hav felt for her at that moment.

She looked for the first time at the letter, he opened it on the wrong side, "My own She opened it on the wrong side. "My own She opened it on the wrong side. "In the hands of another man!"

"Look at the last page," said Arnold.

She turned to the last page, and read the hurried penciled lines. "Villain! villain! villain!" At the third repetition of the word, she crushed the letter in the palm of her hand, and flung it from her to the other end of the room. The instant after, the fire that had flamed up in her died out. Feebly and slowly she reached out her hand to the nearest chair, and sat down in it. her hand to the nearest chair, and sat down in it with her back to Arnold. "He has deserted with her back to Arnold. "He has deserted me!" was all the said. The words fell low and quiet on the silence: they were the utterance of an immeasurable despair.

"You are wrong!" exclaimed Arnold. "Indeed, indeed you are wrong! It's no excuse—it's the truth. I was present when the message came about his father."

She never beeded him, and never moved. She only repeated the words: "He has deserted me!"

"Don't take it in that way!" pleaded Arnold—
"pray don't! It's dreadful to hear you; it is indeed. I am sure he has not deserted you." There was no answer; no sign that she heard him; she sat there, struck to stone. It was impossible to call the landledy in at such a moment as this. In deepair of knowing how che to rouse her, Arnold drew a chair to her side, and patted her timidly on the shoulder. "Come!" d, in his single-hearted, boyish way. "Cheer

She slowly turned her head, and looked at him with a dull surprise.

"Didn't you say he had told you every thing?"

she asked.

"Don't you despise a woman like me?"

Arnold's beart went back, at that dreadful question, to the one woman who was eternally eacred to him—to the woman from whose bosom he had drawn the breath of life.

"Does the man live," he said, "who can think

That answer set the prisoned misery in her free. She gave him her hand—she faintly thanked him. The merciful tears came to her at last.

Arnold rose, and turned away to the window in despair. "I mean well, be said. "And yet I only distress her?"

She heard him, and struggled to compose herself. "No," she answered, "you comfort me. Don't mind my crying—I'm the better for it." She looked round at him gratefully. "I won't distress you, Mr. Brinkworth. I ought to thank you—and I do. Come back, or I shall think you are angry with me." Arnold went back to her. She gave him her hand once more. "One are angry with me." Arnold went back to her. She gave him her hand once more, "One doesn't understand people all at once, "she said, simply. "I thought you were like other men—I didn't know till to-day how kind you could be. Did you walk here?" she added, suddenly, with an effort to change the subject. "Are you thred? I have not been kindly received at this place—but I'm sure I may offer you whatever the inn affords."

It was impossible not to feel for her-it was impossible not to be interested in her. Arnold's honest longing to help her expressed itself a little too openly when he spoke next. "All I want, Miss kilvester, is to be of some service to you, if I can," he said. "Is there any thing I can do to make your position here more comfortable?" to make your position here more comfortable? You will stay at this place, won't you? Geoffrey

She shuddered, and looked away. "Yes!

"You will hear from Geoffrey," Arnold went on, "to-morrow or next day. I know he means write.

to write."

"For Heaven's sake, don't speak of him any more!" she cried out. "How do you think I can look you in the face—" Her cheeks flushed deep, and her eyes rested on him with a momentary firmness. "Mind this! I am his wife, if promises can make me his wife! He has pledged his word to me by all that is sacred!" She checked herself impatiently. "What am I say. checked herself impatiently. "What am I say, ing? What interest can you have in this miserable state of things? Don't let us talk of it! I have something else to say to you. Let us go back to my troubles here. Did you see the land-lady when you came in ?"

"No. I only saw the waiter."

"The landledy has made some absurd difficulty about letting me have these rooms because I came here alone."

"She won't make any difficulty now," said mold. "I have settled that." Arnold.

Arnold smiled. After what had passed, it was indescribable relief to him to see the humor-an indescribable relief to him to see the humor-ous side of his own position at the inn.

"Certainly," he answered. "When I saked for the lady who had arrived here alone this aft-

"I was told, in your interests, to ask for her as my wif

Anne looked at him-in alarm as well as in

"You asked for me as your wife?" she repeated.

"Yes. I haven't done wrong—have I? As I understood it, there was no alternative. Gooffrey told me you had settled with him to present yourself here as a married lady, whose husband was coming to join her."
"I thought of him when I said that. I never thought of you."

"Natural enough. Still, it comes to the same thing (doesn't it?) with the people of this house."
"I don't understand you."
"I don't understand you."

"I don't understand you."
"I don't understand you."
"I will try and explain myself a little better.
Geoffrey said your position here depended on my asking for you at the door (as he would have saked for you if he had come) in the character of some hadron."

of your hashand."

"He had no right to say that."

"No right? After what you have told me of the landlady, just think what might have happened if he had not said it! I haven't had much experience myself of these things. But—allow me to ask—wouldn't it have been a little awkward (at my age) if I had come here and in-quired for you as a friend? Don't you think, in that case, the landlady might have made some additional difficulty about letting you have the

It was beyond dispute that the landlady would have refused to let the rooms at all. It was equally plain that the deception which Arnold had practiced on the people of the inn was a de-ception which Anne had berself rendered necessary, in her own interests. She was not to blame it was clearly impossible for her to have foreseer such an event as Geoffrey's departure for Lon-don. Still, she felt an uneasy sense of responsi-bility—a vague dread of what might happen next. She sat nervously twisting her handkerchief in

"Don't suppose I object to this little strata-gem," Arnold went on. "I am serving my old friend, and I am helping the lady who is soon to Anne rose abruptly to her feet, and amazed him by a very unexpected question.

"Mr. Brinkworth," she said, "forgive me the rudeness of something I am about to say to you.

When are you going away?"

Arnold burst out laughing.
"When I am quite sure I can do nothing more to assist you," he answered.

"Pray don't think of see any longer

"In your situation! who else am I to think

Anne laid her hand earnestly on his arm, and " Blanche!"

"Bianche?" repeated Arnold, utterly at a lose to inderstand her.

"Yes—Blanche. She found time to tell me what had passed between you this morning before I left Windygates. I know you have made her an offer. I know you are engaged to be married to her." Arnold was delighted to hear it. He had been nerely unwilling to leave her thus far. He was sheelately determined to stay with her now. "Don't expect me to go after that!" he said.

"Come and sit down again, and let's talk about Blanche."

Blanche."

Anne declined impatiently, by a gesture. Arnold was too deeply interested in the new topic to take any notice of it.

"You know all about her habits and her tastes," he went on, "and what she likes, and what she dislikes. It's most important that I should talk to you about her. When we are husband and wife, Blanche is to have all her own way in every thing. That's my idea of the Whole way in every thing. That's my idea of the Whole Duty of Man-when Man is married. You are still standing? Let me give you a chair."

It was cruel-under other circumstances it

It was croel-under other circumstances it would have been impossible—to disappoint him. But the vague fear of consequences which had taken possession of Anne was not to be trifled with. She had no clear conception of the risk (and it is to be added, in justice to Geoffrey, that is had no clear conception of the risk) on which Arnold had unconsciously rentured, in undertaking his errand to the inn. Neither of them had any adequate idea (few people have) of the infamous absence of all needful warning, of all decent precantion and restraint, which makes the marriage law of Scotland a tree to each numerical men law of Scotland a trap to catch unmarried men and women, to this day. But, while Geof-frey's mind was incapable of looking beyond the present emergency, Anne's finer intelligence told her that a country which offered such facilities for private marriage as the facilities of which she had proposed to take advantage in her own case, was not a country in which a man could act as Arnold had acted, without danger of some serious embarrassment following as the possible result. With this motive to animate her, she resolutely declined to take the offered chair, or to enter into the proposed conversation.

"Whatever we have to say about Blanche,
Mr. Brinkworth, must be said at some fitter

Mr. Brinkworth, must be said as some most time. I beg you will leave me."

"Leave you!"

"Yes. Leave me to the solitude that is best for me, and to the sorrow that I have deserved. Thank you—and good-by."

Arnold made no attempt to disguise his dis-

Arnold made to attempt to diagnose his dis-appointment and surprise.

"If I must go, I must," he said. "But why are you in such a hurry?"

"I don't want you to call me your wife again before the people of this isn."

"Is that all? What on earth are you afraid

She was unable fully to realize her own appre them was unate they to reside her own apprehensions. She was doubly unable to express them in words. In her anxiety to produce some reason which might prevail on him to go, she drifted back into that very conversation about Blanche into which she had declined to enter but the research before but the moment before.

"I have reasons for being afraid," she said.
"Que that I can't give; and one that I can.
Suppose Blanche heard of what you have done?
The longer you stay here—the more people you ger you stay here—the more people you more chance there is that she might boar of it.

"And what if she did?" asked Arnold, in his own straightforward way. "Do you think she would be angry with me for making myself useful to you?"

"You," rejoined Arme, sharply, "if she was

Arnold's unlimited belief in Blanche expres itself, without the slightest compromise, in two

"That's impossible!"
Anxious as she was, miserable as she was, a faint smile flitted over Anne's face.
"Sir Patrick would tell you, Mr. Brinkworth, that nothing is impossible where women are concerned." She dropped her momentary lightness comed." She stopped her momentary lightness. of tone, and went on as carneady as ever. "You can't put yourself in Blanche's place—I can. Once more, I beg fou to go. I don't like your coming here, in this way! I don't like it at all!"

She held out her hand to take leave. At the ame moment there was a loud knock at the door

Anne sank into the chair at her side, and uttered a faint cry of alarm. Arnold, perfectly impenetrable to all sense of his position, asked what there was to frighten her—and answered the knock in the two customary words:

ST. BERNARD DOGS.

Ir is chiefly during the eight or nine most of winter that the great qualities of the dogs of the Hospice of the Great St. Bernard are called into action. They serve as guides to small car-avans of travelers, and to such as have strayed from the right direction. They also track those that have been lost in the deep snows or buried by avalanches. For these purposes their assist-ance is quite indispensable. Of course there can not be any question of beaten tracks in yonder dreary solitudes, where the snow is often forty feet deep; and even the conventuals and serv-ants of the convent would, notwithstanding their familiar acquaintance with the country, in times of fogs and storms, never find their way without the assistance of those keen-scented animals. Generally a servant accompanies the dogs cont out on their accustomed rounds; they scarcely ever go alone. But on extraordinary occasions, in thick fugs, thunder-storms, and snow-storms, the whole population of the convent will turn out cordials, and every thing necessary in cases of accident.

Not less than two dogs are ever sent out—one of them an old, well-trained animal, which will serve as an instructor and trainer to the younger one. Should an accident happen to one of them, the other will go for assistance.

The work of brotherly love to which the monks of the Great St. Bernard devote themselves is at-tended with great perils. Many fall victims to the fatigues of their laborious calling, and more than one of those noble men have found graves beneath avalanches and in deep anow-drifts.

When we hear of the thousands whose lives

When we hear of the thousands whose lives have been saved by those invaluable animals, we are not to understand that so many have been dug out from beneath avalanches with their assistance. They will track those who, having lost their way, are lying in the snow half bennmbed with cold; they will encourage, by barking violently, such as, from exhaustion and despair, have send down to their last sleep and call in have sunk down to their last sleep, and call up assistance whenever their efforts are unavailing. The deep tracks they leave in the snow have guided many a one to the hospitable halls of the Hospice. Their constant loud baying on expeditions of mercy has been heard by many a for-lorn wanderer, who was thus enabled to make known his situation to the brave men sent out to for travelers lost in the snow.

The climate of the Great St. Bernard is excessively rude; even in midsummer the mercury never rises higher than 16 degrees above neve, according to Résumur; in winter it sinks down to 27 degrees below the freezing-point. There are but very few clear and unclouded days during the whole year. The nights are always cold; while a small Alpine lake, situated south of the Hospice, occasionally remains frozen up for ser-eral years in succession. The average tempera-ture is, according to the most careful meteoro-logical observations, the same as that of the southern point of Spitzbergen.

It is quite natural, under these circumstar that but few animals will stand the rigorous eli-mate of those mountain regions; and we can easily appreciate the love and anxious care which the monks of the Great St. Bernard bestow upon the mones of the Great St. Bernard bestow upon the rearing and preservation of the brave, won-derfully-gifted animals.

The most celebrated of all these dogs was Barry. His successes exceeded those of any other dog of his race. His intelligence and smis-bility were almost human. During a life of lit-tle more than twelve years he saved the lives of forty-gift travelers—some any over then the more than twelve years he saved the myes or forty-eight travelers—some say even more than seventy. Nothing is said to have equaled his pleasure when he had succeeded in saving a traveler from pecishing in the snow. He used to manifest his satisfaction by joyful leaps, herking, wagging his tail—in short, in every conceivable way. Whenever he found a lost traveler lytem in the snow, herumbed with cold, he would ble way. Whenever he found a lost traveler ly-ing in the snow, benumbed with cold, he would endeaver to warm him with his breath, or by stretching himself at full length over his body, until his companion dog had brought up assis-ance from the Hospice. Once he brought to life a child, by continued caresses induced him to mount his back, and thus carried him to the

Many of those dogs perished while thus ful-filling their mission. The most tragical fare, however, was that which Barry himself not with more than fifty years ago. One day, hav-ing found a man nearly frozen to death in the snow—a descript from the Austrian army—the snow—a deserter from the Austrian army noble animal by uncessing efforts succeeded in resuscitating him. The soldier, unable to ac-count for the presence of a dog in that dreary solitude, frightened out of his wits by its incessant howis, and fancying it to have been sent out by his pursuers to track him, drew his sabre and by ms pursuess to track him, drew his sabre and plunged it into the beart of his deliverer. Thus died the noblest dog that ever lived. Barry's skin has been carefully stuffed, and is now ex-hibited in the Museum of Natural History at Berne. This noble creature was considered the most perfect type of the pure breed of the St. Bernardine dog.

Mr. Schumachen, at Holligen, abo

from Berne, Switzerland, keeps an establishment for breeding those dogs, which he is very proud of showing to visitors. It consists of an inclosof showing to visitors. It consists of an inclos-ure of about one-fourth of an acre, in the shape of a parallelogram, funced in with iron wire, in which the dogs have ample room to take exercise. There are also in opposite corners several spacious kennels. In this inclosure twelve or fifteen magnificent dogs are always kept. It is a truly gratifying sight to see these noble beasts, not merely for dog-fanciers, but for all who love to see the perfection of nature. They are almost under a title part to reclosed water on their so see me perrection of nature. They are almost fluwhite, with large tan-colored spots on their fluwheads, cars, backs, and tails, and average about six or seven hands in height. They are especially remarkable for size of head, strength of neck, width of chest, and for their powerful legs and feet—the peculiar marks of the breed. legs and feet—the pecuhar marks of the breed. Every visitor is struck by the quiet and intelli-gent expression of their eyes, and their lordly carriage. They may be called the gentlemen among dogs. Gentle dogs they are truly—noble, generous, royal fellows, far beyond the common plebelan run of curs. They will hunt neither bird nor beast; they will not assist in the de-struction of any thing living; but I verily believe that in a case of emergency they will not flinch structure of any tining using; but I very believe that in a case of emergency they will not flinch from any danger, in whatever shape it may pre-sent itself—they will either conquer or die. The only real business those royal beasts should ever be put to is that of saving and protecting men's lives. They are faithful to their master, but in-different to all advances or currence of strangers. different to all advances or caresses of strangers.

Mr. Schungcher, some time ago, possessed a dog of this breed, named Sultan, which at the International Exhibition at Paris won the only first prize then given for dogs. A more perfect specimen of pure dog-blood was never beheld. We regret to say that Sultan died last summer. We regret to say that Sultan died last summer. By far the greater part of Mr. S.'s dogs, however, show blood as pure as Sultan's, some of them even resembling old Barry in point of color and spots. All the dogs of the true Barry type have hair of medium length, scarcely ever attaining an inch and a half. Nature, however, will have and of medium length, scarcely ever attaining an inch and a half. Nature, however, will have her freaks. Sometimes pupples are born whose hair will grow long and allky, between two and three inches in length; others with very short hair, scarcely an inch long, all at the same birth with pupples that are considered to be of the true Barry or St. Bernardine breed—that is to say, with hair of medium length. This is ascribed to the fact that the original ancestors of the St. Bernardine breed—as far back as the fourteenth century, were, it is said, a very short-haired Danish bull-dog and a long-haired shapherd bitch from the Pyrenees. Of course only such specimens are selected for breeding as show the true Barry type; but, as we have already said, Nature will have her own ways; and oreasionally return to original forms. The reason why the return to original forms. The reason why the beautiful long-haired specimens are not consid-ered to be of the true St. Bernardine type is The reason why the simply because their long hair is liable to be clogged with snow to such a degree as seriously to hinder the animal in the exercise of its duties by the weight of the snow. But though these long-haired specimens are thus unfit for the special duties of Hospice dogs, they exhibit the same noble qualities of character, nor are they in any other way inferior to the dogs of the Barry type. In a similar way a cost of very short hair will unfit dogs for Hospice service, because it does not afford sufficient protection against the inclemency of the weather. These dogs of the gennine Barry breed all have a growth of short, downy hair beneath the outside coat. This is probably the same double coat of hair which is also found upon many animals of northern clogged with snow to such a degree as seriously is also found upon many animals of northern cases turned to the left.

Dogs of the true Barry breed are distinguished by double spurs on their hind-legs, and by a long tail in the shape of an f, the tip of which is al-ways curied up, and, singularly enough, in most cases turned to the left.

A belief had been prevalent for many years that the true breed of the St. Bernard had become extinct. This was not quite correct; but it is an arknowledged fact that, owing to the negligence, carelessneas, and ignorance of breeders, it was on the surest road to degeneration and ultimate extinction. It is chiefly the merit of Mr. Scaumacuna that the true breed has been recovered. By carefully selecting his breeding animals he at last succeeded in obtaining. ing animals he at last succeeded in obtaining dogs which, in every point, are the equals of their celebrated anosator Barry. A few years ago he made a present of a pair of those perfect animals to the convent. One of the old monks who, in his younger days, had known old Barry, on seeing them was moved to tears, and exclaimed: "Great God! there is old Barry!" The Prior of the Hospics of the Great St. Bernard had a certificate drawn up in which, with his seal and hand, he testified to the genuineness of the breed; and it was partly owing to this document Mr. Schumachen obtained the first prize at the Paris Exhibition—a gold medal.

There are seven splendid pupples in a sepa-rate compartment of the inclosure, giving great promise of equaling their ancestors. Two of them are almost exact counterparts of their great ancestor Barry.

The illustrations given on page 829 repre-

1. Old Barry, whose stuffed skin is now at the Museum of Natural History in Berne.
 2. The dog Favorite, a splendid long-haired variety.

3. Young Barry, and two other dogs of the Barry type, grouped in the inclosure, with kennel in the back-ground.

WALTER SCOTT AT WORK.

EVEN when his eyes were failing, and his fingors gouty, Walter Scott frequently threw off thirty or forty pages of print before dinner—that, in fact, was his task when he was at work upon "Woodstock" and the "Life of Napoleon;" and till he had accomplished that, he did not think himself at liberty to take his axe and stroll out into the wood for an hour's sharp exercise. In his prime, he thought nothing of throwing off a novel in a mouth. "Guy Mannering" was written in six weeks about Christma, and that he thought easy work. Very frequently, however, Sir Walter had a brace of novels on hand together. er, or a novel and a prace of novels on hand together, or a novel and a poem, or two or three reviews for the Edwards and the Quarterly. "Ivanhoe" and the "Monastery" were written together like this; and he took up the story of "Woodstock" as a diversion to kill time when he was ahead of the press with his "Life of Napoleon." Hasty work in literature is not generally the highest kind of work; and of course there is in all Sir Walter Scott's works much that is thin and rambling, and want. But with that is thin, and rambling, and vapid. But with Sir Walter Scott literature was not an art, but a trade. What was good enough for the public, was good enough for him; and his cardinal test was good enough for him; and his cardinal test of the value of his work was the price of its copy-right and its sale. In poetry, he wrote by in-spiration; taking up his pen, like Byron, only when the fit was upon him; but when at work upon a nevel or a history, all he thought of was to get through his task; and if he was not in the vein when he took up his pen, he simply wrote on, as he said, till he "wrote himself into goodhumor." This was not generally a very hard task; and when he had got into a good-humor with his work, he wrote on as freely and as gay-ly as he talked. His manuscripts testify sufficiently to this. In his poems you meet with stances that are hardly legible with blots and interlineations; but the manuscripts of his novels are as free from every thing of this description as his correspondence. You may turn over page after page without finding a single correction. He never boggled over a senterfee, or cast about for an expression. "His thoughts," as his amanuesis said, "flowed easily and felicitously, without any difficulty to lay hold of them, or to find appropriate language. He sat in his chair (when dictaing), from which he rose now and then, or keep the product of the control took a volume from the book-case, consulted it, and restored it to the shelf—all without interand restored it to the shelf—all without inter-mission in the current of ideas, which continued to be delivered with no less readiness than if his mind had been wholly occupied with the words he was uttering." When dialogue of peculiar animation was in progress, James Ballantyne says Scott walked up and down the room, rais-ing and lowering his voice, and, as it were, act-ing the parts. The file-work Scott left to the resisters and of several of his stories he did not ing the parts. The file-work Scott left to the scinter; and of several of his stories he did not printer; even see the proofs till they were in the hands of the public. With the exception of the "Lay," I doubt whether he ever read any of his poems after they were published. He liked that better than he anticipated; but I do not think the perusal increased his opinion of the critical discernment of the public. He was "never fund of his own poetry;" and when Ballantyne told him that the "Lord of the Isles" and "Rokeby" were pal-ing in the glare and glitter of "Childe Harold" and the "Gisour," he shandoned the laurel wreath and the "Giaour," he abandoned the laurel wreath to Byron without a struggle, and almost without a sigh. "Since one line has falled," he said, "we must strike out something else."

This was the spur under which he took up the abandoned manuscript of "Waverley," which had been lying among the fishing-tackle of an old drawer for seven or eight years, and threw off the second and third volumes in three weeks. When, in turn, the novels of the "Author of "Waverley" began to pall upon a taste which likes its fiction fresh and fresh, Scott left the field to his imitators, and turned to history. field to his imitators, and tress, Scott set the field to his imitators, and turned to history. "There is but one way," he said, "if you wish to be read—you must strike out something novel to suit the humor of the hour;" and that was the principle by which he was governed all through his career. It was not a very lofty principle to act upon; with a weaker man it might have been a dangerous principle, ending, as in the case of Byron, in the complete demoralization of his genius. In Scott, however, it led to nothing genins. In Scott, however, it led to nothing more than a variation of style. The most vo-luminous author of an age not particularly dis-tinguished by the purity of its literature or mor-als, the contemporary of Byron and Moore, and the personal friend of George IV., an author, too, who avowedly set his sails to catch the pep-ular breeze, Sir Walter Scott never allowed his genius to pollute itself by any thing that, as a man, he could blush for. Talking over his writings at the close of his career with a friend, and contrasting their tone with that of Goothe's. and contrasting their tone with that of Goethe's, Sir Walter said, with a flush of pride: "It is a comfort to me to think that I have tried to un-settle no man's faith, to corrupt no man's princi-ple, and that I have written nothing which on my death-bed I should wish blotted," And his boast

THE AUBORA.

The spectroscope is continuously revealing new wonders in the departments of physics—even astronomy. A Swedish astronomer, Angström, has succeeded on several occasions in obtaining the spectrum of the luminous are which bounds the dark circle of the surcers. The light of this are is almost monochromatic, and exhibits a single brilliant band, situated to the left of the well-known group of calcine lines, and (which is very remarkable) not coinciding with any of the known known group of calcine lines, and (which is very remarkable) not coinciding with any of the known rays or bands of simple or compound gases. An-other circumstance which, as the discoverer ob-serves, gives a special and almost cosmical im-portance to this observation, is this; namely, he succeeded in observing the spectrum of the adi-acal light, and here the same bright band was seen. "Indeed," he adds, "during a starlight night, when the sky was almost phosphorescent, I found traces of this band visible from all parts of the beavens." In addition to the bright band, he also observed in the auroral spectrum traces be also observed in the auroral spectrum traces of three feeble bands, situated near to the line F of the solar spectrum. Augstrüm's observations on the aurora were corrected to the winter of 1867-68, and have since been confirmed by hi self and several other physicists. The spectro-scopic examination of the zodiacal light com-pletely overthrows the view generally held by astronomers, that this phenomenon is due to the reflection of the sun's light from a belt of meteors circulating between the sun and the earth; and shows that, like the auroral light, it must be due to magnetic disturbance in the firmament. It may startle some of our readers to learn that, according to Dr. Mayer, of Heilbronn, the true discoverer of the law of the conservation of forces. the aurora is indirectly due to the trade-winds. In a very elaborate memoir which Dr. Mayer read at the September meeting of the German Scientific and Medical Association, in which he discussed a variety of questions arising out of his theory of the conservation of forces, he stated that, in his opinion, the phenomena of terrestrial magnetism are due to the trade winds. magnetism are due to the trade-winds. He sums up his reasons as follows: The lowest strata of the trade-winds assume, by friction with the surface of the sea, an electrical condition, the opposite of that of the water. The air then rises under the warmth of the sun, and the colder rises under the warmth of the sun, and the colder air from the pole streams in underneath, driving it toward the pole, when, from its high state of electric tension, it produces the aurora. He electric tension, it produces the aurora. He adds that the constant disturbance of electrical equilibrium which is manifested by the frequently varying direction of the magnetic needle is due to the greater electric activity of the southern hemisphere than of the northern, owing to the whether the physical conformation of the globe.

CYMBELINE.

HARD by the garden-seat, Where rose and woodbine meet, And all sad things are sweet, Stands Cymbeline.

Where, through the trellised leaves The wan moon softly weaves A chain of light, that cleaves O'er her sweet face, Faith keepeth watch above, But false the faith thereof, While at her feet lies Love, For love of her.

Amid red roses' breath, hat sicken unto death, My Lady stays and saith, Not any thing.

The trembling leaves are sad, And Love with Grief is clad, Not any thing is glad, Because of her.

She tarrieth in vain,

For her swarth knight is slain,
And cometh not again,

To Cymbeline,

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A Pans policeman being summoned into the pres-ence of a man who had just abor himself dead, after severely wounding a lady, displayed his anxiety to arrive at the facts in the case by excitedly demanding of the only surviving winess of the fray, "Did this man kill himself before he fired at this lady, or not?"

THE SEA.

There are certain things—as a spider, a ghost, The income tax, goot, an unibrells for three-That I hate; but the thing that I hate the mo-is a thing they call the ees.

If you like coffee with sand for dregs, A decided hint of ealt in your tes, And a fishy taste in the very eggs, By all means choose the soa.

And if, with these dainties to drink and est, You prefer not a vestige of grass or tree, And a chronic state of wet in your feet, Then I recommend the sea.

A gentleman once asked, "What is woman?" when a married man replied, "She is an essay on grace, in one volume, elegantly bound. Although it may be dear, every man abould have a copy of it."

SKATING WITH A GIRL I're sounded each depth in the waters of pleasure, And gone every round in their addying whirl: And I'll tell you the truth—there's nothing can meas

And I have you were the first with a pirk.

The fun of a winter night's skate with a pirk.

Now onward we dash, o'er the key track flying.

And banished forever are sorrow and pain.

A fall i But no matter—there's nothing like trying.

So take her up gottly, and onward again.

Then give me the kee with a joily good skate, with my own darling girl, and I'll whistle at fate.

"Boy, may I inquire where Holdmon's drug store is?" "Certainly, Sir," replied the boy, very respec-fully. "Well, Sir," said the gentleman, after waiting a while, "where is in?" "I have not the least idea, your Honor," said the urchin.

How to make a strengthening Besett per Isva-ture.—Take a gallon and a balf, or thereabout, of pure water; add a quarter of an ounce of lard, and half a halfpennyworth of glos. Let it bell steedlify for an hose, and, while bolling, stir with a pollabed manogany chair-leg. Pepper and salt may be added, if "it runs to it."

"Come," said Will, "I peay you devote Just half a minute to mend this cost,
Which a unil has chanced to rend."
"Tis ten o'clock," said the drowsy mate
I know," said Will, "it is rather late,
But it's never too late to mend."

Benry Ward Bescher, returning from church one Sunday, passed a number of specimens of "Young America" amosing themselves with a game of mar-bles, mixed with finely swearing. "My boy," seld Mr. B. to an interesting youth of eight years—"my boy, I am fri₂hiened." "Are you?" answered but-toes, quite naively: "why the devil don't you run, then?"

Little Frank had been tenget that be was made of first. As he stood by the window watching this ele-ment as the wind was whirting it in eddles, he ex-claimed seriously, "Ma, I thought the dust looked as though there was going to be another little boy made."

This is the way in which a South Sen Islander set-tled a case of conscience. The missionary had re-buked him for the sin of polygamy, and he was small grieved. After a day or two be returned, his face radiant with Joy. "Me all right now, One wife, Me very good Christian." "What did you do with the other?" asked the missionary. "Me cat her up."

There is a saying, "Save as from our friends," but it does not mean any thing in particular. It was the last remark but one Julius Casar made to Bratus, Brutus was an intimate friend of Cesar's, and meant extremely kindly to him. Bratus put a knife into Cesar. This is a striking instance of friendship.

Matrimony is—hot cakes, warm beds, comfortable alippers, smoking cuffee, round arms, red lips, kind words, shirts explicing in bottous, redeemed stockings, bootjacks, happiness, etc. Single blessedness is—sheet-iron quilts, blue mass, frosty rooms, ice in the pitcher, unregenerated linen, heelless socias, coffee sweetcack with icicles, gutta-percha blesuits, rheumatism, corns, coughs, cold dinners, colics, rhubarb, and any amount of misery.

Priendship is a very beautiful thing. It is also use-ful. Without friendship a man can not borrow five dollars. Dollars have been borrowed at 65 per cent., but still a brotherly love of a certain kind has inspired the transaction. There is a beld sort of philarchropy in cent. per cert, and philanthropy is merely uni-versal friendship.

A sentimental young lady lost a curly peodle on which she set great value, and which she set great value, and which she fed with her own hands. Not long after the peodle had deputted this transitiony life Pridolina was seen to contemplate, with great penetveness, the countenance of a hewhishered and heringleted young man. "Fridolina, my dear," add her maiden sunt, a very proper old lady, "don't look so at young Frinit; hell think you are in love with him." "I can't help it, Aunt Sophia, "opiled Fridolina, with tears in her lovely eyes, "his expression is so like my pet poofle's."

A lady was about to engage the services of a servant at an intelligence office, but before the hargain was closed a few important questions were asked by the former. "I hope," said the lady, "that you have but few relatives in Boston?" "Indade, maker, move to the relatives in Boston?" "Indade, maker, move to talk." "And how many friends who would desire to call on you?" "Faith, maker, I has but two friends in Boston, and one of thim is in Ireland and the other in Maine."

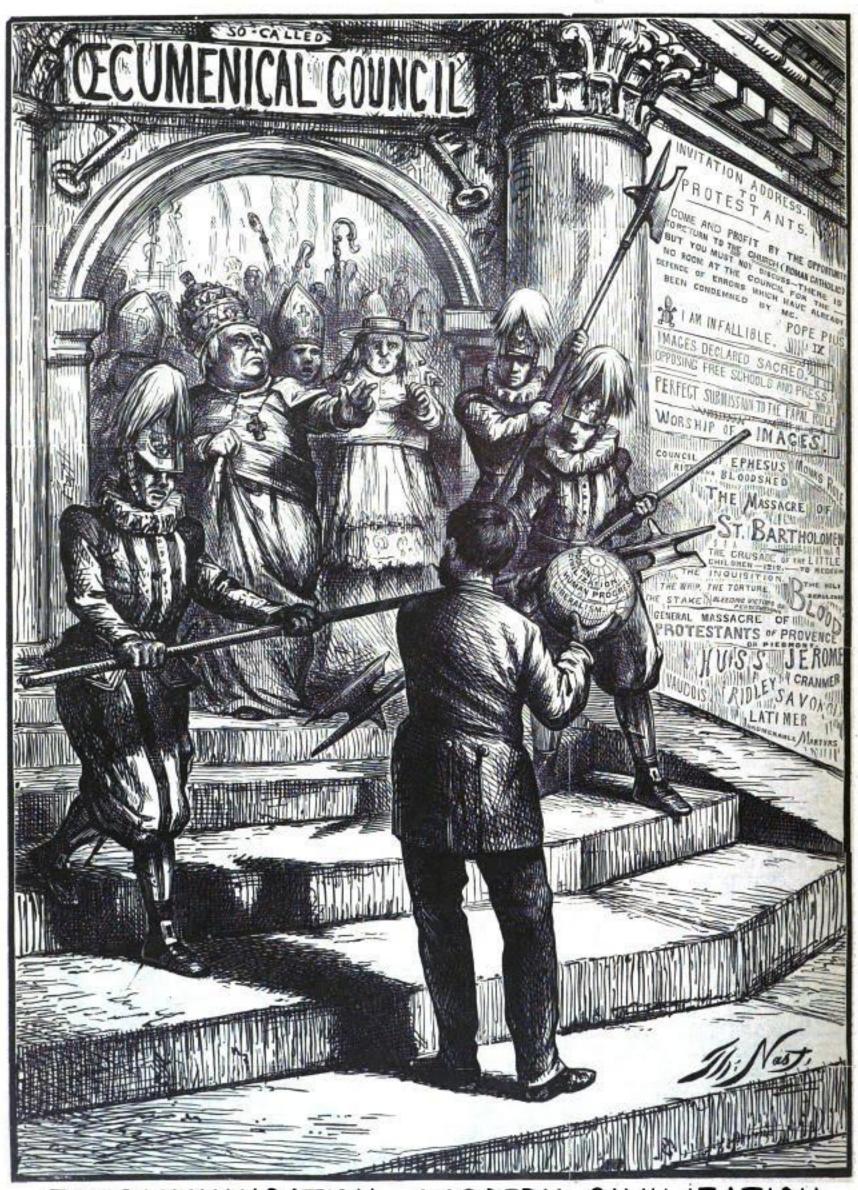

DIVORCE A LA MODE

Ma. Jones. "Why, Amelia, who—who is this Gentleman?"

Mas. —. "My Husband, Sir!"

Ma. Jones. "Are you med, Amelia? I'm your Husband."

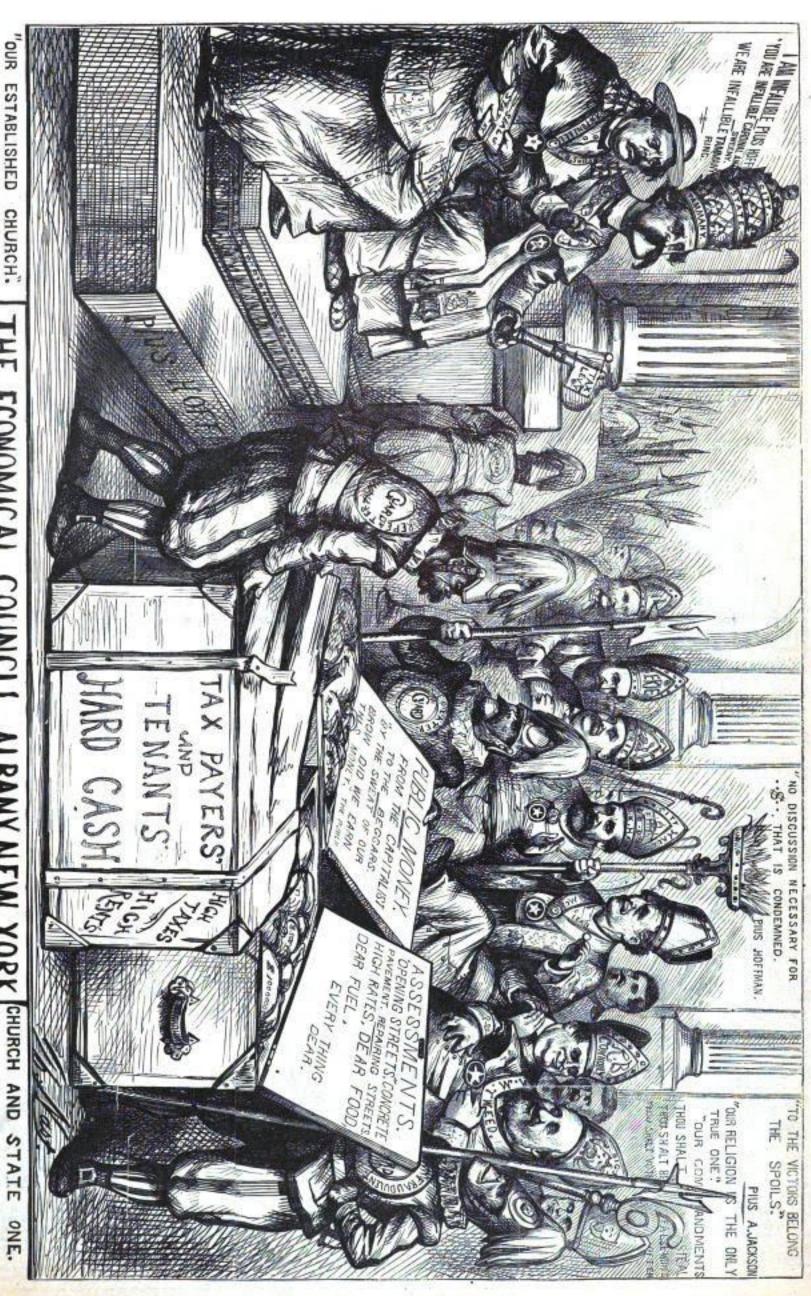

Mas. —. "You were, Sir, yesterday, but I procured a Divorce, and married Mr. Smythe this morning. This is my House, Sir!"

EXCOMMUNICATION OF MODERN CIVILIZATION.

GALILEO FROM BUT NEVERTHELESS IT DOES MOVE."

ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

VERONICA.

By the Luther of " Lunt Margaret's Trouble."

En Pibe Books.-Book HH.

CHAPTER VI. LORELY.

THE prince was a little near-eighted, and not deeming it good-manners to use the glass that dangled by the black ribbon over his waistcoat, when he found himself face to face with " miladi," he had approached to within a short distance of her before he became aware of the agisated ex-pression of her face, and the unusual careless-ness of her toilet.

The instinct of coquetry would have prevented Veronica from presenting herself before Barletti in any unbecoming attire. But if she had given the matter her most serious consideration she could have found none better calculated to set off her striking beauty than that which she now wore. A long white wrapper fell to her feet. She had covered her head with the voluminous folds of a white lare shawl, one end of which was folds of a white lare shawl, one end of which was thrown across her breast and foll over her shoul-der; and beneath the delicate snowy lace her long black hair streamed rippling to her waist. "Oh, prince, there you are!" said Veronica. "Paul told me you were in the west loggia, and I ran down to catch you before I dressed for din-

The words were flattering, inasmoch as they implied great eagerness on the lady's part to see him. But he must have been a fatuously vain man who could have looked in Veronica's face as she spoke, and have supposed her to be thinking of writing him correliments.

ing of paying him compliments.

Barletti bowed, and stood awaiting what more

Have you seen Paul?"

"Yes, signora. I saw him as I came in, but I did not speak to him."

I did not speak to him."

"Then you do not know that Sir John has been, and still is, ill?"

"Dio buono! Ill? No. I know nothing. What is the matter with ce bon Gale?"

"I hope it is nothing serious: but I can not tell. I am uneasy about him; very uneasy."

Barletti did not believe that miladi could be unfaring any areas envised. suffering any acute anxiety on the score of her lord's health. And he would have considered it a priori very unlikely that she should so suffer. But he thought it highly proper and becoming that she should assume anxiety. A frank show of indifference would have disgusted him.

that she should assume anxiety. A frank show of indifference would have disgusted him.

"Oh, you must not alarm yourself, cara signers," he said, soothingly. "What are the symptoms? How long has be been ill? I wonder that Paul said nothing to me?"

Veronica hurriedly described the singular swoon or trance into which Sir John had fallen.
"He says the best made him faint," she added, "but—" And she shook her head, doubtfully. "Really it is not unlikely," said Barietti. "It may have been a giramento di capo—a mere swimming of the head. Such things are not uncommon, and il nosero caro Gale is not very strong. Pray tell me if there is any thing I can do for you in Florence. I shall, of course, go back at once. I could not think of intruding on you under the circumstances."

"No, no, no! That is just the very thing I hastened down to say. Ton must remain and dine here, and stay all the evening until Sir John retires."

But-would he not prefer-" began Barletti in some astenishment. Verenica interrupt-ed him, speaking very fast, and in a low tone, and glancing round nervously to see that they were not observed.

"Yes; no doubt he would prefer that you should so away. But I reselve that you should should go away. But I prefer that you should stay. I beg you to stay. He has a whim to disguise that he is ill. He will not have a docdisguise that he is ill. He will not have a doc-tor. He has given Paul orders to keep it secret from the servants. It may be nothing, but I am so inexperienced in illness I can not judge. I am alone here. I am afraid of—of—of the re-spensibility. You must remain and watch him, and lot me know what you think. And—listen—do not allow it to be seen that I have said a word to stay! Do not admit that I have said a word to you about his Elman. It have no comments to you about his illness. I rely on you, remem-ber! And, above all, say no syllable to Paul."

She turned away, re-entered the salcon by the glass door, and ran swiftly and softly up the stairs, leaving Barletri in a condition of considerable perplexity.

He remained in the garden wandering up and down until the dinner-bell sounded. Then, as he was going into the house across the paved court-yard, a servant who had been sent to seek him, met him, and preceded him into the dining-It was a vast vaulted hall, whose dreariness was on too great a scale to be much miti-gated by such French upholstery as had been hastily employed to decorate it for Sir John Gale's use.

The table was as big as the deck of a small yacht. The wax lights abundantly set forth on a huge black walnut-wood side-board, and on the table it the tall marble mantle-piece, and on the table it. self, seemed to glimmer with hopeless feeble-ness, as though they were conscious of their inshifty to illuminate the vague dimness of the space. There was a little island of light in the centre of the table-cloth, but it seemed only to whence the surrounding gloom.

Veronica was alroady in the dining-hall when Barletti entered it. Paul, too, was there, of licining as botler as the side board.

Barletti bowed profoundly, and saluted Veronica as though he then saw her for the first time that evening.

"Good-evening, prince," said she, with a careless, haughry bend of the head.

In her rich evening dress, and with her composed, disdainful grace, she seemed a very ferent woman from her who had spoken to in the loggia half an hour ago.

A cover was laid for Sir John in his accustomed place. Barietti observed it, and stood for a moment after Veronica was seated, as though waiting for some one. "And Gale?"

though waiting for some one.

"Oh, Sir John will not dine with us. He felt a little tired with the best this afternoon.

We shall find him after dinner in the salottino.

Sit down, prince."

"You permit? I am not de trop?"

"No, no. I am glad of the sight of a human face. This hall is the gloomiest, dreariest place? I have never quite got over an idea that it is haunted, and I find myself sometimes making out mysterious shapes in the dark corners. One evening in the summer, when the windows were wide open, a great bat flow in, and almost brushed my face? Ugh!"

They are their dinner under Paul's grave impassible eyes, and with Sir John's empty chair between them.

"Thy master is not really indisposed, friend.

between them.

"Thy master is not really indisposed, friend, ch?" asked the prince of Paul, as the latter was serving him with wine.

"Sir John missed his usual siesta, and was tired. He is quite well now, Signor Principe."

"Ah, bravo! It has been a devil of a summer. And the heat seems as if it would never leave off any more."

leave off any more."

The dinner seemed to be spun out to an intolerable length. Barletti had a very excellent appetite, and ate on steadily. Veronica ate but little; but she drank off three glasses of Champagne, whereat Barletti, accustomed to the al-most ascetic temperance of his own countrywomost ascene remperance of his own countrywo-men in the matter of wine, marveled considera-bly. He could not help observing, also, that she did appear to be really thoughtful and anxious, falling every now and then into fits of musing. And at this, attributing her careful brow to un-easiness regarding her husband, be marveled still more.

When the dessert was put on the table Paul when the desert was put on the table Paul prepared to withdraw. Veronica desired him to remain: speaking in English, of which language Barletti understood very little when he saw it, and almost nothing when he heard it.

and almost nothing when he heard it.

"I must return to Sir John, miladi."

"Then tell Ansano to remain, and as soon as Sir John is in the salottino let me know."

The other servants went away, leaving Ansano to hand round the dishes of fruit, which, in his zeal, and the elation of being left to his own devices free from Paul's supervision, he did with feverish energy, until Veroulea put an end to his service by desiring him to go and stand still at the side-board.

The distrached like all the suit of rooms on still at the side-board.

The dining-hall, like all the suit of rooms on the west side of the bouse, had a door communicating with the loggia cutside. Veronica bade Barletti finish his wine at his leisure, and rose from her chair, saying that she would go and walk in the loggia until Sir John should be ready to receive them.

A request to be permitted to accommon her walk in the loggia until Sir John should be ready to receive them.

A request to be permitted to accompany her was on Barletti's lips, but she checked him by a look, and went out alone, pacing slowly and regularly up and down under the stone arreades. The night was dark, and since sunset the air had grown cool. Veronica lifted the gauss upper tunic of her dress, and wrapped her shoulders and arms in it. As she walked solitarily, a feeling of intense loneliness came upon her, such as she had never experienced in her life.

Outside, in the darkness, she looked in at the lighted hall each time she passed the glass door. She saw the brighiness of the table, glittering with glass and silver, and adorned with flowers. She saw Barletti seated there. His face was toward the window. The light fell on his hald forchead and dark eyes, and mellowed the tint of his pale ekin. He looked like a petrait by Vandyck. She regarded all this with an inexpressible sensation of strangeness. It seemed to be the beat that the was believe up the reverse and ever the street and to be the control to be the beat the beat the best the term the reverse and ever and Vandyck. She regarded all this with an inex-pressible sensation of strangeness. It seemed to her that she was looking on the room and on the man for the first time. It seemed to her that she had no part in any thing within those walls. No one could see her out there in the darkness. And to look on even the most familiar face, being one's self unseen, gives it an unfamiliar aspect.

The fact of being shut out there alone in the darkness, and of looking in upon the lighted rooms, produced in her a sense of complete iso-lation—isolation of spirit as well as of body. What did her existence matter to any one? If she could at that moment transport herself to Shipley-in-the-Wold, and peep in at the vicarage windows, she would see no void that her absence had made. It would all be going on much as usual. Her father would be reading by the fire —ther must have fires now in the evening—and Mand would be reading too, or perhaps playing softly on the old plane. Or it might be that Mr. Mand would be reading too, or perhaps playing softly on the old piano. Or it might be that Mr. Plew was there, prosing on in his mild, monotoneous voice. And outside the wide flam would be looming dreary and vague; and near Sack's farm the sheep and the white cattle would glimer, dotted about the pastures flat asiesp. She could fancy it all! So, thought she, a ghost must feel revisiting unperceived the haunts of the head. the body.

The idea of death, thus conjured up, made her diver, and nervously walk faster. How lonely shiver, and nervously walk faster. she felt! How lonely—how lonely!

Varonica had never in her life comprehended what was meant by a "pleasing melancholy."
Sadness of any kind was unterly distanteful to her, and aroused either a species of impatient resentment or a headlong abundonment of herself to despair, which had some anger in it too.

All as once the windows of the salottino threw out rays of brightness into the night. Sir John must be there. The rays came through the interstices of the wooden Venetian blinds. She could not look into the salottino as she could could not look into the salotane as she could into the dining-hall, where the shitters were left open. She felt a sudden yearning for light, and shelter, and companionship. It was too intolerable being out there alone with her own thoughts in the darkness.

She went into the house through the dining-room, where Bartetti was still sitting at the table. He had drunk scarcely any wine since Veronica left him; but, to kill the time, he had eaten nearly the whole contents of a large glass dish of sweetnests, and was beginning to find that occupation pall on him when she reappeared.

Ansano stood sentinel in the back-ground.
He had not found the half hour a pleasant one sither. If he might have been received to dis-

He had not found the half hour a pleasant one either. If he might have been permitted to distinguish himself by handing to the signor principe every dish on the table in regular sequence, he would have been content; for Ansano, like the rest of the servants, was little more than a mere rustic, and the delighted pride he felt in such professional promotion as was implied in being trusted to do any service unwatched by Paul, wore still the gloss of novelty. But to stand there at the side-board, still and eilent, while the other servants were suppling socially together, was a servere trial.

gether, was a severe trial.

Veronica walked at once through the dininghall to the salottino, and Barletti followed her Sir John was lying on a sofa. A lamp stood on a small table near his head, but it was so shaded as to throw no light on his face, although it illu-minated the gay flowered dressing-gown he wore, and his white, wrinkled hands, "Here is Prince Cesare de' Barletti," said Ve-

"Here is I'more Cesare do isamina, same vo-ronica, senting herself on a low chair near the sofa. "He wanted to go away when he heard that you were not well; but I made him stay." "Oh!" said Sir John, in a kind of grunt.

"Oh!" said Sir John, in a kind of grunt.

The greating was so exceptionally uncourtcous even for Sir John, that Barletti rose up as though he were moved by a spring over which his will had no control, and said, "I regret my intrusion. If I had supposed for a moment that monsieur le baron was seriously ill—"

"Who says so? I am not seriously ill!"
snarled Sir John.
"Of command." internessed Vennels, saids."

"Of course not!" interposed Veronica, quick-"I said so. If Sir John had been seriously ly. "I said so. If Sir John had been seriously ill, it would be another matter. But his indis-position was of the very slightest, and it is now quite gone."

Either, she thought, he must confess to being so indisposed that the presence of a stranger irked him, or be must ask Barletti to remain. But him, or be must ask Barietti to remain. But Sir John did neither. Whichever one of several given courses of action was most pleasing to Sir John's state of temper at the moment, he habit-ually adopted. Such cobwebs as duty toward, or consideration for, others, were entirely pow-eriess to restrain the peasions or caprices of his monathenes acceptant.

monstrous egotism.
"Yes," he said, speaking, as he had spoken throughout, in a muffled, strange voice, and ar-ticularing indistinctly: "I am quite well, but I don't feel energetic by any means. I shall not ask you to stay to-night, prince; it would only

It was almost impossible to resist this hint, but Barletti caught a glance from Veronica which so plainly begged him to remain, that he answered: "Now, my good Gale, I won't hear that. Bore me Not at all. I shall stay and that until your bedtime. Or, if you prefer it, we'll have our partie of piquet. Which shall it

Sir John was surprised at this unwonted in-sistence. The man had had his dinner; why did he wish to stay? That he evidently did was, however, no inducement to hi wish it was, however, no inducement to his host to yield.

"Frankly, my dear friend," said Sir John, making an odd grimace, as though he had tried to smile and failed, "I will to-night have neither that nor cards. I decline your company! That is the charm of having an intimate friend. I know you won't be angry if I beg you to leave me to myself, or," he added, slowly turning his eyes on Veronica, "to miladi. That is myself; it's quite the same thing."

But in looking at Veronics he surprised a glance of intelligence passing from her eyes to glance of intelligence passing from her eyes to Barletti. Sir John could not change the direc-Barietti. Sir John could not change the direc-tion of his own gaze quickly enough to eatch the answering look on the prince's face; his facial muscles appeared not to be under full com-mand; but he saw an expression of irresolution and coulded in Barietti's whole bearing. The prince rose and then scated himself again, and then again rose with more determination, and

The prince rose and then seated himself again, and then again rose with more determination, and advanced to the side of the sofa, holding out his hand to Sir John, and saying, "Good-night, then, caro Gale. Angry? No; of course I shall not be angry!" Then he bowed low to "nifladi," and said, in a low tone, and with intention, "I regret to be hanished from our good Gale, miladi; but I am sure he will be quite himself to-morrow. You need not—none of us need be preserved by thim." uneasy about him."

"Uneasy about mm."
"Uneasy!" echoed Sir John. "Que diable, Barletti, who is likely to be uneasy?"
And as he spoke he looked not at the prince,

"Who, indeed?" said Veronica, returning Bar letti's parting salutation with the stateliest of bows. reassured at heart. For she argued thus "If Barletti thought there were any thing serious the matter he would not have been restrained by any fear of Sir John from giving me a hint of it but at Veronica.

by word or look."

And the first faint dawn of a project rose dimly in her mind—a project of attaching and binding this man to her, so as to secure his assistance and protection if—if any thing should happen to Sir John. And already in the dawn of her project the prospect of that dread "something which might happen" showed a little less dreadful.

Meanwhile Sir John lay on the sofa watching her from under the shadow that covered his face, and thinking of the look he had surprised her giv-ing Barletti. The look had put a new idea into his mind, a very unpleasant idea, not unpleasant merely because, if correct, it would argue some of the ideas he had hitherto entertained to have been wrong (though that contingency alone was disagreeable enough), but because, also, it would have the effect of making him uneasy in the fu-

CHAPTER VII.

WHAT THEY SAID AT THE CLUB.

PAUL had such a terrible time of it that night in undressing Sir John and getting him to bed, that when he was alone in his own little room— within easy reach of his master's, and communi-cating with it by means of a large bell hanging at the head of his bed—he began to go over some calculations in his mind, with the half-formed intention of retiring from the baronet's service with a thousand or so fewer france than the sum be had determined on as the limit of his services.

Sleep brought counsel to Paul, however, and he arose in the morning prepared to go through the term of service he had set himself. But whether sleep had brought counsel to Sir John or not, it is certain that he woke in a humor worse, if possible, than that in which be had gone to bed.

He did not feel so much recovered from the indisposition of yesterday as he had expected to feel. He was extremely feeble, except in tem-per; there, he was as vigorous and ferocious as a healthy tiger with a fine appetite and nothing to eat.

Paul attended on him silent and watchful.

At length he said, with grave deliberation:

At length he said, with grave deliberation:
"You must have a physician, Sir John."
The reply was a volley of caths, so fiercely uttered that they left the baronet panting and glaring breathlessly from his pillow.

"Excuse the liberty, Sir John," said Paul, with a shade more gravity, but otherwise quite unmoved, "but you must have a physician. You are a little feverish. It is nothing. A little draught will make you quite strong soon for your learner."

for your journey."

"A lit-tie draught," muttered Sir John, trying to mimic Paul's accent. "A little devil!" "In this country fevers go quick. Excess the liberty, Sir John. If you allow, I will go for a physician myself."

The man's steady persistence had some effect on his master. Sir John moved his head rest-lessly and said, "Go? Where will you go? You don't know any of the doctors here, curse them!"

ton don't know any of the decides here, carse them!"

"There is a good and esteemed English physician. Sir John, lives in—"

"Damn the English physician! You infernal idiot, do you think I will have any of them, jabbering and beasting, and telling in the place that they have been attending Sir John Gale? Do you think I want a pack of British fools rushing up here to stare at me?"

"Bene, bene," said Paul. In his secret mind he had but a poor opinion of the English faculty, whose views, on the subject of bleeding especially, appeared to him to be terribly limited. "Benissimo! Better so, Sir John. I will fetch a most excellent medico. One who will cure you immediately—Dr. Maffei. He is well known, Sir John."

"Well known, you fool!"

"Well known, you fool!"

"Well known, you fool!"

"Well known among the Italians, Sir John," added Paul, astutely. "The signori Inglesi mostly employ their own physicians."

"Whatever he may say, I shall start for Naples on the nineteenth: remember that!"

In this way Sir John gave a tacli consent to the visit of the Italian doctor.

When that gentleman arrived at Villa Chiari he declared that there was no fever about Sir John. Paul had been mistaken there. But he let slip another ugly word, which Paul, who was present during the whole interview (acting as interpreter occasionally, for Sir John's Italian and the doctor's French sometimes came to a cul de sac, out of which Paul had to extricate them), smothered up as well as he could, in the hope sac, out of which Paul had to entricate them), smothered up as well as he could, in the hope that it might not reach Sir John's ears.

"I got a fall from my horse last year and was badly hurt, and had a long illness in consequence," asid Sir John, feeling that the phenomenon of so wealthy and important a personage as himself being reduced to a condition of great weakness needed some explanation: "I think it shook me more than they thought at the time. That's the only way I can account for being in such a devil of a state."

"Ab, yes. And then, you see, you are get-being in such a devil of a state."

"Ah, yes. And then, you see, you are getting old, and you have probably been rather intemperate in your youth," answered Dr. Maffel, with disconcerting sincerity.

Sir John began to think he had been wrong in not having an English physician, if he must have any at all.

Dr. Maffel prescribed some medicine, and a plain, but nourishing diet.

"I am going to Naples on the nineteenth," said Sir John, brusquely.

"I do not know. I do not think I should advise your making a journey so soon."

"I shall not trouble you, Sir, for your opinion on that point. I am going on that day. Good-morning."

Good-morning."

The wild-beast temper had leaped out and shown its fangs so suddenly that the doctor's brown smooth-shaven face remained for a few seconds absolutely blank with amasement. Then he bowed silently; and, with a certain dignity, despite his short, stubby figure and ungraceful with malked out of the more. despite his short, stubby fig-

An amazement of a livelier and more agreeable nature overspread his countenance when, driving down the hill in his facre, he inspected the bank-note which Paul had handed to him in an envelope. Its amount was more than ten times what he would have considered a sufficient fee from any of his compatricus—it was, indeed, astentatiously excessive. Sir John had some raguely vindictive notion in his head that the beggarly Italian would repent not having been more civil to a man who could afford to pay such a fee. But he was wrong. The doctor was pendering upon the extraordinary and ab-surd constitution of a universe in which so anom-alous a nation as the English was permitted to

It would be difficult to decide whether or not the medicines sent by Dr. Maffet did the patient any good; but the fact was, that Sir John did not get worse, and was able to keep his resolu-tion of going to Naples on the nineteenth of Oc-between the day of his tête-à-tête dinner with Veronica and that date, Cesare de' Barletti had to undergo many buffetings of fortune. He was tossed backward and forward from sunshine to shade, by the selfish caprice of a little white hand —and these little white hands can strike hard -and these intro wine hands can strike and securities. A man who has nothing to do from morning to night is glad of a habit which saves him the farigue of deciding how he shall bestow himself at a given bour. He likes to say, "I must be with So-and-so this ovening." It has a cheap air of duty. Thus mere habit had caused the Newpolitan principling to be a results visiting. the Neapolitan princeling to be a regular visitor to the English barcoss in the old days at Naples. when the latter was bound to his room by a fit of the gout.

The visits had been begun at the promptings of good-nature, combined with a natural taste for a superior cuisine. Sir John, at that time, employed a very accomplished cook.

Then in Florence it must be admitted that curiosity had been the chief spur which at first undeted the prince to undergo the flatigue of sitting behind a cab-horse, and seeing him struggle up the steep road to Ville Chiari. He wanted to see the interior of the menage, whose master and mistress seemed so ill-assorted. But very soon it bears to appear to him a necessity of exto see the interior of the menage, whose master and mistress seemed so ill-assorted. But very soon it began to appear to him a necessity of existence that he should pay his evening visit to the villa. He even found some satisfaction in his game of piquet. An Italian is usually amazingly patient of horedom: or, it may be, is unconscious of it, which is pleasanter for himself. Barletti admired Veronica extremely. And her presence was a strong attraction to him. By-and-by it began to occur to him that it might be worth his while to pay his court to this beautiful woman, after a more serious fashion than he had at first contemplated. Sir John was failing. He might die and leave a rich widow, who would lecome a prey to needy fortune-hunters; to fortune-hunters who would not have the same adantages to effer in exchange for wealth as could be found in an alliance with Cesare dei Principi Barletti I It would be a pity to see her sacrificed to such men as he had seen and known engaged in the chase after a wife with money. He made no definite plan, but suffered himself to drift on lassly, with just so much intention as sufficed to modify his behavior in many subtle, nameless ways. But after the incident of Sir John's indisposition there arose a different feeling in his becast toward her. sposition there arose a different feeling in his susportion there arose a different feeling in his breast toward her.

Barletti really had a fund of kindliness in him.

He was becoming fond—with a fundatess truer and more tender than that inspired by the fine contrast of diamonds on a satin skin—of this girl, so young, so beautiful, and so lonely! From the moment when she had appealed to him in some sort for advice and support, a fibre manhood was stirred in him on her behalf. would have even made some kind of active ser-rifice for her. So, despite Sir John's irritability and insolence, Barletti continued to endure see-ing his cab-horse toll up the hill overhanging the Ema, evening after evening.

And Sir John Gale did not scruple to make and Ser John Case did not scrupes to make use of Barletti. He would give him little commissions to execute in the city, and expected him to read up the news of the day and retail the goesip of the hour for his amusement.

One afternoon, in search of this latter commodity, Barletti was standing at the door of the cith with a knot of others.

club with a knot of others.

club with a knot of others.

"I remember him at Rome," said a portly man with dyed whiskers, continuing a desultory conversation with Barletti. "A red-haired man who hunted. Quite the type of an Englishman."

"That's a mistake you all make," observed a languid, spindlo-legged young nobleman with a retreating chin. "I believe there are as many red-haired people in Italy as in England."

The spindle-legged young nobleman had married an English wife, and had been in England, and spoke with authority.

"No, no, it's the Irish that have red hair!" suclaimed a third. "Or the Scotch. I forget which."

"Zisto!" whispered the first portly speaker, as a tall old man appeared at the club door, "the captain won't hear you assert that the Irish have red hair!"

of hair!"

The captain was a half-pay officer, who played an uncommonly good game at billiards. He was understood to live chiefly by his wits; but he had the entrée to several distinguished families nad the entrée to several distinguished families who clung—theoretically, for a more practical clinging would have involved an amount of inconvenience which it would have been mere Quixofism to encounter—to the old régime; he was a realous Roman Catholic, and, it is scarcely necessary to add, was descended from one of the ancient kings of Ireland!

e ancient kings of Ireland!
"Who has red hair?" asked the captain, in Italian flavored with a rich Kerry bregue.

"We were talking about a man I know here, un riccone, an immensely rich fellow," said Bar

"Indeed! Who is be?" said the captain, while, He had no constitutional prejudice affebly. He had against rich fellows.

والمتحالة والمتحاطية

"Baron Gale." Baron what? I pever heard the title.

"He is an English beron-Sir John Gale. I knew him in Naples."

"Oh, a baronet! Per Bacco!" exclaimed the captain, pronouncing the name of the hea-then deity precisely like the last syllable of "to-bacco," with a very sharp a. "It isn't Tallis

"No, no; John; Sir John Gala." "Ay, ay, that is the beptismal name. But he took the name of Gale when he came into a fortune, being richer than enough already; that's always the way. He's a thin, high-shouldered man, with sandy hair and black eyes?"

"Già."

"And has a handsome wife?"

Bellissims! "That's the man!" gried the captain, rolling the end of his cigar between his lips relishingly. "I knew him in Ireland in the year '49. My lady is a great beauty—was, that is, for she must be quite passée by this time—and married him for

"Passee!" echoed Barletti, on whom that alone, of all that the captain had utered, had made an impression. "Diamine! What do you call 'passée?" She is as fresh as a Hebe, and young enough to be his daughter!"

"Pooh, pooh, my dear friend! There's some mistake. Lady Tallis Gale must be fifty if she's

The by-standers burst into a derisive laugh.

Barletti had allowed himself to boast a little of his intimney at Villa Chiari, and had exalted "miladi's" beauty to the skies. It is naturally agreeable to find that one's friend has been exaggerating the charms of a society from which one is one's self excluded. Barletti had to unaggerating the charms of a society from which one is one's self excluded. Barietti had to undergo a great deal of banter; and many phasantries were untered on the humorous topic of Lady Gale's supposed ago and infirmities, which pleasantries being (like some other things which are grateful to the truly genteel palate, as caviare and old Stilton) of a somewhat high flavor, we may be dispensed from laying before the reader. Barietti fumed and protested and gesticulated in vain. The joke at his expense was too good to be lost.

"That's why she never showed, then, in the Cascine or any where," and he of the spindlelegs, reflectively. That young nobleman was not, strictly speaking, imaginative, and had taken little part in the abover of jests which had been flung at Barletti. "I thought it was queer, if she was so handsome as all that!"

The conception of a strikingly handsome young woman who did not want to show herself in the Cascine was entirely beyond this young gentlewoman who did not want to show herself in the Cascine was entirely beyond this young gentle-man's powers of mind. He was as incredulous as an African to whom one should describe a snow-storm.

That evening Barletti, seated at the piquet-table opposite to Sir John Gale, caused the latter to dash his cards down with an oath, by asking him a simple question: "Have you be ried twice, care Gale?"

"What the devil's that to you, Sir ?" demand-ed the baronet, when he had recovered breath ed the baroner, when he had recovered because cough to speak.

Barletti drew himself up a little. "Pardon, monsieur le baron," said he, "but I do not quite understand that mode of address."

understand that mode of address."

At another moment he might have passed over the brutal rudeness of his host's words, but his ansors propre was still smarting from the jeering he had received in the morning. He was therefore ready to resent a small offense from one from whom he had endured greater offenses with equanimity. That was not just. But man offense deals as blindly with his fellows as fortune deals with him; and it is the first comer who receives the good or wil he may chance to hold in his hand, quite irrespective of the claims of abstract justice. stract justice.

Sir John was not in a mood to take any notice of Barletti's sudden access of dignity.

"What put that into your head, pray?" asked Sir John, flercely.

"No matter, moustour le baron; if I could have conjectured that the topic was a painful one, I should not have adverted to it. Let us say no more."

"Trash, Sir! I insist upon knowing what Barletti had resolved not to be bullied further. Harletti had resolved not to be comed nursor, and had raised his bead, confronting Sir John with a prond air, when he caught a glimpse through the glass door of a graceful figure, with long, sweeping skirts, passing slowly along the loggis. It was yet early. They had not dired. Although the card-table was illumined by a lamp, the daylight was not excluded, and th with part of the garden, was distinctly visible from the interior of the room. Veronica was pacing along with her head bent down in a pensive attitude. As she came opposite to the win-dow she raised her head for a moment and looked in.

Sir John had his back to the window; but Barletti could see her. She looked full at him, and he saw, or seemed to see, something plaintively appealing in her eyes. It all passed so quickly that there appeared to be scarcely any pause between Sir John's last words and Barletti's reply, uttered coldly, but not angrily.

""Insist," care Gale, is an absurd word to use. But if you really wish it, I have no objection to tell you what made the sak if you had been twice married. It is no secret. Your name was mentioned at the clob to-day, and a name was mentioned at the clab to-day, and a man declared that he had known miladi years man declared that he had known miled; years ago, and that she was—was not quite young now. I thought it might have been a former wife of whom he spoke. He aski, br-the-by, that you had another name besides Galo—calli—Talli—I forget it now.

Sir John langhed a little grating length.

"Well," said be, taking up his cards again and arranging them in his hand, "I suppose you can judge for yourself about the correctness of your friend's information on one point, at least. Mi-ladi would be much obliged to him if she could know that he said she was 'not quite young. ha, ha! I suppose the fellow was trying to boax you. By the by, I would advise you, if you want to be in miladi's good books, not to tell her that you have been discussing her at the tell her that you have been discussing her at the club. Sho's so derilish proud that she'd never forgive you. Allons, let us finish our game."

Barietti understood very well that he had got no answer to his question. But he was too glad to have avoided a quarrel with Sir John to care about that. And he was more glad than ever that he had commanded himself when Veronica. entered and sat a little behind hir John's chair, talking little and smiling less, but gentle, ami-able, and looking exquisitely beautiful.

All through dinner her unweated softness of mood continued. She had lately, as has been hinted, displayed a good deal of caprice and hasteur in her behavior to Barletti : so that her milduess was made precious by contrast. It was the last evening he was to spend at Villa Chiari. On the following day Sir John had decided to on the schowing day for John had decided to start for Naples.

"Good-by, prince," said Veronics, giving him her hand. It was the first time she had ever done so; and Barietti's heart best suddenly faster as be clasped her fingers for a moment in his

"We shall see you in the winter?" added

Veronics.

"I hope I shall be able to get away. I came here, thinking I should stay perhaps a fortnight, on some business for Alberto" (Alberto was his cider brother, and the head of the family), "and the head of the family), is an increase leaves have kept me broiling in hese tiresome lawyers have kept me broiling in Plorence throughout the whole summer. Pasi-enza! I do not regret my detention, "he added, a little awkwardly, as he bowed once more to "miladi."

Then he went away through the garden, past the broken fountain, and out at the wide gates. There his flacre was awaiting him. But he told There his facer was awaiting him. But he told the man to drive on slowly, and stay for him at the foot of the hill. And after standing for a few minutes graing at the old house, white in the moonlight, black in the shadow, he absolutely walked more than three-quarters of a mile down the hill, under the actum sky spangled with stars; walked through the thick, soft dust, which speedily covered his well-warnished boots with a drab-colored coating. And even when he reached the foot of the descent he had not yet exhausted the excitement which made it irksome for him to sit still in a carriage. He paid the coachman and dismissed him, and tramped home through the streets on foot.

the streets on foot.

All which might have proved to a discerning oye that Cesaro del Principi Barletti was feeling powerful and unwonted emotion.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Bacabway has put on its holiday stiffe. Things new, beautiful, and wonderful peep out from the shop windows, attracting crowds of carrious gazers, and enticing not a few to enter magic preciate where money vanishes mysteriously like—we pause for a yeteriously like—we pause for a like hot buckwheat cakes from money variance mysterionery man—we peace or a seasonable simile—like hot borkwheat cakes from Tom's breakfast-plate; and Tom's a growing boy just come home from school to spend the hotidays. If you have an overplus of greetbacks, and they rest uneasi-ly in your pocket-book, there is no time in all the year ly in your pocket-book, there is no time in all the year like the present for disposing of them. You have only to take your Tom and his little sister, and start at Fourteenth Street; no—we are forgetting how rap-id has been the up-town movement—you must begin somewhere about Twenty-fifth Street, and walk down somewhere about Twenty-fifth Street, and walk down until you are tired out. When you stop the pocket-book will be lightened, the greenbacks all gone. If, however, you have little or no money to spare, do not fancy that therefore you can not heartily only seeing the beautiful things displayed, and help your boy and girl to have a good time in so doing. Leave your mon-sy at home if it need be, and learn how much pleas-ure may be experienced without the wish or experimay be experienced without the wish or expecture may be experienced without the wish or expectation of possession. Of course the children will want to buy every thing—they would not be children will want course; but they will learn some valuable lessons in a walk with you during the holidays without money. Even a superficial survey of the rare curiosities, and the unique designs of every shape and size, for every place and purpose imaginable, with which shops are now filled, would lead one to fancy that ten thousand fairies had been working for dear life ever since the 20th of December, 1985, inventing and contriving what is so new, strange, beautiful, and bitherto methought of. Whole columns would not entite to enumerate a of. Whole columns would not suffice to enumerate a thousandth part in detail. And who are the invent-ors of all the pretty toys and nick-nacks Christmas brings to light? Where are they? And how many make a feetune by their work?

Indiana gets up lively stories of real life. For ex-Indians gets up lively stories of real life. For example: a widow living near New Albany held property of her deceased husband, which was her own without restrictions while she remained single, but which she could not dispose of if she married again. Rashly she married, and was discomforted to find she had lost control of her property. So she and her second lord agreed to quarrel every day in the presence of witnesses; then the busband applied for a divorce, and "incompatibility" was easily proved. The court granted the divorce. An hour was sufficient for the busband from whom she had just been divorced; and in another half hour the disservered couple were resulted in bonds of matrimony. ted in bonds of matrimony.

The boys and girls who have enjoyed so many happy hours in reading the adventures of Robinson Crasos will be delighted to learn that a monument is to be eracted over the grave of the author, Daniel Beios, by six-penny contributions from children.

Admirers of Deet, and any who have a family for graphic, though horrible, delineations of the infernal regions, have still the opportunity of seeing Dante and Virgil walking through the frozen realors, with all the surrounding horrors. We think we should prefer studying this picture in July rather than in December; but if one feels chilly, he can turn to

"Jephtha's Daughter," "Jonas," or some of Doré's illustrated works, which are on exhibition at the

There is still another royal authoress. The Empress of the French is said to be writing a history of her Eastern tour. The Queen of Spain was reported a short time ago to be writing her aniohtography; and the Queen of Singland has long ago established her reputation in the illerary world.

The Court Journal states that the favorite trage-dience, Mise Kate Rateman, has for the past five years been largely interested as a capitalist in edit manufactures. She is part owner of one of the finest mills in New Jersey, employing a large number of workmen, and doing a flourishing trade, and may be said to have given valued aid, at a time when it was an experiment, to the development of this particular branch of industry.

The Empress Engine, as a testimony of her appear ciation of the Soes Canal and its originator, has pre-sented M. De Lesseps with a magnificent vase, which is called "La Coupe de Soes."

Names suggested in the name applied to a new machine which has been not in operation on a man-of-war at Nausteengraph is the name applied to a new machine which has been put in operation on a man-of-war at Naples. The inventor of this engine is chief machinist of the Royal Italian Navy. By its help the damage which a vessel has undergone can be accertained, as well as its different movements. With this machine a commander in his cabin can watch the movements of his ship, and, after a bettle, all its manuscring can be accertained. Very curious, that i Overbeck, the celebrated German painter, has just died of heart-disease, at the advanced age of eighty. The Pope sent his apostolic benediction to the dying artist. His remains are to be interred in a want in the Church of St. Bernard.

A child's faith in religious teachings is touchingly

"To God scho liese in Assess,"
"Data Goo; O, how I wish I could see you and tell you what I want, I want some new shoes and some clothes to wear to sundy school wont you by me some and a new dress for mamma and a new try for the baby. Good by.
"A LITTLE SECOLD BOT TOWN."

Not unlike the above, in spirit, was the postecript added by a little three-year-old to his evening prayer: "And, O Lord I please give me a new pair of boots when you get ready."

What a jubilee there must be among the poor old horses, and all the protages of good Mr. Bergh! A wall-known old tachelor in this city has bequesthed $250,000, his entire fortune, to the Society for the Proection of Cruelty to Animals.

wention of Creaty to Annais.

There is a smart girl in St. John, New Brunswick, who would make a safe protector of any thuid young man—if he can get her. Not long ago a youth was escorting our heroise from church one Sunday evening, when he was stracked by a gang of rowdies. He would doubtiese have been severely injured had not his fair companion, instead of acreaming helpiessly, used her fists with such vigor and precision as to bring three of his assailants to the ground. Astonished at such resistance, the rowdies suddenly decreament.

Haven, Connecticat, is making arrangements to erect a factory in that place for the manufacture of paper pulp from potate vines.

A French tournal-the Hémorial de la Loin A French vournal—the Reserved is in Leira given some singular details respecting an infant who has ex-hibited most remarkable electrical phenomena. The child died in November, and for nearly two weeks previous electrical lights manifested themselves with a vividness which astonished scientific men. The shocks, when approaching the cradle, were some-times strong enough to knock one down! At the last moment of life the emanations of light became more intense, and even continued for several moments after death. The infant died quietly, without appar-ent pain, and it is not known of what disease. But if this strange story is true, scientific men have some-thing to speculate upon and study. The friends would not suffer the body to be examined.

One of the most remarkable of marriage announce ments was made not long ago by the minister of a parish church in a Cornish village, in the following terms: "My beloved parishloners, last Senday evening I entered into an engagement of marriage with a gentlewoman o. suitable age, a widow, and childless, like myself. With God's assistance, she will shortly take the place of that beloved wife lying in the church-

A recent visitor to Chicago writes: "I went to hear Dr. — preach and pray flunday afternoon. He prayed that the Lord would remove from Chicago all intemperance, Sabbath-breaking, licentionness, fraud, properties, the charing, and every form of vice; and then I did not hear the last few sentences, because I was thinking what would be left in Chicago."

We are happy to see that some of the newspaper, regard the example of the little Wisconsin girl, aget eleven, who has knitted forty-sight pairs of stockings during the past year, as an example to be avoided, unless there is a stern necessity for such plodding industry. The health and future necfainess of any young try. The health and future menantees the child must suffer without plenty of outdoor air an child must suffer without plenty of outdoor occupation, eve exercise, and s more important, in these days, than knitting stock-ings by hand.

A respectable looking man recently entered a Utica restancant, and ordered an elaborate dinner, including wine. Finally, lighting a cigar which he had codered, he sammered up to the deak, and said to the proprietor: "Very fine dinner, landlords just charge it to me: I haven't got a cent."

"But I don't know you," said the proprietor, indigenable.

nantly.
"Of course you don't. If you had, you wouldn't let me have the dinner."

me have the dinner."

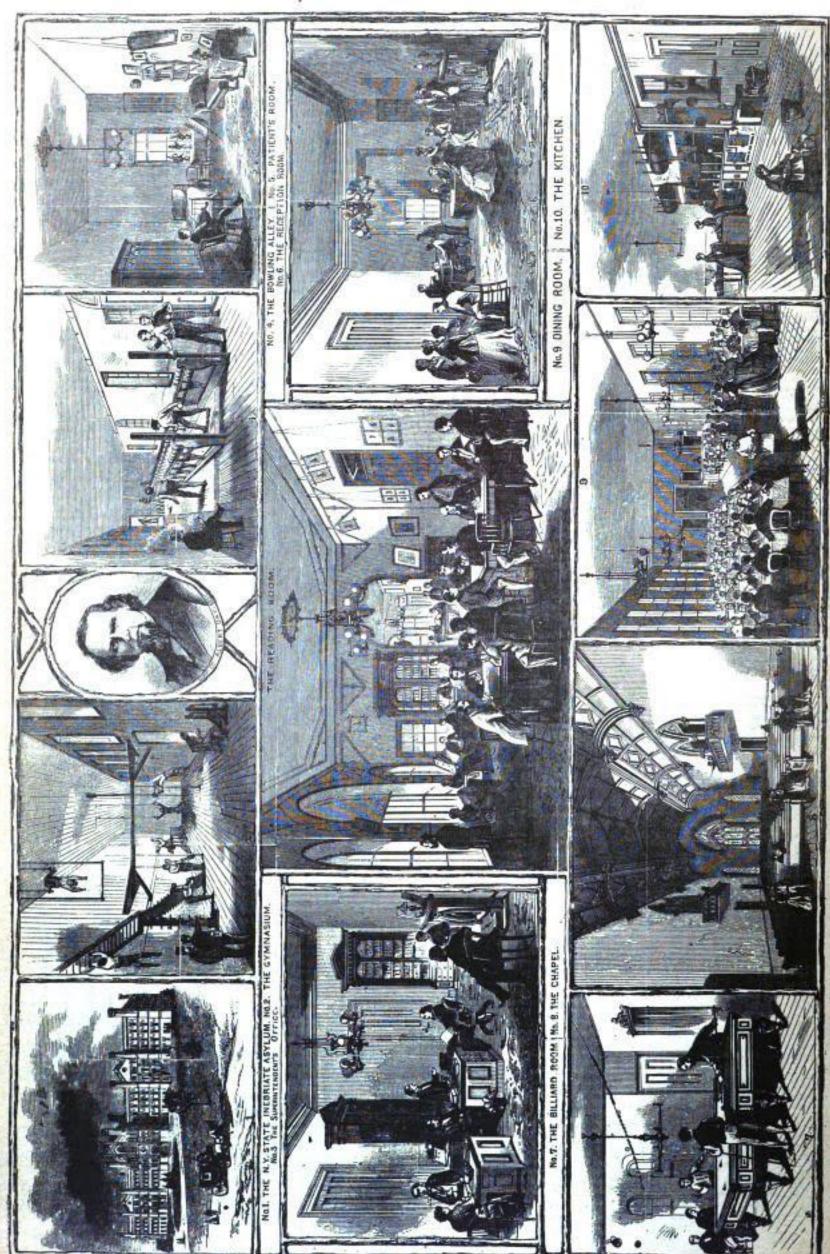

"Pay me for the dinner, I say!"

"And I say I can't."

"I'll see about that," said the proprietor, who snatched a revolvir out of a drawer, leaped over the counter, and collared the man, exclaiming, as he pointed it at his head, "Now see if you'll get away with that dinner without paying for it, you second-

"What is that you hold in your hand?" said the impecuators contoner, drawing back.
"That, Sir, is a revolver, Sir."
I don't care a cent for

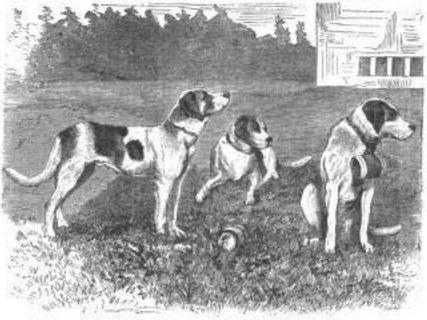

"Oh, that's a revolver, is it? I don't care a cent for a revolver; I thought it was a stomach-pump."

HE NEW YORK STATE INEBELATE ASTLUM, AT BINGHAMTON.-DRAWN ST C. E. H. BOWHL, NEW YORK.-[SER PAGE

ST. BERNARD DOGS-"OLD BARRY."-[SEE PAGE 823.]

ST. BERNARD DOGS-"TOUNG BARRY."-(See Page 822]

COVERED BY THE FLAG.

A STRIKED BY THE FLAG.

A STRIKEN illustration of the power of a neutral flag during a civil war like that now raging in Caba, is given by the artist on this page. A man captured under circumstances that laid him open to suspicion was tried and condemned by the Spanish authorities; but being an Englishman by birth and an American citizen by naturalization, the consuls of the two countries interposed, and declared that the authorities had no right to put him to death. Their remonstrance being disregarded, they accompanied the strance being disregarded, they accompanied the condemned man to the place of execution, and there suddenly threw over him the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, and dared the au-thorities to put him to death. The menace had the desired effect, and the prisoner's life was

FIRE IN PHILADELPHIA.

We give on this page a sketch of the burning of the Philadelphia Commercial Exchange, which occurred on the afternoon of the 7th inst. The fire was occasioned by the fall of a large chande-lier, just as the building was lighted up, allowing an immense rush of gas, which took fire, and in a few minutes the whole structure was in flames. Nothing now remains of it except the walls and the lower story, which was arched with masonry, and was fire-proof. The building was erected on the site of the old PENN mansion, at a cost of $250,000, and was dedicated only last March.

THE INEBRIATE ASYLUM AT BINGHAMTON.

THIS beneficent institution, situated in the pleasant town of Binghamton, New York, was amenced more than ten years ago, but, owing to a combination of anfortunate circum-stances, it has never been finished. The north wing was nearly completed when, a few years ago, it was fired by an incendiary and destroyed. Alarge body of workmen are now en-gaged in rebuilding it. The structure, of which we give a series of illustrations on page 828, was commenced by private subscription; but the trustees were obliged to call on the State for aid, as the cost of construction largely exceeded the estimates and the means at their disposal. Up to the present time upward of $500,000 have been expended on the buildings and grounds. The site of the Asylam is on a sloping eminence, casy of access, and commanding magnificent views of the Sustainance and Changes when the Astached quehanna and Chenango valleys. Attached to the institution are 400 acres of land, 252 of which were given by the citizens of Bingham-ton, while the remainder was purchased by the

The building is in the castellated Gothic style

enstellated Gothic style of architecture. It is four stories in height.
The length of the front is 365 feet, and the depth of the wings is 51 feet. It is built of stone, and handsomely finished inside with oiled onk.
When completed it will accommodate 250 paaccommodate 250 patients; the number at present under treatment is 80.

Dr. ALBERT DAY, Superintendent, took charge of the Asy-lum in the spring of 1867; and since that time 525 patients have been under treatment there, ten per cent, of whom were taken free of charge, the remainder paying a stated sum (about twenty dollars) per week for board and treatment. It is a melancholy fact that, with few exceptions, those now under treatment at the Asylum are educated gentlemen, representlearned professions and the highest grades of commercial life. Most of the patients require medical treatment; but Dr. Day relies chiefly upon moral means for the permanent cure of instriates, as, in his judgment, based upon long experience, the restoration of the power of the will alone can prevent a reformed instriate from returning to the use of intoxicating drinks.

"FAVORITE,"-[SEE PAGE 822.]

The name of this beneficent institution was unfortunately cheere and tells remise it in the onfortunately chosen, and tells against it in the minds of many persons who would be gled to avail themselves of its advantages. Strictly speaking, it is not an asylum, nor is it in any monner degrading to those who seek moral and physical restoration under its influences. It is rather a magnificent temperance hotel, where those who wish to free themselves from a territhose was wan to free themseres from a terri-ble evil may put themselves under moral and re-ligious influences of the most gentle and cheerful character, combined with elevating social ad-vantagus. As will be seen by our illustrations, which speak for themselves, ample facilities are afforded for intellectual entertainment and phys-ical countries. The reading room is well sayabled. afforded for intellectual entertainment and phys-ical exercise. The reading-room is well supplied with books, magnaines, and non-spapers; and a literary society, composed of the lumines of the institution, meets regularly in a pleasant hall to listen to lectures and essays by some of the pa-tients. Voluntary patients only are received; and Dr. Day justly congratulates himself on the success of the theory which chaims for the incbri-ate a recoverable informent, sensible affections. ate a recoverable judgment, sensible affections, and moral responsibility; and which, refusing any longer to coerce him as a criminal or confine him as a lunatic, proposes by positive aid and comfort, and confiding appeals to his reason, his affections, and his aspirations, to restore him to himself, his family, and society. The patient voluntarity submits himself, for a period more or less protracted, according to the indications of his condition and the history of his case, to an his condition and the history of his case, to an isolation which the officers study to render agreeable, and the mildest restraint he will submit to; and, secondly, shows that he can be treated, his temptations, of course, being jealously checked. Very few who leave the Asslam, after undergoing a thorough course of treatment, ever relapse into their old habits—a fact that speaks volumes for its efficiency.

COVERED BY THE PLAG.

BURNING OF THE PHILADELPHIA COMMERCIAL EXCHANGE. - (SEPTIMED BY A. TEAUMERL.)

A MILE of Cobinet Organs would seem a large number, yet if the instruments manufactured and sold by the Mason & Hamun Co., during the PAST TEAR ALONE, were placed close together in a line, they would reach a distance of more than THERE SILES, or if arranged three in a tier, would make a solid wall nine feet in height around the Boston Common.

We hardly know which is the more surprising, the demand now existing for these Organs, or the improvement made in them during the past few years, that which was formerly a weak and ineffective instrument, becoming possessed of such qualities of tone and variety of expression as to command the unequivocal praise of artists and connoisseurs, both in this country and Europe. It is not strange, therefore, that the Calinet Organ is fast taking its place as the favorite perior instrument among all classes of society.—[Boston Thomales] ton Traveler.

ONLY FORTY DOLLARS, which is all the Wilson Sewing Machine Company of Cleveland, Ohio ask for one of their best Shuttle machines.

CRAFFER HANNS AND PAGE, Sons Live, &c., cared at case by the use of Hayman's Campber for with filterine. It keeps the hands soft in the coldest worther. See that you get the genuine. Sold by Danggists. Price in cents per hox, Sort by mall on except of 20 cents.—Hadman & Co., New York.

TAKE ATER'S CHESET PROTORAL to stop your Colds, Coughs, and Bronchial Affections, before they run into Communities that you can not stop.—(Cost.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR BLACK WORMS and PIMPLES on the FACK, use Pray's Country and Prayte Recurse. Prepared only by Dr. S. C. Prays, to Bond St., New York. Sold every where.

HITCHCOCK'S HALF DIME MUSIC.

TIE PROGRAMMENT STORY LATEST MUSIC.
Jerusalem the Golden
Witness to Mr. Stener Theory.
Romeo and Juliet. Raymond Rosalie Polka Mazurka. Jones
Rosalie Polka Mazurka
Holls and Bears
Good by, John Prail
The Gay Cavaller, three-part song Millard
The Monks of Old, three-part song Millard
The Dawn of Day, three-part song
My Own True Love, three-part song Millerd
Tommy Noodle, comits
The Postune-Teller Pract
Sports at Fire Island
Dancing Fairy Waverley Reaper's Schottische Little Katy's Letter Lany Districts
Wile Thor Not Sente Upon mer Wake, Darling, Wake
e shove are sold by music, book, and newsdealers generally. Also sent, postpaid, by mail, on receipt of teles, five cents each. Address

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 24 Beskman Street, New York.

SANTA CLAUS At 98 Chambers St.

Toys, Fancy Goods,

HOLIDAY PRESENTS

WM. A. HARWOOD.

A DOSE

for the atomach is about. It mixes with the food, and enters with the blood in all parts of the system, and weakens every part. Stop it, and try, free of cost, WOLCOTT'S PAIN PAINT, at 181 Chatham Square, N. Y. A pint sear, free of express charges, on receipt N. Y. A pint seat, free of express charges, on receipt of 20, or a gallon for 20, double strength.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS AT THE PURPLICUE STORE OF

G. L. & J. B. KELTY & CO. 661 BROADWAY, Opposite Bond St.

FANCY CHAIRS of every description.
Emera-to's PATENT BOCKING CHAIRS, without

PLOWER and WINDOW STANDS, and Flowers. Pedestals, Swise Carved Woods, and Jardinieres. Also, at the Curtain Store, 447 Broadway: LACE CURTAINS, LAMBREQUINS, and all kinds of Curtain Macerials and Trimmings. TABLE and PIANO COVERS, &c.

A USEFUL HOLIDAY GIFT. PRINCE'S IMPROVED PROTEAN

FOUNTAIN PEN

Writes with one filling 12 hours. Call or send for realer to 2001N 8, PURDY, Manufacturer, Augusta Warrists. 202 Broadway, N. X.

Colorists and Commercial Institute (General Insuell's Scient), New Hants, Ct. Winds or thing and an in-WESTERN PARMS, City and Suburban Lute J. H. Hawacaster, 180% Deartorn St., Chicago

253 Feet Front-Iron and Glass.

WORKS OF THE

UNITED STATES WATCH COMPANY,

(GILES, WALES, & CO.), MARION, N. J.

GILES, WALES, & CO.,

IMPORTERS, MANUFACTURERS, and JOBBERS,

SALISMOOM United States Watch Company, 13 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers Watches, Pendant Winders and Key Winders, BOTH NICKEL AND PROSTED MOVEMENTS.

The finer grades all having three pairs Conteal Pivota, Cap Jeweled, in Gold Settings, and accurately adjusted to Heat, Cold, and Postnion; and all, even in the theapest grades, have the STRAIGHT-LINE Escapement, with Exposed Pallet Jewels, and Hardcood and Tempered Hale Springs; and for our late improvement in STEM-WINDING mechanism, we claim a STRENGTH, SIMPLICITY, and SMOOTHNESS hitherto mattained in any other manufacture, at home or abroad.

Constantly on head, full lines, all sizes, in Gold, Silver, Dismond Set, and Magic Cases, Minute Repeaters, Independent 1-4, 1-5 Split and Fly-back Seconds, for taking three different times.

For Price-Lines furnished the trade on application, enclosing business card. For sale by the trade generally.

Wholesale Warerooms, 13 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK, And GILES, BROTHER, & CO., 142 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

Water No. 1864 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherion & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me fit-teen months; its total variation from mean time being only one second per month. WILLARD DERBY, Of Derby, Snow, & Frentiss, Jersey City, N. J.

Waves No. 1124 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherton & Cu.," manufactured by the United States Watch Co., has been carried by me seven months; its total variation from mean time being only six seconds.

A. L. DENNIS, President N. J. R. R. T. & T. Co.

Waves No. 1331 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherton & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me four months: its total variation from mean time being only F. A. HASKELL, Con. Hudson River R. R.

Waren No. 1117 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherton & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me di-tern months: its total variation from mean time being only an average of two-thirds of a second per day. E. F. PHELPS, Con. N. J. Central E. R.

B. F. PHELPS, COR. N. J. Central R. R. Warten No. 1662 - bearing Trade-Mark "Prederic Atherton & Co., Marton, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me since June, 1861; its total variation from mean time being only five seconds per month HENRY SMITH, Trees. Panama R. R., 89 Wall St.

Waves No. 1993 — bearing Trade-Mark, "United States Watch Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me five months; its total variation from mean time being only twelve seconds. GRO. LOVES, Gerl Eastern Pass'gr Ag't Toledo, Wabash, & Western R. R.

Pass'gr Ag't Toledo, Wabash, & Western R. R.
Waren No. 1859 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atheron & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me six months; its total watchtion from mean time being only eight seconds per month. Have been traveling through different sections of the country, from New York to Galveston, Texas, and back, by steamer and railroad.

E. HiCE, of Whitney & Rice, 179 Broadway, N. Y.

Grown R. & Ad. 25, 250

SUBSTRUT, Pa., Peb. 26, 1869.

Waron No. 1116 — bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherton & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me three months; its total variation from mean time being only ive seconds during that time. HENRY DE LANCEY, Engineer Phila. & Erie R. R. WATCH No. 1166 - bearing Trade-Mark "Frederic Atherica & Co., Marion, N. J.," manufactured by United States Watch Co., has been carried by me elven months; its total variation from mean time being only seven seconds in the eatire time.

A. H. KING, I Park Place, N. Y.,
Vice-Frest Elastic Cone Spring Co., N. J. Car Spring and R. Co.

WATCHES manufactured by the UNITED STATES WATCH CO., Of MARION, N.J., retailed and sent C.O.D. to any part of the country, by C. A. STEVENS & CO., Jewelers, 40 East 14th Bireet, Union Square, New York.

DO NOT BE

buying a Comercian Present for your friends and children until you have seen the

Lozo Pendulum Board,

which is the best Paulon Game Boans ever invested, being only 1% feet long and 18 inches wide. It is lined with the finest billiard cioth, and contains a combination of four popular and fascinating games,

BAGATELLE, TEN PINS, and RING TOSS. POCKETS.

We invite every body to call at our salesroom and examine it. If you can't come yourself, write to some friend in New York asking them to call. Send for a descriptive catalogue and price-list. It can be sent to any part of the United States before the Holidays.

NOVELTY GAME CO., 14 MURRAY ST., New York.

THE SUEZ CANAL a commercial point can best be appreciated by a reference to the Financial Glosses, 12, 36, and 34 inches in diameter.

H. H. NIMS & CO., Troy, N. W. Sold at $12 Broadway, New York.

Holiday Goods

REAL VALUE,

UNION ADAMS & CO.

PATENT MERINO VESTS.
PATENT MERINO DRAWERS.
PINE WOOL VESTS.
SCARLET CASHMERE VESTS.

CASHMERE AND CLOTE GLOVES, CALP AND SUCK GLOVES, EID AND DOGSKIN GLOVES, CASTOE AND WOOL GLOVES, EID AND CALP MITTENS.

BALMORAL STOCKINGS.
PATENT MERINO BOSIE
PINE WOOL STOCKINGS.
BLACK AND FANCY BO
CASSIMERE STOCKINGS. HOSLERY. HOSE.

BUIRTS, GOLLARS, CUFFS. TIES, STOCKS, SCARFS. SUSTENDERS, ELASTICS. HOBES DE CHAMBRE. UMBRELLAS, CANES.

An Extensive and Superior Variety of

EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

No. 637 Broadway.

THE NURSERY. 1870. The best, chempest, and most richly ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN. $100 a year, in solvance. Sample number, 10 cents. Subscribe new, and get the last number of 1669 FREE Address. Address JOHN L SHOREY, 13 Washington St., Boston.

RENEW!! RENEW!! Bither Happing R Werry, Mostray, or Basas, 84, and Tox Passas, 50, and Tox Passas, 51, U.S. J. V. Link, 52, Professy, New York,

Eight per Cent. Gold

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

OF THE ISSUE OF

$1,500,000

ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD CO.,

in denominations of $1000 and $500, bearing Eight per Cent, per annum interest, payable in Gold on the 10th of February and Angust, in each year, in New York, London, or Frankfort-on-the-Main, at the holder's option, free of U. S. Taxes. The interest for six mouths on $2000 Bond is payable as follows:

On a $500 Bond, one half these amounts, respect-Ively.

These Bonds have thirty years to run from Angust 15, 1800, payable at maturity, in Gold, in the City of New York; are Coupon Bonds, but can be registered, or converted listo Registered Bonds.

They are secured by a first and only mortgage on lift miles of the Company's Road, from St. Joseph, Mo., to Marywille, Kanass, known as the Eastern Division of the Company's main line, which runs from St. Joseph to Fort Kenrary, on the Union Purific Road, including the Company's equipments, rolling stock now owned or hereafter possessed, rights of way, franchises, real estate, and personal property in Doniphan, Brown, Nemaha, and Marshall Counties, Kanssa, now owned or which the Company may acquire by reason owned or which the Company may acquire by resson of the extension of their line to the City of Marye-wille. This mortgage is executed to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company as Trustees. At the same time, the whole issue of $1,500,000 Bonds have been executed by the Railroad Company, placed in the custody of the Trustees, who have absolute possession, and concely issue there, or their proceeds, in accordance with the terms of the Mortgage Deed, which is upon a completed roof, and then only at the rate of $12,000 per mile.

Bonds, to be valid, must be countersigned by the mile.

Bonds, to be valid, must be countersigned by the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

The rate per sufac of a completed read, which is morigaged to secure these Bonds at their par value, is $1.3,6.00, while the actual cost of construction and equipment is more than double this amount.

This line is mainly the extension of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad, with its connections North and East, and the St. Louis and St. Joseph Rail cod, with its connections South and East, both lines . neering at 8t. Joseph and connecting at once with the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad, running West, through Eastern Eastess, into the heart of Nebrasia, where it connects with the Union Pacific Railroad at the City of Fort Kearney, making the shortest route knewn to California and the Pacific States.

The Company's Capital Stock is $10,000,000, to which nearly $2,000,000 is subscribed and paid up by local subscriptions, which amount has been and is being expended on the road. The Company have 1,600,000 acres of superior lands, immediately adjoining the line, which was a grant from the United States Oversment, the alternate sections of which are selling to $7.50 per acre, cash. At this low price, the Company have an asset of value in Lands.

Lands...... $4,000,000 First Mortgage Bonds...... 1,500,000 Capital Stock...... 10,000,000 Total Resources $15,500,000 Total Length of Read 271 Miles.

While the only debt against the Company is this issue of First Mortgage Bonds, amounting to $1,806,000—all

A large portion of the road West from St. Joseph is how in successful operation, showing earnings, per mile, sufficient to meet the interest liabilities on this

A Branch Company is building a line from this road to the Kaness Pacific Road, thereby giving a direct Totale to Benyer City.

We are authorized to effect these Eight per Cent First Mortgage Bonds at 97% and accrued inherest in currency, with the reserved right to advance the price without notice. Famphiets, maps, and information furnished on application.

Bonds are and not harks received free of express

Bonds sent and packages received free of express charges, and marketable securities converted without commission, to parties investing in these Bonds.

W. P. CONVERSE & CO.,

. Commercial Agenta, 54 Pine Street, New York.

TANNER & CO.,

Piecal Agents, 49 Wall Street, New York.

Having had all the papers and documents relating to the loan examined by competent counsel and pronounced complete and sufficient, and having personally examined the same, which we find regular and perfect, and having had our own engineers examine the road and property, whose reports are satisfactory, we do, with the utmost confidence and satisfaction, recommend the EIGHT PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE GOLD BONDS OF THE ST. JOSÉPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY as A SAFE, SURE, AND PROFITABLE IN-VESTMENT, worthy the attention of capitalists, investors, and others.

W. P. CONVERSE & CO. TANNER & CO.

s. W. GEERY,

DEPORTER,
Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Teas, Wines, Cipara, and CHOICE FAMILY GROCKEIES, Formerly I. & W. Geery, Established in 1894. No. 119 Beendway, Kew York.

Established in 1894. Kew York.
The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has been the special business of this house for years.
My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquors in
the country.
Constantly on hand, a full assertment of every thing appertaining to the Geostry Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Orders will be called for (in the city) every morning, if desired.
Geods shipped to all parts of the country.

Keep the Circulation Active.

A free and regular circulation of the blood is essen-tial to health. It places the whole system in a state of active defense against all unwholesome inducators, and is an especial safeguard against the inimical effect of sudden changes of temperature, and of damp and

If proper attention were paid to this important fact, there would not only be a great decrease in the num-ber of cases of stomach, bowel, and renal completets, but also in the number of deaths by consumption and or the pulmonary diseases.

At this period of the year, when the dividing line which separates a genial from an incisment season has just been passed, a course of

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS

will be found of invaluable service in improving the condition of the vital field and goatly attendeding its flow. Violent coughs and colds, like intermittent fever, are the frequent effects of a chilly atmosphere upon a debilitated organization. Diseases of the kidneys often pruceed from the same course. How easential it is, therefore, for persons of feeble constitution to invigorate the vital organization at the commencement of Winter. Fortified by warm dothing without, and within, the full and deficate may beave with impunity an amount of exposure and hardship which, under other circumstances, would prostrate them on a bed of strimess. Let them consider this and be wise in Two Delightful New Music Books FOR HOLIDAY PRESENTS. Piano-forte Gems.

HOSTETTER'S BITTERS

A New Collection of the latest favorite NOCTURNES, WALTZES, POLKAS, MARCHES, SCHOTTISCHES, REDOWAS, POUR HAND PIECES, QUADRILLES, &c., just lated in one book complete.

THE WREATH OF GEMS.

A New Collection of the most popular SONGS, BALLADS, and DUETS of the day, with an account, for the Pinnoderts, Price of each, Boards, $3 80; Cloth, $4 80; Cloth, Full Gill, $4 80. Sent, postpari, on receipt of price. DFFSON & CO., Full-linkers, ST Washington St., Boston; 71 Broadway, New York.

Just Publisher: CHRISTMAS CAROLS, Old and New. Rimeteen Carols from the German and English. 50 cents.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING! Novelty Job Printing-Press.

Novelly Job Printing Press.

The only Low-Priced Press ever invented that will do good printing. Printing on the date of the printing of the date of the printing of the date of the date

CATARRH.

RELIEF AT ONCE !-- A PERFECT CURE! MORTON'S NEW REMEDY FOR CATARRE

AND MODE OF TREATM NY
Is an improvement, and a perfection never before attained. It constate of the alternated inhalation of harmless liquids—they are palaises, deening, deedertring, soothing, and powerful curatives. Hallef and condort follow from the first day's use, and a permanest ture in due course of time. It posternates through the absorbents to the very seat of the disease—breaks it up at its fountain band—tentoves all the wretched symptoms, such as pain in the temples, tokes in the head, obstruction of the sir passages, oftendive diecharges from the nostrile, and dropping of menus into the throat, "cold in the head," smearing, disripose, loss of seemory, dimness of vision, and restores the sense of taste and smell. It literally extinguishes this loathsome makedy in all its forms forever, and curse the meet hopeless care known. Send a Stamp for Pumpilet to GERRIT NORTON, office ill Ann St., N. Y.

NETUMAN A. C.A. P.D.O.N. S. AND MODE OF TREATM NT

NEWMAN & CAPRON'S

Retablishment for the sale of

HOUSE FURNISHING

Goods and Plated Ware, in great variety, is still lo-cated at 1172 Broadway, cor. 88th Street.

Also, Bulldere' Hardware, Locks, Electro-Broased and Flaind Work of their own manufacture. Old household articles requiring Replating done on short spitter. They are also prepared to contract for Bell Work and Speaking Tubes in Hotals and Frivals Dwellings.

A GREAT OFFER.

HORACE WATERS, No. 481 Broadway, N.Y., will dispose of One Hundred Pianos, Melodeons, and Organs, of dix first-class makers, at extremely low prices for Cash during the Holidays, or will take from $5 to $50 monthly until paid; the same to let, and rest money applied if purchased. New 1-Octave Pianos for $65 and upward; New Organs for $65 and upward, for cash.

$1 00.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

- PRACTICAL JOURNAL,

especially devoted to the interests of the AMERICAN HOUSEWIFE.

Articles, by Experienced Housekeepers, upon all matters pertaining to Home Life and Bomestic Economy.

This popular MONTHILY has recently been enlarged to twenty-four pages, quarto size, and no pains will be spared to make it the BEST FAMILY JOURNAL IN THE COUNTRY.

He departments include the Versada, the Drawing-Room, the Drawing-Room, the Library, the Conserva-tory, the Nursery, the Dispensary, the Kitchen, the Dising-Room, and the Parler, with practical bints and suggestions appropriate to each.

ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR. d Stone for Specimen Copy. GEO. R. CROWELL, Brattlebore, Vt. Address

M USEC for HOLEBAY GEFTS.—Boserviy bond, striable for presentation. Beatheren's Separative bond, striable for presentation. Beatheren's Bonatas, complete, $1; The Operatic Album, containing 199 gross from the principal Operas, $8; Monart's Bonatas, complete, $1; The Operatic Album, containing 199 gross from the principal Operas, $8; Deswing-Rosen Music-Book, $8; Christmass Edition of the Messiah, $3; Merchelscohn's Bongs Without Words, complete, $1; Chopis's Masurkas and Valees, complete, $6 each; Schumsnari Album for the Young, $1; $2; Hall-Bone Music-Book (16 Banasa), $2; The Old Bengs of Ireland (86 Bengs), $8; The German Song, $8 each; $8 loges, $8; Opera Book (86 Songs), $2; Opera Book (96 Songs), $2; English Bollad-Book (10 Bengs), $2; Italiand Bong-Book (96 Bengs), $2; Complete Songs, $2; English Bollad-Book (10 Bengs), $2; Italiand Bong-Book (96 Bengs), $2; Complete Operas, Costories, and large collections of Vocal and Plano-forts Music, in Books, $0 cts, each, Also, Just Carady, free to any address, Booksy & Co. 's Carantours or mann newser reputations, in full sheet or music-size form. BOOGEY & CO., 644 Broadway, N. Y.

"A BLAZE of BEAUTY."-1870.

THE JANUARY NUMBER of the PICTORIAL PHRENOLOGICAL FOURNAL appears in bright ar-ray. A new form, new types, numerous rich illustra-tions, with sound and sensible reading-matter, reader this the best ever issued.

This favorite JOURNAL has now reached its 80th Vol., and appears in the usual magazine form. We think it will prove even more popular than ever before. Terms, only $2 a year. So cents a No. Newsman have it. Now is the time to subscribe for 1830, Address S. R. WELLS, 500 Broadway, N. Y.

AGENTS!-OUR NEW PICTORIAL FAMILY BIBLE

PICTORIAL PAMILY BIBLE
THE MOST | Contains more than 1000 larger FOPULAR AND PROPITABLE
OF ALL
BOOKS. | The contains more than 1000 larger Frofathle Reading of Scripbres, numerous valuable Tables, &c., a bassiful Family Record and Family Alburs, &c., &c.
The best adjust for Assertical true propositions is the best of all Family Bibles. Secrat large additions edd to five months. For Chronians and full particulars, address JOHN R. FOT Chronians and full particulars and the contained full particulars and full particulars.

The SANA BANA BATTA STEEL AND TO SHOULD BE STATE.

The chapped, encourse, and best New York newspaper.
Everybody likes id. Drue editioner Datat, 661; SteenWerrary, 862; and Wenny, 87 a year, All Tup Naws at indepelse. Full reports of markets, agriculture, frameror ged Freil Germen' Chich, and a complete dary in every Weskly and Sanah Weskly symbor. A present of valuable plants and vitins to severy subscribed indicamentation to conpancy structures. State Labs insercations, Green's Farnis, Novine Machines, Furlay Organis, Seving Machines, Ren' Entire the presentants. Specimens and Like from Send a Solder and by E. Smill the president. Speciment and non-line smill being the line of the line o "R is a most calcable paper."

his testimony is given by the Jeonewan of the New is State Agricultural Society, in favor of the NEW ENGLAND FARMER. Give it a trial, and you will be likely to concur in Tunes: Weekly, $2 50; Monthly, $1 50, per year. Send stamp for specimens and premium list. R. P. EATON & CO., Boston Mass.

1870 THE NURSERY, the best, cheapest, and MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN. $150 a year, it advance. Sample number I could historife see, and get the last two numbers of this year FREE. Address of JOHN I. SHOREY, 18 Washington St., Boston.

"YOU CAN DO NO BETTER." SO SATS THE "MEXICO SEACON" OF THE

NEW YORK OBSERVER.

SAMPLE COPIES FREE. SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO., St Page How, New York.

A HANDSOME PULL-GILT Photograph Al-bum, holding 10 full-size pictures, mailed, post-paid, for 20 cts.; 5 for $1: $5 55 per desent. Circulars free. Address C. SEYMOUL. II-Bank V.Y.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED POS

PRIEST and NUN.

Apply at once to CRITTENDEN & McKINNEY, 1806 Chestout St., Philadelphia, Pa.

LAME HOHSES, Contracted feet permanent.

Ly yeared. Come, Spring Knees, Threat, and all diseases arising from contraction. Every horse-contraction to the force this secret, $25,000 paid by the War Dep't. Used with great success for more than five years. Encommended and practiced by the war estimated horsement to the country. Enclose $1 to R. B. YOUATT, Drawer Std. Enfalo, N. Y.

A GENTS can make $500 per month by selling our Silver-Paring Phold. $2 per doses. RICHMOND & HOSTER, Senece Palls, N. Y.

. STEWART & CO.

ARE NOW OFFERING

A MAGNIFICENT ASSORTMENT OF India Camel's · Hair Shawls, LONG AND SQUARE,

SCARFS, NECKTIES, &c.,

AT PRICES LOWER THAN SIMILAR QUALITIES WERE SOLD PREVIOUS TO THE SUSPENSION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

BROADWAY, 4TH AVE.; AND 10TH ST.

STEWART &

WILL OFFER.

During the remainder of this mouth

EXTRAORDINARY BARGAINS IN ALL THE DEPARTMENTS OF

THEIR RETAIL ESTABLISHMENT, The prices of which have had the personal espervision of our

MR. STEWART: and they will, on examination BE FOUND TO OFFER UNUSUAL ATTRAC-TIONS TO PURCHASERS. BROADWAY, 4TH AVE., AND 10TH ST.

vick's

The Function of One Hugerson and Tweety Thomason copies of Vick's Hilmstrated Catalogue of Seeds and Floral Guide is published and ready to seed out. It is elegantly printed on fine timed paper, with about 200 fine two Knarper of Flowers and Vegetables, and a beautiful Plane — consisting of seven varieties of remmondii, making a fine

FLORAL GUIDE FOR 1870.

BOUQUET OF PHLOXES.

It is the most beautiful as well as the most instructive Floral Guide published, giving plain and thorough directions for the CULTURE OF FLOWERS AND VEGETABLES.

The Floral Guide is published for the benefit of my castomers, to whom it is sent free without applica-tion, but will be forwarded to all who apply by mail, for Tax Cuern, which is not balf the cost.

JAMES VICK. Rochester, N.Y.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane. New York, The above goods comprise one of the largest va-riaties to be found in the city, and see offered at Low Prices.

to Sign of Gold Telegraph. ...

TO THE WORKING CLASS.—We are now prepared to fea-phel all causes with constant complexyment at house, the whole of the time or for the space moments. Business new, light and profession. Ferross of elither are result over from Ma. 50 ft ippor-ervating, and a proportional seas by foreign their which time to the humanes. Boys and girls earn proofs as reach as new. That all who are this notice may send their address, and to tenthe haginess, we make this engagnetical other. To such as are red

Carbolic Salve.

Prepared with Carbolic Acid, which is used in Hospitals, by direction of Physicians of most eminent standing every where. Possesses the most recovered. 25 cts. per Box. John F. Hen-ry, Proprietor, 8 College Place, N. Y.

For Family age simple, cheap, reliable. Enits every thing. AGENTS WANTED. Circular and sample stocking PREE. Address BINKLEY ENITTING MACHINE CO., Beth, Me., or 174 Broadway, N. Y.

PERFUMERY,

FLAVORING EXTRACTS, and TOLLET SOAPS. C. B. WOODWORVE & SON, Rechaster, N.Y. S. F. Office: 236 Broadway, Rosen 18.

OPIUM EATERS. The most hopeless cases cared. Send for a Circular. Address WM. F. PARISH & CO., Anacostia, D. C.

CURL YOUR HAIR! A BOTTLE of MAGNETIC CURLIQUE seat FREE, It corts straight had to be southful corts on Tax France Appropriate. Address, with Stemp.

PROF. BYRON, GARRETTSVILLE, ORIG.

BOOKS FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

PERSONALD BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

GF Sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of price.

OLD TESTAMENT SHADOWS OF NEW TESTA-MENT TRUTHS. By Lyman Amery, Author of "Jeens of Nearseth: his Life and Teaching," Ac. Beautifully literated from Designs by Dorb, Debr rocks, Durham, and Parsons. Elegandy printed on 10004 paper. Svo. Cloth, Brysiad Edges, $5 001; Gift Edges, $5 50.

Gill Edges, $5 50.

PAVORITE ENGLISH POEMS. With $80 elegant limitrations. Src. Clock, Gilt Edges, $5 50.

DU CHAILLUS THREE JUVENILE WORKS. Illustrated. 1800. Cloth, $5 75 each.

Lear in the Junese. With Life Under A. Stoners.

With Life Under the Edgester.

Stoners of the Gorman County.

Wite Live there were Reviews.

Sevens or visit General Convex.

THE FOLLAR WORLD: a Popular Description of Man and Nature to the Arctic and Antarctic Regions of the Globe. By Dr. G. Harrway, Author of The Sea and its Living Wonders," "The Harmonies of Natures," and "The Tropical World." With Additional Chapters and 193 Historisticus. Svo. Gloth, Beveled Edges, $3 73.

WILD SPORTS OF THE WORLD: a Book of Natural History and Advectors. By James Grazzwoots, Author of "The Adventures of Henton Davidges," "The True History of a Little Regrammin," "The Seven Cores of London," &c. With 141 Bleatrations. Crown Svo. Cloth, $5 56.

THE FIGTORIAL FIELD BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1813; or, Binstrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Escapeny, Beliez, and Traditions of the Revolution." With 162 Historial Field Book of the Revolution." With 162 Historial Field Book of the Revolution." With 162 Historials, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Barrite, chieff from Original Sketches by the Amber. Complete is One Volume, 1984 pages, Large Svo. Price, in Cioth, $1 69; Sheches by the Amber. Complete is One Volume, 1984 pages, Large Svo. Price, in Cioth, $1 69; Sheches by the Amber. Complete is One Volume, 1984 pages, Large Svo. Price, in Cioth, $1 69; Sheches by the Amber. Complete is One Volume, 1984 pages, Large Svo. Price, in Cioth, $1 69; Sheches by the Amber. Complete is Gone Volume, 1984 pages, Large Svo. Price, in Cioth, $1 69; Sheches and Kandered gages. En-

MISS MULOCK'S FAIRT BOOK. The Best Popular Pairy Stories Selected and Rendered answ. En-gravings. 16ms, Cloth, $150.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1870.

the Werkly or Bakas, to propay the United States poetage.

The Volumes of the Macazuku commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. But-actipitions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and beck Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Werkly and Bakas commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next effect the receipt of his order. In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Deaft payable to the order of Bakasea & Bacouran is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order of Deaft be lost or stoken, it can be renewed without loss to the sempler.

These for Advantages of Harren's Passonicals.

Harper's Macarina.—Whole Page, $250; Half Page, $125; Quarter Page, $70—act insertion; or, for a less space, $1 30 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weelst.—Joside Pages, $1 00 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each Insertion.

Harper's Harar.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 30 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER,

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much line and expense. Circulars containing fail information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free or application. Specimen-books of types, cuts, becelers, &c., &c., 10 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 68 Murray Street, New York. THE Soulty Job Printing Press, for Printers, Mer-Chants, & Amsteure, Prices, $15, $30, $350. Send for descriptive drealer, C. C. Thurston, Brooklyn, N. Y.

COLD! GOLD!—Ny golden Compound will Gore the beard to grow on the emorthest face in it days. Scalinfaction gives or money refunded. Seat free for 50 cents a parkage. Address E. H. COLVIR, Hadiey Station, Illinois.

Erysipelas, Salt-Rheum, Piles, and all dis-acts of the Blood and Skin curet by using the SHELDON SPRING WATER. ok of thirty pages, with certificates, sept free.

HORRIBLE: —I suffered with CATARREI Thirty Years — was cired in six weeks by a somple remedy, and will send the recelp, postage free, to all afflicted. Address Rev. T. J. BEAD, Drawer 116, Syncoss, New York.

H OWE'S Never-Falling Agus Cure and Ponte Sitters, Heav's Concentrated Syrup cures terrible discoun-incipient Consumption, Cataoria, Cancer, &c., every pine, $1 each, C. E. Hown, M.D., Stenera Falls, N. Y.

E UREEK A! Blockes and Emptions on the face permanently cured to one day. No paintle on powder in a humbar; I Address (neptioning No cente and stamp) JAN SMITH, Ja., Box 61, Charlestown, Mass. WAS cured of Deafness and Catarrh by a simple remedy, and will send the receipt free. Mas. M. C. LEGGETT, Hoboken, N. J.

VINEGAR.— HOW MADE FROM CIDER, 10 hours, without noing drugs. For circulars, address F. I. BAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Comp.

A PORTUNE made in from 6 to 19 mouths by any one. Address.

Chillicothe, Livingston Co., Missouri.

TOYS for THE HOLIDAYS, at and Toy Beasar, 475 Broadway, between Grand and Broome Streets.

LEWIS P. TIBBALS.

$20 A DAY! Business new. Samples and Circu-$290 for first-class new 7-Octave Planes.

A HAIR-BREADTH ESCAPE.

GENTLEMAN (to Lody fulling through the Ice). "It is fortunate for you, Miss, that you have your Own Hair!"

A NEW DISCOVERY!! PHALON

For Restoring to Grow Hair its Original Color

Salvation for the Hair.

PHALON'S "VITAMA" differs utterly from all the "dyes," "colorers," and "restorers" (Y) in use. It acts on a totally different principle. It is limpid, fragrant, and perfectly innocuous, precipitates no muddy or flactulent matter, requires no shaking up, and communicates no tain to the skin or the liner. No paper curtain is necessary to conceal its turbid appearance, for the simple reason that it is not turbia. It is, to all intents and purposes, A NEW DISCOVERY in Toiler Chemistry.

Pharen's "VITALIA" is warranted to effect a change in the color of the hair within 10 days after the first applica-tion, the directions being carefully observed

IT IS AS CLEAR AS WATER! AND WAS NO SEDIMENT.

Price, One Dollar per Box, CONTAINING TWO BOTTLES.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

If your Druggis has not "Vitalia" on hand write, enclosing $1.00 and we will forward it immediately.

> PHALON & SON, 517 Broadway, N. Y.

517 Breadway, N. Y.

MAGIC LANTERNS, for Senday-Schools, Public ExMagic Lanterns, for Senday-Schools, Public Exleginas and frace MicRoscopes, are Entertainments. Eff Cataleginas and frace MicRoscopes, for Scientific and Papeller Investigations. Eff Fries List sent frac.

T. H. Moallister, Optician, 40 Nacsan St., N. Y.

Wall. Send for Circular & Price-List. P.O. Box 578.

C. G. Gunther's Sons,

502-504 BROADWAY,

Offer a Fresh Assortment of

ASTRAKHAN SEAL AND SACQUES,

TURBANS.

Boas, Ties, &c., AT REDUCED PRICES.

WEBB'S ADDER.

ONLY PRACTICAL ADDING MACHINE IN THE WORLD.

THE WORLD.

This little machine, no less wonderful in its simplicity than in its efficacy, has won a more apendy access than any other invention of the day. While the sewing machine had to straggle through long years for adoption, Weble's Adding Machine was accepted at once. Where numbers are called off, it gives instanceous additions. It carries up the columns of a ladger account, two at a time, with mechanical securacy. The President of the First National Bank of New York writes in his testimonial, "IT Rightevies THE MIND ENVIRELY, AND REDUCES ARITHMETIC TO A SMPLE MOTION OF THE HAND!" The machine took the first medule and diploma at the last American Institute Pair, New York, and also at the last Mass. State Pair, in Boston. It is generated to do every thing claimed for it, and the report course from nearly all who use it that not except 6 claims—that it does more. Frice $5 and $25. Sent by mail our receipt of pice and postage (5) coult, or by express, C.O.D., at the customer's expense. To remit (post-office order, registered letter, or draft) seventhe return-motory closes. For circular, testimonials, &c., codess stamp. Sales and Comity Rights (eached) for sale.—WEBS ADDING MACHINE CO. E.P. DUTTON & CO., Selling Agents, E P. DUTTON & CO., Selling Agents, 713 Broadway, New York.

"PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

(Patented Jone 2, 1869.)

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the ad-attages of the French patents, with wonderful DURABILITY,

and CHEAPNESS.

Lovers of GOOD COFFEE are unminous in its

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO.,

Wallingford, Conn. Sample and Sales Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

Musical Boxes

The largest and oldest depot in America. Fresh Novellies by marry every Steamer. Pine Supply of Fancy Goods, Swiss Carved Goods, Pine Gold and Silver Watches. M. J. PAILLARD & CO., 489 BROADWAY, N.Y.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Planos is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Plane is of the best quality and of ther-oughly seasoned materials,

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS. 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Serre & Nixos, Chicago, Illa: H. N. Hany-sran, Milwankee, Wis.: Louis Taire, Louisville, Ky.: J. A. McChuar, Nashville, Tenn.: Kuscher, Bros., St. Louis, Ma.: C. M. Mence, Cincinnati, Ohio: J. R. Jacusco, Sandrasky, Ohio: Brankard & Soss, Cleve-land, Ohio: H. D. Mcasos, Zanezville, Ohio: J. E. Goute, Philadelphia, Pa.: C. Bucke, Pittsburgh, Pa.: C. Bucker, Milledock, N. V.: Phys. Scratter, Pa.: Catter & Soss, Albuny and Troy, N. Y.: J. T. Hannes, Elizabeck, N. V.: E. B. Fowerl, Scrainfon, Pa.: Clerry & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Harrick, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; H. S. Macare, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Utley, Buffalo, N. Y.; Resessivos & Howe, Syracuse, N. Y.; White, Swith, & Perry, Boston, Mark.; Corry Bros., Providence, R. I.; C. M. Loome, New Hoven, Coin.; Mar-thus Gray, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordeniner, Toronto, C. W.; E. Perre & Bros., St. John, N. B.

BISHOP & REIN,

JEWELERS, Under Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York.

DIAMONDS, EMERALDS, PEARLS, CAMEOS, Roman, Florentine, and Symantine

MOSAICS.

and other FINE JEWELRY and SILVERWARE. WATCHES of all the principal makers. Sele Arouts of M. F. Dent & Cu. (Walchmakers to the Queco), 33 Cwkapur Street, London. We call particular attestion to our face asserting at of CORAL JEWELRY.

REAL BRONZES.

JUST OPENED.

JOSEPH RODGERS & SON'S

ENGLISH TABLE CUTLERY.

MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO.'s

SILVER-PLATED GOODS.

HOLIDAY GOODS

NOW READY.

ALL AT EXTREMELY LOW PRICES.

Davis Collamore & Co.

No. 747 BROADWAY, Fire doors below Eighth-through to Mercer St.

The Advance.

Of which Bev. Heary Ward Beecher says: "I regard it as standing fairly on the highest ground yet reached by Religious intropoparts in Asserting," and which Br. Hornce Bushnell prenounces "One of the oblest, best, and nost outgoden Religious journals published," is clubbed with

Harper's Weekly,

Harper's Mosthly, or Barper's Busse, at $5.00 per year, making the ADVANON, whose regular subscription price is $5.50, cost only One Bolfar to those who are about to renew their subscription to either of the Barper periodicals. This is an excellent and invaperative opportunity to make the ocquaintance of this hold and aggressive, yet penial and judicious religious family journal, published at the metropolis of the Interior. For both periodicals, at club rates, or for sample copies of the Advance Company,

THE ADVANCE COMPANY,

St Lombard Block, Chicogo.

AT LOW PRICES. A Large Assortment of ROBES DE CHAMBRE and HOUSE COATS,

For HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

E. A. NEWELL, 727 Broadway, Cor. Waverly Place,

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This one Bell, located in the last sleeping-room, rings upon the opening of each window and Thomsonds who are using it be-send for a Pumphlet. E. HOLMES, I Storeay St., N. Y.

$20 A DAY to MALE AND FEMALE Agents to introduce the BUCKEYE SO SHUTTLE SEWING MACHINES. Sittch take on both sides, and is the only LICENSED SHUTTLE MACHINE sold in the United States for less than $40. All others are infringements, and the seller and user are liable to prosecution and imprisuments. Orthy Page. Address W. A. HENDERSON & CO., Cleveland, O.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING.

MANUFACTURED BY WM. E. HOOPER & SONS,

Baltimore, Md. ## Send for Price-List.] A GENTS. OROIDE GOLD. AGENTS.

A $500 day made easy. Oncore Good Par. Forestank Pas. Is indestructible. Writer 4 pages with one dip. Soft of sight—looks like 16-carst Golf. Sample box, 12 pers, for 25 cents, postpaid: also other novelties. Curr Novemby Co., 404 Library St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Ahearn's Patents.

Purchasers wanted for every State and County not yet sold. $1000 and expenses can be made monthly on every $200 invested. For particulars, address J. AHEARN, 5 P. O. Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

E DWARD SEARS' ENGRAVING ESTABLISHMENT, 40 BEESMAN STREET, New York.

NEW GOODS NOW OPENING PROM

PARIS, LONDON, AND BOHEMIA.

Gilt-Mounted Vases and Jardinieres. GILT AND BRONZE CLOCKS, FIGURES, &c. JEWEL-CASES, BONBONNIERES, TABLES, &c.

BACK DECORATEM CHINA DINNER AND DESSERT SETS,

VERY CHEAP. SILVER-PLATED WARE, EXTRA QUALITY.

CHANDELIERS AND GAS-FIXTURES

from OSLER, London, and of our own manufacture. AGENTS FOR ROGERS' GROUPS.

E. V. HAUGHWOUT & CO., 488, 490, and 492 BROADWAY, corner Broome St.

ALTHOF, BERGMANN,

30, 32, 34, & 36 PARK PLACE, (Corner of Church Street), NEW YORK,

AT RETAIL, for Five Days only, from the 20th until the 96th of December, their epien-did and most attractive stock of

FANCY GOODS.

THE INGLE-SIDE GAMES

till be ready on the 15th inst. THE CROWN, PYX, LUTTE.

These charming Games on One Board, for 2, 3, or 4 players. Prion (complete), $5. The Rules and Description of the Games sent postage free. Address CHAS. RICHARDSON, care of Kunn & Co., Dealer in Games and Floe Hollday Gifts, 633 Broadway, N. Y.

CATALOGUES, by Mail, 10 cents each. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 111 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 71 pages.
MAGIC LANTERNS and STREEOPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 54 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 224 Chestant St., Philodelphia, Pa.

A Holiday Present. Pollak & See manufacture warranted Gen-nine Mecrechaum Goods. Stores: 19 Broadway, St. Nichelas Rottel, & 97 John St., middle of block. Send for circular to Letter-Box 5846. Also, Repairing and Boiling dome.

HOLIDAY PRESENTS.

Save money in buying Chromos, by going up states. E. & H. T. ANTHONY & CO., 531 Broadway, oppos-cine Metropolitan Burd. STEREOSCOPES, VIEWS, ALBUNS, FRAMES.

H UDSON RIVER INSTITUTE and Clav-ereck College. Term opens December 97th. Brv. ALONZO FLACE, A.M., Procision. Claverack, N., Y.

本 大河南南湖 海儿 海獺 一座水社

